WARM WELCOME EXTENDED NEWFOUNDLAND

CANADA'S 10TH PROVINCE—From today Canadian students will be taught the Dominion comprises 10 provinces. Clarence Decatur, Ottawa and St. John's mark the entry into confederation of Newfoundland, Canada's oldest colony. Canada's area will be extended by 153,000 square miles and 320,000 people will be added to the roll of Canadian citizens. Discovered in 1497 by John Cabot, the main resources of the island are fish, pulpwood and minerals. St. John's, the capital, is the oldest city in North America. Corner Brook, (Major Pulp and Paper Co.) is important on the west coast. Two of the world's largest airfields, Goose Bay in Labrador and Gander in Newfoundland are two more assets Canada will gain from the union. (CP Photo)

A-BOMB PREVENTS RED ONSLAUGHT SAYS CHURCHILL

Claims 13 in Kremlin Plotting World Rule

Boston, April 1 (CP)—Doughty old Winston Churchill Thursday night thrust out his bulldog jaw and told the world that:

"Europe would have been overrun by the Communists, Czechoslovakia, and London under bombardment some time ago but for the deployment of the atomic bomb in the hands of the United States."

But, he said, "war is not inevitable."

Speaking of the "war of nerves" he advised the Massachusetts Institute of Technology's mid-century convocation:

"If we persevere steadfastly together, and allow no appeasement of tyranny and wrong-doing in any form, we may be sure our nerve or the structure of our civilization which will break—something else will break, and peace may yet be preserved."

Reaction to the speech was slow, but the first British newspapers to comment called the speech "a warning for peace" and "remarkable."

These comments came from three Conservative British newspapers, the Daily Telegraph, the London Daily Mail, and The Daily Telegraph.

RCAF Marks 25th Birthday, Pushes Its First Peacetime Offensive Establishments

Ottawa, April 1 (CP)—Canada's Junior service, which is 22 years old today—April 1—celebrates its silver anniversary pushing ahead with its first peacetime offensive establishments.

No special ceremonies are planned to mark the anniversary, but the RCAF already has its birthday present—recognition in this year's estimates as the most important arm of the Canadian forces.

This year, for the first time in history, the appropriation for the air force is larger than for either the navy or army, at $169,-347,677; compared with $103,815,-549 last year. In comparison, the army appropriation is $147,707,-231 against $101,161,273 last year, and the navy $32,180,556 against $25,146,356.

It's a big step forward from the 300-man force which constituted the R.C.A.F. when it was officially formed April 1, 1924, or from the 5,000-man "air force" with which Canada entered the war in September, 1939.

Today, the junior service has formed its first offensive unit—not an interceptor fighter squadron as in wartime but still training at St. Hubert, Que. Before the year is out, a second such squadron will be formed, to stand as Canada's first line of defence in an emergency.

Initial units will be stationed permanently in eastern Canada, possibly at Bagotville and Mont Joli, Que.

Other operational flying units formed or planned for the near future include a fighter-bomber squadron now training at Rivers, Man., one Maritime squadron, two transport squadrons, one communication squadron, three photo survey squadrons, and an air observation post squadron.

Apart from the 14,300 active force personnel now in the regular, an important factor in the possible expansion in an emergency is the auxiliary air force, which now comprises 1,232 men, with 10 squadrons.

Proud of being the junior service, the R.C.A.F. is still young enough to include in its ranks the 20-year-old "Aviation"—Air Vice Marshal K. M. Guthrie, retiring head of North West Air Command at Edmonton; Air Vice Marshal C. H. Slemon, air member for Operations and Training; Air Commodore D. E. MacKell, air member for Personnel; Group Capt. A. D. Adams, in charge of Logistic Planning at headquarters, and Wing Cmdr. A. H. Warner, Staff Engineering Officer at Edmonton.

NON-CONFIDENCE VOTE ON BUDGET WILL BE CALLED

P.C's and C.C.F. Party Belabor Government

Ottawa, April 1 —(CP) — The C.C.F. and Progressive Conservative parties, belaboring the 1949-50 budget, called on the Commons Thursday to declare non-confidence in the government. They both placed want-of-confidence motions on the record.

The third major party in the Chamber — the Social Credit group — joined in criticizing the government for alleged failure to provide tax relief for the farmers and the poor and declared its intention of supporting the C.C.F. motion.

The two motions will not come up for discussion until the week ends, probably after the Easter recess.

The Progressive Conservative motion came from J. M. Macdonnell (PC-Muskoka-Ontario), official opposition financial critic. It asked the Chamber simply to declare that "this government does not possess the confidence of the country."

M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. chieftain appended an amendment asking the House will express non-confidence for three specific reasons:

"Failure" to remove the sales tax "entirely" on the "necessary" flour, which added to the high cost of living, and "failure" to, despite high living costs, to improve the living standards of the fallows who live on income below the income tax exemption level.

Wasted Taxes

Solon Low, Social Credit leader, criticized the government because it did not list the eight-per-cent sales tax as one it would support the C.C.F. motion.

Special Ceremony At Ottawa Marks Historic Occasion

St. John's Man Sworn In As Secretary of State

Ottawa, April 1 — (CP) — Prime Minister St. Laurent today welcomed Newfoundland into Confederation as a "full and equal" partner with the older provinces to share with the rest of Canada "in the work and in the wealth of our nation."

"Together," he told the new Canadians, "we shall strive, under God's guidance, and with confidence in our future, to build a greater and better land."

Mr. St. Laurent extended a welcome to Newfoundland in a 30-minute ceremony held on Parliament Hill at noon and broadcast through Canada and the new island province. It followed a similar ceremony held in St. John's, where Sir Albert Walsh was sworn in as the first lieutenant-governor of Newfoundland.

Confident of Future

"We are confident of our country's future," he said. "We feel that our action can hold its head high among the nations of the world."

"With the pleasure we have in welcoming you as Newfoundland becomes Canada today, there is mingled a feeling that you could not have come at a worse time.

But, while the formal union was completed today, "the real union — the union of hearts and minds — is yet to come," in the present "terrible war in which Canadians and Newfoundlanders were so deeply joined."

At the same time, it was not alone in war that Canadians had come to know and appreciate the qualities of Newfoundlanders.

"During the centuries since the original settlement of Newfoundland, the people of your island have met the forces of nature, on sea and land, in a determined spirit of prosperity they have developed the qualities of heart and spirit for which they are renowned."

Will Not Lose Identity

Mr. St. Laurent assured the people of the new province that they would not lose their own identity, of which they were "so justly proud."

The Canadian constitution provided that each province should have its own distinctive political existence and political traditions.

The fathers of Confederation, he said, had left to the provinces the primary responsibility for the protection of the family, the school, the church—the "very foundations of the Canadian society.

2 Constables Tell of Dissension In Belleville OPP Detachment

Two OPP constables today told Mr. Justice Keiller Mackay of suspicion and dissension within the Belleville detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police.

The two officers generally confirmed the testimony Constable T.K. Keays has given before Mr. Justice Mackay's Royal Commission, investigating the Constable Keays' allegations against fellow officers and a Crown Attorney.

Other witnesses have told of two "teams" in the police detachment, one comprising Constables Keays and Const. W. Richmond and C. E. Sigle; the other comprising Cpl. Ivan Irvine and Constable J. B. Driscoll and Constable G. B. Purdy.

Cpl. Irvine, Constable Driscoll and Constable Purdy are among the men named by Keays in his allegations of fraud, perjury and maladministration of justice.

Tells of Diary Entry

Constable J. W. Richmond 25-year-old army veteran and member of the Ontario Provincial Police, told Mr. Justice Mackay that an entry in Cpl. Irvine's diary dated Sept. 28, 1947, was not entered on Dec. 19th, of the same year.

In his testimony Cpl. Irvine had swore the complete entry for date.

Constable Richmond testified in connection with charges by Constable Keays that Cpl. Irvine had committed perjury and had falsified his diary in connection with the Latchy Woods' case.

Constable Richmond was asked by Keays if on Dec. 19th, 1947, he had been asked to make a notation of Cpl. Irvine's diary.

Shown the diary the witness stated all the entries under date Sept. 28, had been entered by Dec. 19, with the exception of one "No. 14 Highway, north to Foxboro." When he had again been shown the diary on Dec. 26th, the above entry had appeared.

Had Not Suspected Keays

He said he had told this to Staff Inspector Mote when this officer had investigated the Woods case with respect to Keays' complaint of perjury by Cpl. Irvine.

He denied, however, that he had suspected Keays of anything "nasty" in his motive for showing him the diary.

The witness also denied 'that he had ever been asked by Keays to make notes regarding" anything he could get on Inspector Page."

Neither did he recall say remarks by Keays to Cpl. Irvine to the same thing.

Const. Chas. E. Sigle was called to the stand.

He stated he had been stationed at Belleville since June, 1944, and in 1945, had been transferred to general police duties.

Questioned by Keays the witness stated he had seen gradual dissension between Cpl. Irvine, Const. J. Driscoll and Keays. Also on the return to Cpl. Irvine this officer and Keays failed to communicate.

Had Visited Keays Home

The witness stated he had heard Inspector Page swear at members of the force. He had heard this personally on one occasion and had been told of other occasions.

Reference was made to an occasion when Cpl. Irvine, Const. George Gagne, Const. Sigle and one other boy had visited at the home of Keays.

ROUGH BATTLE SHAPING UP IN WAKE OF STRIKE

Called Against All Canadian Flag Deep-Sea Ships on East Coast

Ottawa, April 1 (CP)— A rough battle for control of deep-sea ing labor on the east coast shaped up today in the wake of a strike called by the Canadian Seamens Union (T.L.C.) against all Canadian-flag ships operating on the coast.

The strike, aimed at tying up almost 90 ships, pitted the 5,000-man C.S.U. against the Seafarers International Union of Canada, affiliated group with 90,000 members in the United States which has stepped into the Canadian field in a move sponsored by anti-Communist labor leaders.

The tie-up became effective late Thursday as crews refused to man sailing out of eastern ports and C.S.U. officials said it would extend to others on the high seas or in foreign ports, manned by some 3,000 C.S.U. members, even to the west coast if necessary.

Harry Davis, C.S.U. president who announced the strike, called the action of his operating "illegal" declaring that after Conciliation Board proceedings he and other union officers were tearing up settlement with Labor Department officials when they unexpectedly received word that the eastern operators had signed with the Seafarers.

Move in is Strength

Meanwhile, the seafarers group was reported preparing to move into the Eastern Canada ports in force strength to back the signing of its contract with the Shipping Federation of Canada.

One informed source said the S. I. U. was planning to bring east at least one of the "on the beach"—temporarily unemployed — members from the west coast. Another said it would send its grappling personnel from the United States.

"It's going to be a knock-down-drag-out fight," one source forecast close to the S. I. U. leadership.

Mr. Davies himself, with his union battling now for its life, said last year's violence on the great lakes could well be duplicated on the east coast.

The sudden coup of the S. I. U., obviously jolted the C. S. U. leadership.

"We charge that such actions are illegal and in violation of the federal labor code," Mr. Davis said. "It is not surprising that industrial outlaws like some Great Lakes companies are breaking the labor laws when a government - operated company line like the C. N. S. can brazenly adopt the same tactics."

LEGISLATURE MAY WIND UP SESSION ON WEDNESDAY

Final Approval Given Margarine Bill; Estimates to be Considered

Toronto, April 1 — (CP)—The Ontario Legislature today considered estimates of four departments — health, welfare, planning and travel — the last of the 1949-50 estimates before it has to deal with this session.

Corridor gossip has it that the House will probably prorogue next Wednesday if time allows. It is prolonged unduly by resumed consideration of the government's charitable foundations bill, expected to come before the legislature again Monday. The session started Feb. 10.

Final approval was given Thursday to the government bill to prohibit the yellow-and-red coloring in margarine to 1.6 decigrams. The measure passed 72-28 without success to increase the degree of coloring to 2.7, to withdraw the coloring section of the bill and to give the legislation a six-month trial.

The House gave unanimous support to the government's new milk control bill. The bill, aimed at speeding up milk price negotiations, sets up a provincial arbitration board.

Six Ships Collide In Channel Fogs, One Believed Sunk

London, April 1 (Reuters) — Six ships, including a Danish steamer and two Swedish vessels were involved in collisions during the night in one of the busiest channels in the world.

One British coaster was believed sunk and two British freighters were known to have lost their bows in the collisions.

The slight damage was caused in a collision between the Swedish tanker Soya (10,421 tons) and the Danish freighter California (416 tons) off the mouth of the Thames.

The 403-ton British coaster Charles M. was believed to have gone down after a collision with an unidentified vessel.

The Charles M.'s crew of seven was picked up, but no trace was found of the other ship.

Bodies of two fishermen were found on rocks near Hastings tangled in the rigging of their smack, the Pioneer. A companion was missing.

China's Peace Delegation Lands In Peiping

Nanking, April 1. (AP)—The Chinese government's peace delegation landed in Communist Peiping this afternoon.

The Communists immediately clamped a tight security blanket on all news concerning the activities of the Nationalist negotiators.

The delegation, feeling as if it was "walking on the edge of a bottomless gulf", took off from Nanking airport this morning with Acting President Li Tsung-Jen and leaders of the Kuomintang Legislative Party.

Behind them they left 2,000 demonstrating students who denounced their mission as a "gesture of defeat." This theory was shouted about "American Imperialism" in China.

The students pledged itself "to carry out talks with the Communists in a spirit of sincerity so that the universal desire of the people for a lasting and permanent peace can be fulfilled as soon as possible."

Premier Chang Chih-Chung, head of the delegation, had been sighted in Canton as the Communist radio shortly before his departure.

Man's Heroic Battle in North Told In Devoted Service and Rescue Work

Ottawa, April 1 — (CP) — Man's heroic struggle in the North goes on unabated but his battle against the stern wastes continues to be one of courage and perseverance.

So reads the story of two R.C.M.P. officers, lost 18 days in Canada's sub-Arctic, whose rescue was announced by R.C. M. P. and army headquarters Thursday night.

Even as the rescue was announced, a mercy flight was underway in another part of the North to aid two Eskimo children reported in the grip.

And at the same time a plane took off for Churchill, Man., to speed supplies to starving Eskimos in the Arctic, left without equipment.

Non-Communist Press in Europe Acclaims Churchill Speech

London, April 1 — (AP) — Winston Churchill's Boston speech Thursday night won "amens" from non-Communist newspapers and provoked fresh charges from Moscow that he is trying to start a war.

London newspapers generally agreed with Churchill that war is not inevitable. They credited him with showing a firm grasp of history.

The Communist Daily Worker, a notable exception, said "he and his class are dragging this war-shattered world into a new war."

The Liberal News Chronicle noted that "no fears the hostileness of Russia, made dangerous by Stalin's purges."

Many Communist and fellow-traveling newspapers generally seemed to be ignoring the speech. Neither Prague newspaper nor any of Berlin's Soviet-licensed papers reported it.

The western-licensed Berlin press reported the speech but did not comment on it. The British-licensed Social Democrat, however, headlined the story "Churchill unmasked motives of 'astonishing' Kremlin policies."

Moscow's morning newspapers published no reference to Churchill's speech.

Ontario to Raise Basic Old Age Pension to $32.50

Toronto, April 1 (CP)— Welfare Minister Goodfellow announced in the legislature today the province will increase the basic old age pension from $30 a month to $32.50.

Mr. Goodfellow said the Ontario government has consistently stated that it is prepared to pay the provincial share of any pension set by the federal government.

"However, since the federal government has not indicated in the budget any intention to increase the basic pension at this time, the government of Ontario, as a practical expression of its good faith, is increasing the payments made to old-age pensioners to an amount equal to 25 per cent of the federal pension," he said.

"In other words, every pensioner who is eligible to receive the basic $30 a month set by the federal act will now receive $32.50 a month."

A pensioner who is not eligible for the federal pension will receive the full basic pension with provincial and municipal contributions paid by the Ontario government in proportion to the amount of the federal pension, Mr. Goodfellow said.

Private Institutions to Benefit

Private institutions maintaining old-age pensions would benefit from these additional payments, Mr. Goodfellow said. With the $3 a month paid these institutions by the charitable foundations act, their total monthly payments will be $3.50 in addition to any amount they receive from the federal share of the pension.

Ontario Budget Provides Tax Relief

Toronto, April 1 (CP)— Ontario's budget today provided tax relief totalling $10,000,000 and increased old age pensions by $2.50 a month.

Treasurer Leslie Frost announced the tax relief in the legislature as he brought down the budget for the 1949-50 fiscal year.

The budget estimates total expenditures at $194,000,000 and revenue at $194,000,000.

Mr. Frost announced that the government will remove the 2 per cent sales tax on all children's clothing and on all boots and shoes costing less than $5 a pair.

The budget also provides for the removal of the 2 per cent sales tax on all farm machinery.

Mr. Frost announced that the government will increase the basic old age pension from $30 to $32.50 a month.

The budget estimates that the province will receive $10,000,000 from the federal government as its share of the increased old age pensions.

John Irwin, 4351 Westmount Avenue of Montreal and president of the Irwin Oil Company, died of a heart attack Thursday night before being removed from the C.N.R. passenger train that passes through Belleville shortly after six o'clock.

Mr. Irwin was en route to his home in Montreal and suffered an attack before reaching Port Hope. Word was sent to Belleville to have an ambulance and doctor in attendance at the station on arrival of the train. Dr. E. G. Kennedy and Dale Beeby's ambulance attended but despite medical aid given by Dr. Kennedy the man died before he could be removed from the train.

The body was taken to the Belleville Burial Company Funeral Home on yesterday for burial and will be taken to Montreal for interment.

Smelts Scarcer Than Hen's Teeth

Smelt-hungry fishermen and others have thus far gone with appetites unsatisfied.

The silver-blue piscatorial minnatures thus far have been scarcer than in the lower stretches of the Moira than the proverbial hen's molars.

Night-fishing adventurers were despondent today. They returned home last night with nary a fish. One stated that he saw a deer (legal that is) in the water near the river mouth for three hours, and staggered home under the heavy load of three reasonable facsimiles of a five-inch monster smelt.

Another offered the opinion that there would be no great smelt run this season. "I've heard," he said, "that these fish, amidst the same waters for three years only, then seek fresher streams. We have had fairly heavy runs for the past 3 years and it might be that we'll scarcities, or nearly so, this Spring."

ARNOLD HERBERT PETERS

Following an illness of six months, Arnold Herbert Peters, died at the home of his son, Percy C. Peters, 193 West Moira Street, late Thursday afternoon.

Mrr William Armstrong and daughter, Sharon, of Peterborough spent the weekend with Mrs. Armstrong's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Prescick.

Dr. Russell Scott Named Chairman Sea Cadet Corps

Just what sea cadet training is doing for the youth of Belleville was indicated by the number of students last night when they attended the annual meeting of the sponsoring committee of the Belleville Sea Cadet ship "Quinte" on South Front St.

Those in attendance were given an opportunity to view the splendid work that passes through the local cadet corps. During the past season a considerable amount of money and time has been spent on an addition to the building, improvements throughout and the installation of an oil burner heating plant, which has enabled them to continue with winter training. Through these improvements Belleville now has one of the finest, if not the finest, sea cadet headquarters in Ontario.

Belleville citizens may not be aware of it, but because of the tireless efforts of the executive and officers of the corps, Belleville has the best youth builder that it has ever had. The work that is being done by these lads has become one of the greatest builders of real men that is so necessary in the times of unrest that Canada and other countries are in. It is a real training for the youth movement that the Navy League has presented to the world and the best organizations that has ever befallen the youth of Belleville. It is a great organization and it is helping to teach the boys to be men, and the qualities which are the best qualities that any boy could possess.

The Sea Cadets have at present about 130 members and they are being given drills on signalling, knots, rope splicing, first aid and lectures on boat work. There are three divisions taking this training and it is expected that in the near future there will be a great many more added to the total—one of this opportunity to build a better manhood.

Dr. R. Maxwell, who is the commanding officer of the cadets, hopes that they will be ready in Belleville to be sailing this year. It is expected that they will be out on the waters by the first of May. They have a large selection of boats including two dinghies, two skiffs, three cutters and one whaler but are very badly in need of a power craft which they hope to have some time in the near future.

The staff which have given so freely of their time with no remuneration to this cause include Mr. A. G. Stackhouse, who is chairman; Dr. J. Russell Scott as chairman; Ross Stiver, supervisor; and the officers are headed by Commanding Officer Robert MacNeil.

The sea cadets have been given very good support in the way of contributions and have, up to the present time received $2,608.25 from interested citizens. Besides they recently received a $500. cheque from the City Council.

Films Presented At Farm Forum

On Monday evening the Foxboro Farm Forum met for a social supper for the forum members in the Foxboro Public School. About fifty people enjoyed a bounteous meal. Mr. Ames Roblin was chairman for the evening's entertainment. Mr. Frank Turnbull, accompanied by Mrs. Clare Carter, led in community singing.

Mr. Harvie Homan presented two educational films "Conserve the Soil of Ontario" and "Made in U.S.A." Mr. E. Prindle asked and received a vote of expressed appreciation to Mr. Homan for showing the films. Mr. Harry Carter and Mr. Clare Carter played two piano selections and Miss Gertha Joslin and Mrs. Harry Coulter gave readings. Mr. Harold Reynolds conducted a short contest. Mr. E. Prindle asked the forum members for Mrs. Harry Coulter, to come forward and presented her with a gift from the forum as a token of their appreciation of the work done during the forum season.

At the conclusion of the program a dainty lunch was past in euchre and croquinole games.

Wide Vista of Activities Shown by Chamber of Commerce Committee Reports

Reports of Chamber of Commerce committee chairmen promulgated at an Open Forum meeting held in Trenton Memorial hall last night opened a wide vista of activities on the part of the Chamber as a whole.

Replies to questionnaires, circulated by committees relating to the general betterment of the city as a whole were read to the meeting and after preliminary discussion, were referred to the different committees affected. These committees will hold separate meetings at which those submitting their particular suggestion will be invited for discussion.

Reporting on the activities of Agricultural Committee, Chairman Bill Miller told the meeting that his committee had instituted to improve relations between rural and urban people. Meetings, with competent speakers had been held on topics appealing to agriculture, including income tax had been discussed. The committee had been highly successful, especially from the farmers' point of view.

With Eye to Similar Lines

"1942 activities," he said, "will be followed along a similar line with activities to be resumed in the autumn." He stated the Chamber was doing an excellent job in fostering relations between urban and rural dwellers.

Chairman Lorne Mowgall of the Civic Relations Committee told the meeting that his committee's activities had been taken over from last year, that of the Board of Civic Development Committee.

A delegation comprised of representatives of local organizations including Home and School Clubs, had previously appointed Committee of two aldermen had waited on the city council requesting the setting up of a Recreational Committee which would co-relate facilities. Council had agreed to the adult recreation. His committee, Mowgall explained, had not yet been prepared a by-law, but nothing has been heard of the matter since.

"This Recreational Committee," he said, "would be set up by the city which should provide the necessary funds. It was suggested $6,000, a portion of which would be paid by the Provincial Govt. A recreational committee was set up to get started. This plan has met with much success in other centres."

Chairman McDougall also urged that action be taken with respect to foreign trade. Canadian exports must be kept up to pre-war monetary conditions, and some steps should be taken immediately.

Several New Members

Enos David, speaking for the membership committee said that a drive of effort were satisfactory. He read the names of several new members. The chief matter that their applications be accepted.

Secretary-Manager Fenwick, chairman of the Open Forum committee told the meeting that his committee had held several meetings and had secured excellent speakers for each. He is trying to secure President Sidney Smith, of the University of Toronto to speak. A "Education Night" meeting to which the "city" will be invited, a meeting on "What's Your Beef" forum where anyone in the city may speak and everyone could discuss them.

Secretary-Manager Fenwick also spoke regarding the Solicitation Control committee outlining the duties of the body and said the committee was doing a good job but could do better if all had the wholehearted support of every member of the Chamber.

Tourist Committee Active

The Tourist and Publicity committee is on a par, co-operating closely with similar committees in the county, Chairman Mc.Lean Haig reported. "These bodies," he said, "have been very good and very generous in underwriting various undertakings. Tourist pamphlets have been prepared and distributed. At the Toronto Sportsmen's Show where a booth was installed, no less than 1,600 registrations had been received and a personal canvass was displayed in obtaining tourist information on the highways of Hastings."

Aftermath of this phase of publicity, Chairman Haig pointed out is seen in the fact that a number of applications for reservations in North Hastings by vacation-spot seekers have already been made. This proves the advantages to be gained by representation at the Sportsmen's Show which in turn shows the tremendous value of the vacation possibilities of Hastings County.

"Advertisement in the press and radio had called attention to what Chamber is doing," Chairman Haig said. The radio program "Citizens Alert" Public Service of which is to provide an antidote for Communism, had been given the Chamber stands on democratic institutions, has met with favorable reaction.

To Organize Operators

"The main object of his committee," the chairman said, "was to organize a Tourist Operators Association for Hastings County. Already arrangements have been made to hold a dinner meeting at Bancroft to which all tourist operators in the county and surrounding districts will be invited."

Chairman Ross Harrow, National Affairs Committee reported that his organization was functioning properly and sincere interest was being taken in current affairs and legislation as it affected members of the Chamber here.

The fact that I have all young men on my committee speaks well for the future," Chairman Orchants Division, Chairman Ted Wilson said.

"His committee had embarked on several small projects and had met with success. Included was a credit survey of the city to see if merchants were following the "stack up" against those of other centres. Also a drive was made to remedy poor delivery service of merchandise to merchants.

Civic Improvement Committee Schwab said, was a "You'll Enjoy Belleville" booklet. Narrow Belleville. This project will be of from six to eight months duration and will educate the public on the advantages of shopping here through the medium of courteous clerks, store and front cleanliness improvements.

Run Essay Contests

"Two essay contests will be sponsored by his division," he said. "High school students will be invited to write on the topic "Why My Home Town Should be Kept Clean in Belleville." Handsome prizes of a typewriter, a wrist watch and a pen and pencil set will be awarded the first three. Refreshments for the high school contests while many cash prizes will be given to the grade school pupils in the school petition.

Chairman Harold Seldon read several of the answers to the aforementioned questionnaires after which some discussion the matter was disposed of as was the refreshments served in the coffee and sandwiches concluded the meeting.

Children Recover After Swallowing Medicinal Pills

Peterborough, April 1 (CP) — Mrs. Jack Scott, Peterborough children who nearly died after swallowing lethal quantities of medicinal pills early today were fully recovered, but the third child was still in hospital.

Jan Scott 21-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Scott of nearby Millbrook is slowly recovering from the effect of 30 sleeping tablets which he took from his mother's purse. Speedy action of Mrs. Wright and the quick wit of child 18 miles to hospital here was credited with saving his life.

Mrs. Wright's cool, teamwork of a mother, a step-driving barrel-chested Peterborough dairy margin over death for Linda two, and Robert three, of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Stevenson of Ponitypool. Each swallowed about 15 pieces of medicinal pills before they knew which they thought were chocolate bars.

Took Box From Purse

When Dr. O. W. McNeill was informed by the delivered instructions over the phone and rushed to get the help of Sarbert Harry Carter and his jeep.

The Scott child had been ill with a severe cold at the time he swallowed the pills. He followed his mother to the kitchen climbed from a chair to a shelf and took a box from a purse.

Hospital officials said the tablets would have killed the child within a short time if Dr. Wright had not reached him so quickly and removed the contents of his stomach.

TWEED

Will Extend Hydro To Sugar Island

Tweed—Occupants of cottages in the area across Moon Lake Tweed, known as "Sugar Island" will have access to hydro power this Summer if they wish it. And of the 21 or 22 cottages there, about 14 have already hooked on to the service.

The local hydro manager, E. M. Johns, states that a rural extention, the ordinary type of line that is built into other farm areas in the Tweed district, has been built, to "the island" and the cottagers may make use of the service if they want to have their cottage wired and the necessary installations made.

The line is similar to other rural extensions in that enough cottagers had to request it and assure the hydro that they would use it, to warrant the building of the extension.

Mr. and Mrs. Claud Barnett left for St. Adele, Que., last Friday to visit with their son, Captain Barnett and Mrs. Barnett. Mr. Barnett is a regular pilot on the overseas run of the Trans-Canada Airways and has been recalled on Sunday to take one of the airliners from Dorval Airport, Montreal, across the Atlantic.

Previously, he arranged a reservation to have his father accompany him. Last Friday Claud was in Tweed, he left on Sunday aboard one of the giant planes for London, England and he will be back home this coming week.

It is hoped he will give his impressions of the overseas aerial visit for readers.

The brick building which has been used by Tweed Motor Car Sales at a point where it is being dismantled this week, preparatory to the spring construction operations. The frame building serving as an office has been sold and will be removed from the property shortly.

Mr. C. Edward Way, proprietor, plans to erect a pretentious brick building stretching from the gang-way leading to Max Bush's property, to the lane leading to Central Library. Much of the street frontage will be of plate glass construction, permitting a fine view of the show-rooms.

The new building will be of cement construction finished in stucco. It will stretch approximately half way to the entrance to Centre Street. The premises will mean a big improvement to the business section in mid-Victoria Street. Much of the material has been delivered.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, April 1 (CP)—Golds climbed sharply in an otherwise easier and slow session on the Toronto stock exchange today. Industrials slipped on scattered fractional losses. Base metals and western oils also continued yesterday's downward trend.

Volume for the first three hours was 263,000 shares, about 178,000 shares less than yesterday's similar period.

Junior producers were ahead pennies while the uranium stock that featured yesterday's market were quiet.

Losses were held to fractions in the industrials with a number of issues rising against the trend for minor gains.

Base metals reacted mildly to news that Consolidated Smelters had reduced its price for lead by ½ cent.

BUFFALO LIVESTOCK

N. S. Predicts All-Time Record In Expenditures

(By The Canadian Press)

An all-time record in expenditures was predicted in the 1949 budget presented to the Nova Scotia legislature by Premier Angus L. Macdonald.

Expenditures of $33,975,361 would be more than $6,250,000 more than last year's record, Premier Macdonald estimated revenue at $34,467,740, leaving a surplus of $492,379.

Revenue for 1948 was $33,502,-015 and the province showed a surplus of $4,875,233, second highest in history.

Expenditures would increase in highways, public works, health, education and welfare programs. Highways and public health showed an increase of more than $1,000,000 over last year.

Drawing attention to the reduced surplus predicted, Premier Macdonald recalled that when he tabled the public accounts last Wednesday he indicated "we could not go on year after year showing surpluses running into several millions of dollars."

Lieutenant-Governor J. M. Urnith (Bunny) gave royal assent to 106 bills in the Saskatchewan legislature as the session drew near its close. Prorogation is expected Saturday.

Most of the bills were amendments to existing acts and several of them go into effect tomorrow, the first day of the new financial year.

SPECIAL

Newfoundland was taking its place in Confederation as a "full and equal partner with the older provinces," he said, adding:

"It is my hope and belief that in the future the advantages of the union will be increasingly recognized by the great majority of the people of Newfoundland and of all Canada."

Union was completed at a troubled time for all peoples who believed in freedom and democracy and who hoped for peace. It came at a time when the peace-loving countries of the North Atlantic community were banding themselves for greater security against aggression.

Greater Security

Newfoundland was in the "very centre" of that community and Newfoundland and Canada would have "greater security" in being bound together in federal union.

"Thus we begin life as one people in an atmosphere of unity. We are all Canadians now.

"Now, as never before, can it be said of this island that her bounds extend from sea to sea.

Dates Leading Up to Union

(By The Canadian Press)

Chronological order of pertinent dates in Newfoundland's move toward union with Canada:

June 22, 1945—A 45-man national convention was elected by the people of Newfoundland to prepare proposals for new forms of government for the island.

Sept. 1946 convention held its final meeting.

Oct. 29—The convention decided a motion calling for negotiation be sent to Ottawa to sound out Canada's position on possible terms of union.

Feb. 29, 1947—The convention reversed its earlier vote and decided to send a delegation to Ottawa.

June 25—The delegation met with Canadian cabinet ministers to begin the working out of possible terms of union.

Oct. 3—The delegation returned to Newfoundland.

Dec. 23—St. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, then Prime Minister sent to the Governor of Newfoundland the terms which Canada considered as a suitable basis for union.

Jan. 31, 1948—After a lengthy study of the terms, Newfoundland convention voted against including confederation on the referendum ballot paper, but the Commonwealth office in London communicated with and ordered that union with Canada be one of the choices on the ballot.

June 3—A referendum was held but the public did not get a clear majority for a return to responsible government, union with Canada or retention of commission government. A second referendum was held with commission government dropped from the ballot.

July 22—In the second referendum, Confederation polled 77,589 votes and Responsible government 71,464.

Oct. 6—A seven man Newfoundland delegation arrived in Ottawa to begin negotiations.

March 31, 1949—Union became official at 11:59 p.m.

Union-at-Glance

(By The Canadian Press)

Union of Newfoundland, with Canada on March 31, 1949, is larger than Europe, raises its population to more than 13,000,000, gives it a new 14th city, and a seventh time zone.

It does nothing to Canada:

Population— raises it from an estimated 12,883,000 by 730,000 to 13,203,000.

Area—increases it from 3,690,000 square miles by 152,000 to 3,842,000 compared with Europe's 4,778,000.

Provinces—gives it a new ninth province in population, a new seventh province in size.

Cities—gives it a new 14th city, St. John's, with 80,000 people, between Verdun, Que., and Regina.

ROUGH BATTLE

ed into Canada last summer when Frank Hall, rail union chief in the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, engineered a deal that it absorb the company union" Canadian Lake Seamen's Union.

The strong S. I. U. came into Eastern Canada last year with the evident intention of taking in some trades and labor Congress forces — of driving the C. S. U. out of the seamen's field. First moves in this direction were within the unions.

Now, they have spread to decks open warfare.

No information was available here on the type of contract signed by the S. I. U. and the owners.

Originally, the men wanted a 15-per-cent increase and the operators asked them to take a 350-a-month cut. A conciliation board recommended wages remain at the same level as in the last year's contract. Pay for able-bodied seamen under the old contract was $170 a month.

Commemorative Stamps on Sale

Ottawa, April 1 (CP)— Special commemorative postage stamps to mark the union of Newfoundland and Canada went on sale today in post offices across the country and in the new island province.

A large-sized green issue, the stamp carries a picture of the "Matthew," the ship in which John Cabot made his first exploratory voyage to the island more than 400 years ago. It makes no direct reference to union but carries the historic dates "1947" and "1949".

Wider Selection Of Cars Will be Sham of Fair

(By FORBES RUDE
(Canadian Press Business Editor)

Visitors to the Canadian International Trade Fair in June will see a reasonably cosmopolitan display of motor cars.

British manufacturers, who had the automobile section to themselves last year, will be back with a wider range of models. Rolls Royce, Austin, Morris, Riley and Wolseley.

The sleek Czechoslovakian Skoda and Tatra models will show, probably for the first time in Canada.

Last year Canadian and American cars didn't appear, but this time General Motors at least will be there and will include cars not now sold in the Canadian market, such as Cadillacs.

Many Accessories

The service show is of most interest to dealers in automobile accessories and repairs, and has the biggest display since the war. One of the most striking attracting attention is a piano wire about 18 inches long, which is supposed to keep you from scratching your fenders or tires when parking.

It is attached to the front fender and when a ball at the end of the wire touches an object it sets up a vibration in the car's body which warns you off. It is purely a gimmick, however, and attracting and as it isn't being given a "live" demonstration in the car, it looks pretty innocent to accomplish all that. But people who have experimented with it say it works.

Entertaining Performance

To a lay observer, a circus-like performance by ball manufacturers is the most entertaining display. The bearings, about half an inch in diameter, are put in a tin can and on a steel block, bouce and go through a revolving ring some six inches wide, and the single bearing every time and never miss the ring.

If you are making a living in the business, probably you will be more interested in the various hoists, seat covers, and 1,001 other things which you may use to fix a car or sell to a customer.

CONTABLES

They had been driven by Boyle and in the car was a case of beer and a bottle of rum.

The witness said Cpl. Ervine had bought the bottle of liquor and that some time later Inspector Page and Miss Dorothy Dowdell, police matron, had arrived.

Const. Siple said he also had heard Cpl. Ervine boast of his influence with "Art", meaning Inspector Arthur Motherwell, W. H. Stringer, Police Commissioner. Referring to the Lefty Wood case Keays asked the witness if he knew anything about an agreement between Const. Purdy to Keays in connection with the Wood case.

"Yes," was the reply, "Gerry, Const. Purdy's son-in-law came and told him if he had done anything wrong he should go to Ernie or to Sgt. Hartleib."

Later the witness stated Const. Purdy had told him he had come to the conclusion to request the Crown Attorney that the charges against Woods be withdrawn.

Acted on Instructions

He said Const. Purdy's decision to go to the Crown Attorney was on the receipt of instructions from Cpl. Ervine.

Const. Siple said he had been unjustly accused of driving a delinquency car dangerously. Cpl. Ervine had indicated Const. Siple was responsible for the complaint he received at headquarters.

Reference was made by Keays to the surveillance of the Badgley home by police cars.

Const. Siple stated that one evening during the illness of the Royal Commission hearing he had visited the Badgley residence on William Street and on leaving had been followed.

He said the car was a white patrol car No. 924 from the O.P.P. headquarters.

Mr. Robb asked if there was any suggestion by Const. Siple that the police had put him constituted surveillance of the Badgley home.

"No, Sir", was the reply. "I was just relating the incident as it occurred to me."

Mr. Robb brought out that two officers of the O.P.P. detachment lived at a house only a short distance from the Badgley home.

"Then it was perfectly natural for police cars to be on William Street," stated Mr. Robb.

A Friend of Keays

"Yes, sir."

"Then why did you not bring it to the attention of the Commission when you were questioned by Keays?" asked Mr. Robb.

"I was going to," stated Const. Siple.

Mr. Robb questioned the witness regarding evidence given at the Carefoot trial suggesting Keays' evidence had not been truthful.

"As far as I am concerned Keays is truthful," stated Const. Siple.

"You are Keays best friend?" asked Mr. Robb.

"Yes, I am a good friend of Keays," replied Const. Siple.

"Are you biased in favor of Keays?" asked Mr. Robb.

The constable admitted that he may be.

Corporal Stanley Palmateer, Bancroft, was the next witness called. He said he had been stationed at Bancroft since 1937.

Mr. Robb referred to the Bancroft jail break and asked if it was true that Cpl. Ervine was in charge. Const. Keays when he was taking a statement from one of the re-captured prisoners.

"Yes" was the reply. "Cpl. Ervine did stop Keays. He objected to the manner in which the statement was being taken."

Had Visited Psychiatrist

Keays once in July 1946 admitted that on two occasions, he had visited a psychiatrist, according to Cpl. Palmateer.

The occasion was at Bancroft during a visit of Keays to the Bancroft detachment office. Sgt. J.A. Stringer had come into the office.

The witness stated that when Sgt. Stringer entered the office Keays became very nervous and it had been suggested he see a doctor.

"You mean a psychiatrist," Keays is reported to have said. "You may be surprised to know I have already been to see two psychiatrists."

After Sgt. Stringer had left Cpl. Palmateer asked Keays he told him he had once arrested Sgt. Stringer for speeding but at that time in connection with the Dent shooting in Navin in 1940.

Keays had once told him that he hoped to become a detective in C.I.B. or to set up a fingerprint branch for the province of Ontario.

Cpl. Palmateer said Keays had referred to members of the RCMP fingerprint branch as a bunch of "punks".

Keays had also said if he ever had to leave the Ontario Provincial Police, a lot of —— would leave with him.

Belittled the Judiciary

Keays had also discussed in belittling manner the judiciary, Cpl. Palmateer said.

"I was called and from then on was very cautious about what I said to Keays," stated the witness. "He said that I had a lot of punk lawyers so they made one a Judge and the other a Magistrate".

Keays had referred to a Picton crown attorney, "as an army drunk trying to make a comeback".

Col. B. C. Donnan cross examined the witness and asked who had been detailed to investigate the Ralph Turner case at Coe Hill.

"The crown attorney requested me to investigate and stated to go the limit," replied the witness. He said Keays had taken over the Turner case and had made him feel very embarrassed.

Keays had treated him "badly" and had also treated the public badly in investigations. So much so, in fact, that he had asked Keays to be kept out of his territory.

Cpl. Palmateer denied that Crown Attorney Donnan had appeared in the court room drunk when conducting the Turner trial.

Allegations by Constable Keays that his family had been intimidated; that friends 'sad been followed by provincial police cars and that witnesses of the hearing had been interfered with, typified a dramatic upsurge of interest at the Royal Commission investigation, Thursday afternoon.

Keays, whose charges of maladministration of justice against Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan and seven police officers are now being investigated by Mr. Justice Keiller Mackay, added the above allegations immediately at the commencement of the afternoon session.

He was directly challenged by Commission Counsel G. F. Hoyt. Mr. Hoyt asked for the additional allegations and to name the persons who had been interfered with.

Speaking directly to Mr. Justice Mackay, the constable in a low voice stated he he had not sought to bring the matter of his family being intimidated or of friends being followed, before the Commissioner "but if witnesses were to be allowed to be jeopardized he wished to withdraw at this stage."

Says House Under Surveillance Challenged by Mr. Hoyt, Keays strode to the witness box and under oath testified that the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Badgley, William Street, had been under surveillance by police in two white cars.

On one occasion since the Royal Commission hearing commenced, Keays stated, Mr. Justland had been followed as far as Port Hope, where he had been stopped by O.P.P.

"Who were these police officers and what was the number of the car?" asked Mr. Hope as he pressed for information.

"I don't know," said Keays.

Keays said that three provincial officers had visited him to give testimony at the hearing but that they refused to sit and testify until they were called. These officers were Sgt. Hartleib, Constable Siple and Constable Richmond, he said.

Mr. C. A. McGaughey of Trenton, also scheduled to appear as a witness, had been told that if he did so two witnesses would testify that McGaughey had been drunk on the day in question.

Both Keays and Sgt. Hartleib, who had been on the witness stand during the morning, had been accused immediately on leaving the box by Sgt. J. A. Stringer.

During the morning hearing Sgt. Hartleib testified that he had been offered $500 if he would arrange a transfer to Belleville for Keays.

Charges to be Completely Investigated

Commissioner Mr. Justice Mackay pointed out it was a very serious offence for a person to interfere with a witness and stated that the charges would be investigated "completely and thoroughly."

Sgt. Hartleib returned to the stand and on question from Keays stated that immediately following the morning adjournment he had been approached in the courtroom hallway by Sgt. Stringer.

"Sgt. Stringer told me to keep away to him "you want warfare and you will get it."

Sgt. Hartleib also had drawn Sgt. Stringer into a nearby witness room. "I told him that the officers must necessarily remain that as senior N.C.O. and as the immediate subordinate to the district inspector that before you made a report about Keays, Purdy and the Crown Attorney, the fair thing would be to give them the opportunity to explain themselves."

Mr. Robb referred to the Carefoot case and pointed out in the transcript where Constable Keays had stated during the trial that he had never been off duty from the police force for anything more than a day.

Mr. Robb produced a report written by Sgt. Hartleib a short time before the Carefoot trial which showed Keays had been granted five weeks sick leave.

Also Keays had testified at the Carefoot trial that he had "sole" possession of the key to the storeroom at provincial police headquarters where exhibits in the Carefoot case had been kept.

Sgt. Hartleib replied there had been two other keys to the storeroom.

Mr Robb submitted this was proof that Keays had been untruthful and suggested he may also have been untruthful when he was given information by Sgt. Hartleib with respect to the Woods case.

WELCOME NEWFOUNDLAND!

The historic Colony of Newfoundland is now a Province in the Confederation of the Dominion of Canada. The entry of the tenth province into Canada was the dominant thought today of the millions of people who occupy the north half of the Continent of North America. Such a union is a happy event which will ever be remembered. In it the old adage will prove true, that in union is strength. In this case, the union of ten great and free provinces. Once every year the people of Canada have on Dominion Day celebrated the birth of Confederation or of the Dominion with the entry of the first four provinces into union in 1867, followed by others until now with the accession of Newfoundland, the oldest of Britain's Colonies, there are ten great Provinces in our Dominion. To Newfoundlanders this event has of course special significance and appeal in its entry into Dominion status while to the rest of Canada it means the accession of a noble and virile population of the great island off the Atlantic coast which has stood like a warder ready to guard this land ever since Newfoundlands discovery by the great explorer and navigator John Cabot.

Today children and adults in the ten provinces have had an experience which will leave lifelong memories of this festive occasion.

In Britain the people look with benevolent regard upon the union of Newfoundland and Canada, as the enlarged Dominion will increase the function of united action along the way of freedom and liberty. To Britain on this day of celebration both Newfoundland and Canada feel profoundly the debt of freedom and democracy which will ever live and in this confederation the world has seen true democracy functioning and widening the bounds of freedom. It is an event which can be witnessed only in truly democratic peoples, such as the British Commonwealth of Nations itself.

Canada looks to the sturdy citizenry of Newfoundland as the finest asset which the union brings to the Dominion. Great as are the province's resources it is her people who count, just as it is the people of the other provinces who count.

This is a day of felicitations from other Provinces in welcoming a tenth province which has a name which it has won in the mind of the peoples of the world. Especially is it a time for greetings to the British traditions of liberty run so true as in this union in the New World.

So the Provinces and their people greet these new Canadians whose spirit we know and whose course has been parallel with our own and say "Welcome Newfoundland!"

MIRACLE OF MIGRATION

Some of the birds which spend the winters far in the south are back in their spring and summer haunts and many more are to come.

Migration of the birds is little known to the most of the people for many of the birds travel by night on their long journey to the northland. What prompts this information? According to scientists nothing that man can see compels the birds to move, to abandon the delights of their tropical homes of the winter months and yet the birds when the "proper" moment strikes are on their way. Writers say that the "proper" time seems to have no relation to the same time of food conditions in the tropics which are almost changeless, but is determined by the weather and food conditions the birds will find when they reach their destination in the north if the season is an average one.

The birds which are coming north and those that have come have their routes, each species pursuing the same route year after year. The great body of migrants to the Eastern United States and Canada fly straight from Yucatan across the Gulf of Mexico to landings on the north shore all the way between Texas and Florida. Arriving northward along two main channels, one up the coast eastward of the Alleghanies and the other up the Mississippi Valley separating into bands that ascend each tributary they rapidly cover the whole country, while the bolder species headed for the subarctic zone hasten to Alaska and down the Mackenzie Valley. Each species it is said pursues the same route every year and sometimes it is far from being the most direct one. The rate of flight is slow and the birds feed by the way and that requires daylight. Fog, rain, storms often delay the voyageurs.

JUST FOLKS

APRIL 1

Beware this day, you grandpas gray!
That hat upon the walk disdain,
For should you kick, the hidden brick
May cause excruciating pain.

Still, if loud laughter be your fancy
And twinkling eyes of brown or blue,
One good kick, and let me make
A willing April fool of you.

Should salty be your cup of tea,
Remember to be solemn-faced
And spluttering say: "I'm sure today
The sugar has a briny taste."

And should you find your coat sleeves pinned,
Perchance a mantle in your shoe,
Be glad as I, they scheme and try
To make an April fool of you.

Be not too wise; those twinkling eyes
All grandpas should delight to see.
Today be dense, and make pretense
That it is fun a fool to be.

Time takes away the games they play.
Too soon new pleasures they'll pursue.
So, let them make, for laugh or ache,
A happy April fool of you.

Washington Spotlight:

Rumors of Protest Over U.S. Plan to Re-Arm Europe

By GEORGE E. RONALD
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, April 1 — (CP) — There are murmurs of protest already about the United States plan to help re-arm anti-communist Europe.

It is a minority protest and probably will remain so. But when the administration unveils its program of military aid for North Atlantic Pact countries, the may swell to troublesome proportions.

This is the argument President Truman's planners are going to have to face:

Many a top-flight military man believes the Russians could occupy Western Europe within a few months, just as Nazi invaders did in 1940. Isn't it foolish, then wise for the United States to provide modern weapons quickly to countries which could so easily be swallowed up? Should the United States arm western Europe or save its strength?

Need Strong Europe

That argument, the administration contends, has serious flaws no matter how sincerely it is offered. The reply of Congressmen who take the long-range view of accomplished."

stronger Europe is made, the less United States security is that the will be Russian chances of "pulling" victory.

"If we can make it sufficiently clear, in advance, that any armed attack affecting our national security would be met with overwhelming force, the armed attack might never occur."

The president made that observation in support of the Atlantic Alliance. The argument presumably will be used too in backing the arms plan, which will be disclosed soon after the signing of the Alliance here Monday.

Go-Slow Pleas

Senator Walter F. George (Dem. Ga.), an influential member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, voiced fears that Congress go slowly on the military aid.

He proposed a one-year delay as a precaution against the possibility of the "frightful mistake" of crippling the Marshall Plan for Europe's economic recovery.

"The recovery program has done a great deal of good," he said. "I don't want to see it weakened by any military program. We'd better have the army program alone until we get one more year of European recovery

TODAY'S TALK

BY GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

SCENTS

I recently read an interesting brief essay upon Scents by the late R. V. Lucas. He wondered why there was such negligence paid to that prominent organ known as the nose. "The early Britons," he said, "is being constantly tickled both with words and with scents. The eye almost too much is done, with spectacular games, pageants, plays, and films; but nothing organized is done for the nose."

Likewise the noted writer named a few of his favorite scents. Here they are: New-baked bread in the air, so vague and elusive that search cannot find the source. Walnut leaves crushed. A racing stable. Grease in a box. Newly split wood in a copse. Tea just opened. A circus.

There are a few of my favorite smells, or scents: Orange blossoms on both sides of a Florida road. Pine trees stirred by the summer wind. New-mown hay. Second-hand bookshops. Earth after a summer shower. The fall leaves at springtime. Crushed mint and evergreen leaves. A cedar closet. A barrel of freshly pickled apples. Smoked ham. Autumn leaves burning. Hot coffee at a lunch throat.

counter in winter time. The grain bin in a barn. Any leather shop. A cider mill. Maple sugar. The salt air of the sea. Early morning dew. And all flowers.

I do not like scented soap, nor after-shaving scented lotion, nor perfumery for men. (Though I do for women, who wisely choose it.) I do not like the scent of cooking food — though I do like the taste of it when hungry. But my likes in scents are far more than my dislikes.

Springtime has a scent all its own — as has the autumn and fall. But springtime in the country is a festival in itself. Everything is waking up from the long sleep. There is movement everywhere. Life and love fill the air. And the warm winds bring in a mixture of scents from the four corners of the earth. All Nature is perfumed for a though awaiting its wedding gown.

Anyone who has ever visited Hawaii can never forget the scent of its flowered leis. Vendors line the roadways and the taxi are stationed in many prominent places. No queen ascending her Throne could be more georgeously perfumed than any woman in Hawaii entering her dining room with a lei of Pikaki about her throat.

THE PACKSACK

OF GREGORY CLARK

April Fool's Day has gone into a galloping decline, all in a generation of two. Around 1900, the school system began to ink well first thing in the morning without taking the most elaborate precautions. Fathers in families feared to get out of bed in the morning. And when they did get up, they had to walk as carefully as a cat on a strange trap while they ventured to shave and dress. Past the age of 10, nobody trusted them. Bathroom wall cabinets, when opened, had all-night imprisoned cats jump out of them, with a cascade of bottles and jars. Breakfast consisted of exploding boiled eggs and toast buttered with axle grease. In the streets, it was no better. Old hats, with bricks concealed under them, for foolish grown men to kick; and a man, in 1900, was not grown unless he would kick it on April Fool's Day.

It was not a day confined to children and fathers alone; down town, at business, it was a day for taking liberties with those in authority; a day for revealing if not for removing the stuffing of shirts.

A lot of planning and scheming preceded All Fool's Day. It was a special day of the year like Christmas, New Years, St. Valentine's Day, St. Patrick's Day, Easter, Mother's Day, Dominion Day.

What is the reason for the decline of April Fool's Day? The first two generations have given a lot to account for to history. Two world wars, and the social and political upheavals, families, depressions.

Despite all this, Christmas Day, St. Valentine's, Mother's Day, Easter have survived. But in an age of unparalleled folly, All Fool's Day! As our generation so wisely puts it, there is no percentage in it.

Mackenzie's Column:

Spiritual Thread Runs Through Churchill Speech

(Editor's note: This column is presented as an indication of American reaction to major world events.)

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press News Analyst

Winston Churchill always can be depended on in his speech-making to give us a thought which lifts the reputation of being one of the all-time masters of the English language.

The old maestro's address at the convocation of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Boston Thursday night dwelled on the fluency of the Churchillian genius, both in phrase and in content.

An outstanding quality of Churchill's address is that they don't need explanation, and this column has no intention of embarking on elucidation. Anyway, you have read his speech in your newspapers and have heard it on the air.

Undoubtedly you noted his declaration that "thirteen men in the Kremlin" are thinking of the rule of the world." You heard him make the interesting observation that it is only the atomic bomb which has stayed Russia from bombardment. You heard him describe the perils of the Red drive in Asia. And then the quotidiens: "War is not inevitable," but "we must not abandon hope or patience."

Strong Spiritual Thread

Those are among the highlights of his speech, but there is also throughout a strong spiritual thread which impressed me greatly, perhaps because I believe in it myself. Churchill's countering such emphasis in previous Churchillian speeches.

I mention this because it reveals a side of Churchill with which I believe few are familiar. Churchill is said by doctors who have known him for years to have deep religious convictions. He makes frequent references to the power of God, and his spiritual beliefs are said to have given him the strength to endure his tremendous burden during those awful days when Britain was fighting for its very life against the Hitlerian attack.

Not Ghost Writers

Here's another item about Churchill: He prepares his own speeches. No ghost writers for him. Actually (as an English friend told me) Churchill dictated Thursday night's long speech to his stenographer, and when it was typed he manhandled it and put it into final shape.

Of course, this doesn't leave the matter there. He rehearses his speeches, and I believe I'm correct in the way he wants it. When I was doing broadcasts from London it was understood in press circles that Churchill used to rehearse his speeches in the bath tub, with the drug antabus attained "social recovery." The drug has the effect of making a person unable to drink alcohol without distress.

MANY ALCOHOLIC CURES

Chicago, April 1 (AP)—Dr. Erik Jacobsen and Dr. O. Martensen-Larsen, both of Denmark, in addressing the 1949 convention of the American Medical Association, declared that 52 of 80 alcoholics treated with the drug antabus attained "social recovery." The drug has the effect of making a person unable to drink alcohol without distress.

USING ARMORED CAR

Detroit, April 1 (AP)—Walter Reuther, president of the United Automobile Workers (C.I.O.), who was shot in the arm last year by an unknown assailant, now is riding in a $12,000 armored car with bullet-proof windows, union officers said. They did not say who ordered at the insistence of union leaders but "Reuther himself did not want it."

Trouble With Some Reports

Editor,
Ontario Intelligencer,
Reference made in the report of Council meeting held March 28, regarding basement levels on Crescent Ave. and Bridge St., Mayor Storey, confirmed by Alderman Armstrong to the effect that the cause of sewer was being installed on McDonald Ave. and Bridge St., and there would be low drainage, and to go ahead and excavate on a standard basis. The house in question were built 3½ feet below ground level which is one foot higher than standard level.

The first time I was able to contact Gore and Storrie re sewer levels, after my basements and foundations had been erected, I spoke to Gore and Storrie's resident engineer about the height of the manhole in Crestview Ave., and Bertram Boulevard and was advised that the firm of Gore and Storrie were in charge of the sewer installations. He impressed on me the fact that the sewer would be low enough to drain all houses in the area.

I would be pleased to appear before Council at the next meeting and give further information to show the error was due to levels on Crescent Ave. and Bertram Blvd., south to Bridge St.

Strength for the Day

DR. EARL L. DOUGLASS

THE REALMS OF GOLD

Many people, bored with life and unhappy, are missing a great source of pleasure close at hand. Looking exclusively around, such persons desire perhaps to travel—but cannot afford it; to play tennis—but have not the time or facilities; to lead adventurous lives — but lack opportunity; or to be distinguished leaders — but are unqualified. Yet those who like to read may enjoy all these things, in a sense, and many more, too.

No actual traveller in a single lifetime could possibly visit every place of which authors have written, nor journey into the past and future, as well as into the imaginary worlds of books. Accounts of the great athletic events of history and literature bring to the fireside a variety of sports he could not witness in all the stadiums of the world. Books are crammed with stories of thrilling adventures by sea and land, and underworld, the high seas, the jungles, the battlefield. Hitherto unbiographies relive the triumphs or tragedies of the great figures of every age.

Nor should reading be scorned as an idle pastime, for through it the reader may increase his knowledge of himself and of the world around him. The companionship of the greatest philosophers, religious leaders, teachers, and scientists is no further away than the nearest library. The wealth of the ages is there for all who will turn the pages.

Dr. Lewis J. Silvers designed the treatment mask expressly for physicians who treat nose and throat conditions that attach it to the headband. It is more comfortable to wear, more efficient and less obvious in appearance than the old fashioned gauze mask so dear to the heart of the surgeon in the movies. It's as valuable a protection for the dentist and his patient, for the oculist and his patient and for the optician and his customer as it is for the nose and throat specialist and his patient. It is not meant that the patient or customer need wear a mask during a dentistry, ophthalmic or optician—provided the doctor always wears his when at work.

Other workers who should never leave off their masks when at work are cashiers, ticket-sellers, barbers, hair dressers, manicures, beauticians and saleswomen who transact business over or on the counter. If spray droplets were purple they'd wear their masks, all right!

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Alfalfa Tea

Is there any medical value in alfalfa tea or alfalfa seed tea? (W. C.)

Answer—No.

Worm Symptoms

I know I have worms because I grit my teeth a lot nights and I am awfully nervous all the time. Sometimes I can feel the worms moving in my stomach. (R. A.)

Answer—Well, grit with Bisnell! Many who have worms never have any such symptoms. Many who have no worms have such symptoms. Send twenty-five cents and stamped self addressed envelope and ask in writing (without a slipping) for booklet Unbidden Guests. It deals with round worms, pin worms, tapeworms, trichina worms and other parasites and pests.

Shocking

Please send directions for making the dry-cell electric shock box to cure my two sons (6 and 8) of bed-wetting. (Mrs. W.)

Answer—I know of no such. Send stamped self addressed envelope and ask for booklet on the Bed-Wetting Habit.

Migraine from Chocolate

Whenever mother eats chocolate she has a migraine headache for days. (M. T. McB.)

Answer—Well, gosh. All heck-lock, mother, why do you persist in eating chocolate? Send stamped self addressed envelope and ask in writing (a slipping will not suffice) for pamphlet Why Have Headache?

NON-CONFIDENCE

Other speakers included Hon. Earl Rowe (PC-Dufferin-Simcoe), Rev. Dan McIvor (Lt-Col William), F. S. Zaplitny (CCF-Winnipeg), Maurice Manulik (Ukrainian-Canadian) and Arthur Ross (PC-Stormont).

In the opening stages, External Affairs Minister Pearson said he is attending a meeting from the Canadian Embassy at Washington during election of three Liberal candidates by United States officials from the so-called world peace conference in New York last week-end.

Revenue Minister McCann disclosed that farmers and shopkeepers now may hire their own children for work on their farms, pay them wages and deduct the payments from their gross income for income tax purposes.

Prime Minister St. Laurent promised to refer to Mr. Pearson a request by E. G. McCullough (CCF-Assiniboia) that Canada protest to the United Nations against religious persecution in Spain.

The Senate gave unanimous approval to the principle of the North Atlantic Treaty, endorsing it without a dissenting vote.

Claims Big Gaps

In the Commons, Mr. Macdonald (CCF-Vancouver East) conservative party did not object to the increase in costs as such but it did object that the government withheld the tax relief until the eve of an election and for a most improper purpose."

But there were "big" gaps in the budget which brought no benefit whatever to the farmer or for the non-taxed portion of the population which had to go on paying a high cost of living. By making the reductions retroactive to Jan. 1, Finance Minister Abbott had recognized that he "must answer the signal of distress from the party and put cash on the barrelhead."

He said a "last hope" budget which concentrated on the coming election. The needs of those single persons who earned between $1,000 and $1,250 a year and the married people whose income ranged from $2,000 to $2,500 had been ignored. The exemptions for children, should have been boosted by $200 instead of $50.

Touching on trade, he said the government had made "no real statement" on the gravity of that situation and had given no indication of constructive action.

Mr. Coldwell termed the budget a "typical, traditional capitalist budget" which offered tax reductions for the masses of the voters but actually gave the main benefits to the wealthy.

He aimed his main criticism at the continuation of the eight-per-cent sales tax because, he said, it hit the farmers and the poor hardest. At the same time, the budget failed to outline any plan to meet future problems and failed to lay the groundwork for an integrated system of social security.

Based on Requirements

High prices and inflation, which still were continuing, would have a "disastrous" effect on pensioners and others who had to struggle along on low fixed incomes.

The budget was based on "a mixture of electoral requirements of the Liberal party." It had been governed by the demands of 'big business' and 'powerful sections' of the press.

As for trade, the government was not following the policies necessary to stimulate two - way trade with the United Kingdom and other foreign markets necessary to absorb Canadian surpluses.

Mr. Low hammered at "hidden" taxes, such as the sales tax, and said they pyramided the cost of living and added to inflation. If the government could not abolish them, it could at least increase old-age pensions and provide subsidies for bread, milk and other essential foods.

By retaining the hidden taxes, the government simply was playing into the hands of the communists since the budget did not provide "one particle of considering for the poor . . . All the consideration was for the middle and upper income groups.

He criticized federal tax collectors in Western Canada and said they had frightened hundreds of farmers and caused bitter resentment through their methods of "snooping around."

Urged to Attend

Mr. Rowe urged Mr. St. Laurent to attend the forthcoming Conference of Commonwealth Prime Ministers in London instead of sending a substitute.

Mr. Pearson—in his stead. He should ask the other Prime Ministers what their future trade policies would be and determine whether United Kingdom trade agreements with countries behind the Iron Curtain would cut off future Canadian markets.

Mr. Rose opened an attack on government trading in wheat and said these policies had resulted in the loss of $148,000,000 for Canadian farmers since the war. At the same time, the government had lost many of Canada's best agricultural markets.

Mr. Marquis said it had been difficult for the government to reduce taxes in the past and appealed to all parties to forget their political beliefs and join in a fight against "subversive powers." They should not make a "political tool" of the campaign against Communism.

Mr. Zaplitny estimated that more than 50 per cent of Canadians who paid no income tax actually would be injured by the budget. They should suffer through the rise in the cost of living that would result from the removal of the wheat subsidy and other actions of the government. Let's, generally, were on the way up

Mr. McIvor said he doubted whether there was anyone who would not benefit from the budget. It was a "political" budget and a "dandy" because everyone benefited it pointed out the wishes of the people.

Churchill rolled out in sonorous tones a blunt accusation that "thirteen men in the Kremlin . . . aising at the rule of the world" had "self-preservation" as the root of their "sinister and malignant policy."

"The largest army in the world," Churchill said, "is in the hands of a government with unlimited Imperialist expansion, as no Czar or Kaiser had ever done."

Should Practise Vigilance

And 74-year-old former prime minister of Britain said that the question, "is time on our side?" was "not a question that can be answered within strict limits."

"We have certainly not an unlimited period of time before a settlement should be achieved.

The utmost vigilance should be practised, but I do not think myself that violent or precipitate action should be taken now"

Churchill repeatedly asserted that "we have no hostility to the Russian people," adding:

"We seek nothing from Russia but goodwill and fair play."

He hailed the Marshall plan, the "new unity in western Europe, and the Atlantic pact as demonstrating a "tremendous change in our outlook and policy toward the salvation of the world."

Churchill said that because of was Kremlin policies, relations between Soviet Russia and the rest of the world were "without precedent in history."

U.S. Key of Deliverance

"Measures and counter-measures have been taken on many occasions which in any previous period could only have meant armed conflict," he added.

Now, the United Nations "remains a key of deliverance."

But the U.N. "has so far been rent and distracted by the antagonisms of Soviet Russia, and by the fundamental schism which has opened between communism and the rest of mankind.

"But we must not despair.

"We must preserve, and if the gulf continues to widen, we must make sure that the cause of freedom is defended by all the resources of combined forethought and superior science.

"Here lies the best hope of averting a third world struggle, and is a means of coming through it without being enslaved or destroyed."

LEGISLATURE

Public galleries were crowded Thursday night in expectation that the filibuster which the C. C. F. started Wednesday night against the charitable foundations bill would be taken up again. But the night sitting was given over to study of estimates of the lands department and the reform institutions department.

Solved Problem

Lands Minister Scott, introducing his estimates, said his department had solved the problem of producing rain over forest fires by bombarding clouds with dry ice. But it still is necessary to have the right kind of clouds over fire areas.

Mr. Scott also said Ontario is gradually abandoning the lookout tower system of spotting forest fires in favor of aerial fire detection. Use of planes in finding fires is a United States idea and Ontario Fire Rangers have found it a good one.* Flying Rangers spot smokes faster than do lookouts on the ground.

For the first time within memory of Maj. Alex Lewis, clerk of the Legislature, there was singing Thursday night on the floor of the House. Members sang "O Canada" and "God Save the King" to celebrate the entry of Newfoundland into Confederation. Speaker M. C. Davies read a special prayer for Newfoundland and the House gave three cheers for Canada's new province.

Opposition members unsuccessfully tried every trick in the book — and some that were not — to prevent the government's margarine bill becoming law.

They members voted against their party in an attempt to defeat third reading of the bill which limits to 1.6 degrees the amount of yellow coloring in margarine.

Amendment Defeated

A.A. MacLeod (Lab. Prog. Toronto Riverdale) moved amendment that the bill should not be given third reading for six months. This would have the effect of killing the bill since it could not be passed before the end of the current session.

Two Liberal members — T. W. Walker (Welland) and G. T. Gordon (Dominion) — voted with the Labor-Progressives in support of the amendment. It was defeated 75-4.

Leslie Wismer (CCF Toronto Riverdale) moved a further amendment that the section dealing with color be stricken from the bill and that margarine coloring be unlimited. The speaker again ruled this amendment out of order.

Mr. Gordon and Mr. Walker again voted against their party and with C.C.F. and Labor-Progressive members. The ruling was upheld 56 to 23.

There was no division on the motion to give the bill third reading. The standing in the 90-seat legislature is Progressive-Conservatives 51, CCF 21, Liberal 14, Labor Progressive 3. There are two vacancies.

Ratify Agreement

The House in committee passed a bill to ratify agreements between the province, Ontario Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company, Steep Rock Mines Ltd., and the Hydro Commission to ensure full development of the rich iron ore properties at Steep Rock Lake in the Lakehead area.

Mr. Frost told the House the $10,000,000 equity which the United States government has in the mines should be wiped out within 10 years. By that time only 30,000,000 tons or 1-10th of the estimated potential will have been mined.

Opposition members had expressed the fear that the development would eventually pass out of Canadian hands.

During the morning sitting the House unanimously voted to set a two-week limit on the period during which producers and distributors of milk may bargain collectively. After that time, if an agreement has not been reached the matter goes to the Ontario Milk Control Board for arbitration.

Change Possible In Attitude Of United Nations

By NORMAN ALTSTEDTER

Lake Success, N.Y., March 31—(CP)—A change is possible in the attitude of the United Nations toward Spain.

The majority of the World Peace Congress's 36 members have given the Franco regime the diplomatic cold shoulder for more than three years—since a general assembly resolution barred Spain from membership and recommended withdrawal of embassies.

Now some Latin-American countries are reported planning to send diplomatic missions back when opens in New York April 5 to the U.N. diplomatic talks.

The United States has indicated she is warming to the idea of re-establishing normal relations with Spain.

Britain and the United States withdrew their ambassadors at U.N.'s behest and they are now presented by lesser officials.

Spokesmen for the British delegation to U.N. said Britain will abstain from voting if the subject comes up.

In 1947, Canada reaffirmed dislike of the Franco regime but opposed the move to tighten a ban against the U.N.'s specialized agencies. The Dominion voted last June with the Security Council majority which decided that no new facts about domination of Franco, Spain would justify further consideration.

Eat More Honey

By KAY REX
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, April 11. (CP)—This week we're going to talk about sweet stuff—such as honey.

There's plenty of it on the market and in the stores these days —hence another should have no excuse to offer when the youngsters come begging for a slice of bread and honey.

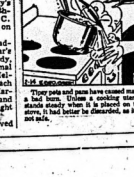
While most persons prefer the mild clear-as-crystal strained honey nevertheless there are some who really enjoy the pungent buckwheat and coarse-flavored honey.

The housewife should remember to keep her honey at room temperature and in a dry place. Never put it in the refrigerator. Home economists of the consumer section, Dominion department of agriculture, have come up with a couple of recipes for honey "sweets".

Honey – Almond Balls—Ingredients: four squares unsweetened chocolate; one-half cup liquid honey; one-quarter teaspoon cinnamon one-eighth teaspoon salt; one-half cup finely ground blanched almonds.

Melt chocolate over hot water, add honey, cinnamon and salt. Beat well, add almonds. Chill until firm enough to handle. Form into small balls about one inch in diameter. Roll balls in icing sugar or cocoanut. Yield: 30 balls.

Popcorn Balls — Ingredients: one cup honey; one cup sugar; one-half cup water; one teaspoon salt; one-half cup finely ground blanched almonds.



Combine honey, sugar, water and salt in saucepan. Place over low heat, stirring until mixture begins to boil. Cook to the firm ball stage. Remove from heat. Add vanilla and stir only to blend well. Pour slowly over three quarts popped corn in large bowl. Lightly grease hands and press corn into balls. Wrap in waxed paper.

Cabbage, Pineapple Salad

Those non-cabbage-eaters in the family might be persuaded to try the leafy vegetable if it is prepared as a Cabbage and Pineapple Salad.

Ingredients: three cups shredded cabbage; one teaspoon salt; three-quarters cup mayonnaise; one head lettuce; one cup sliced pineapple.

Soak cabbage in cold water until crisp; drain, mix with salt and half of the dressings. Pile lightly on a crisp lettuce leaf and then place halves of pineapple rings in vertical position to hold cabbage on plate. Top with rest of mayonnaise to which three tablespoons of chopped pimento have been added.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BECKMAN

A good hint for good telephone manners

When you answer the telephone "open the telephone door" with as pleasant a grace as you open the door of your home. The way you say your "Hello" is important, and your tone of voice should make your telephone-caller feel your friendly attitude, the friendly attitude you would show if you met them face to face.

All food served at guest's left

Dear Mrs. Beckman:

It has always been my custom to have food served from the left and removed from the right. Recently I was told that I should always have food served from the right. Am I right in feeling as humiliated as I do feel?

W. Z.

No . . . the person who told you that food should be served from the right is absolutely wrong. For it is the first and most important rule for all serving at the dining-room table that all food should be offered to the guest at his left. . . . this, obviously, is for the greatest convenience of the guest.

Used plates are customarily taken away from the right of the guest, although, since there is in this case no question of the guest's convenience, they may be removed from the right.

Black Skewers

Dear Mrs. Beckman:

(1) When should a stork shower be given . . . before or after the baby's birth? (2) Should any special entertainment be planned? (3) Kind of refreshments, if any? (4) What is the usual hour for a shower, and how long should it last?

R. C.

(1) In some localities it is the custom to have the stork shower before the baby is born; in others it is considered a better idea to give the shower within a few weeks after the arrival of the baby. Quite often . . . and it is a very sensible plan . . . if there is any question about the time for the shower, a very intimate friend of the mother is delegated to try to find out which time would be more acceptable. (2) Usually no special entertainment is planned for there are so many gifts to be opened and oh'd and ah'd about, much chatting to be done by the group of intimate friends, and refreshments to be served. However, if bridge or any other game is a 'must' for a party in this group, it may be planned for. (3) Yes, indeed, some kind of refreshments . . . a simple tea-menu, usually . . . . follows the afternoon shower; or a luncheon may precede it. (4) Any hour in the afternoon convenient to the group is a suitable hour . . . customarily, afternoon convenient to the group is a suitable hour . . . . customarily, it's from three to five, or three to six.

Only Maid of Honor, Two Flower Girls

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My sister is to be married soon and she has asked me to ask you if it would be proper to have only a maid of honor and two flower girls in her bridal party.

A. T.

Yes, this is proper. Then the processional: first, the ushers, two by two; next, the maid of honor, alone; next, the two flower girls, together; last, the bride and her father.

First names proper on these place Cards

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am planning the seating arrangement and all other details for my bridal table at my wedding next month. I am wondering whether it is necessary to follow the formal form for the place cards writing the names with the titles before them. This seems so terribly formal for these intimat friends in our wedding party.

Claire L.

I agree with you that the use of the formal names on these cards would seem unattractively stiff; it is quite customary to use the first names on these place cards at the bride's table . . . even nicknames are often used.

Little Weight Gains Add Up

An exercise that is beneficial is correct posture is done here by Movie Star Mona Freeman. Try lying torso, she tries to touch knee with elbow

By HELEN FOLLETT

MOVIE stars watch their weight, down to a matter of ounces. Beauty of face and figure is their stock in trade. The average woman is mindful of the state of her complexion, hairdo and finger nails but a few added pounds may not worry her. If so, she lacks foresight. Once the adipose padding appears it can increase with considerable rapidity. The more she has of it the harder it is to get rid of it. Catch it young. That should be the slogan of every woman who is edging into her forties.

Fats, starches and sweets must be cut down, and no feeling. Tea and coffee should be taken clear. There is an endless variety of non-fattening foods—lean meats poultry, fish, vegetables that grow above ground, fresh fruit, buttermilk. Bouillion and clam broth are nourishing. Meals be taken between meals if Plumpie fancies she is not getting enough groceries.

A little exercise every day will help along the campaign toward slenderness. To slim down the waist line, sit on the floor, feet apart. Lift the hands high, stretching the body at the mid section. Touch the toes of one foot with both hands. Six times to the right, six to the, left and repeat. Pause now and then to sit erect, hands on hips, and to take long, deep breaths.

The trouble with reducing is that results are expected too quickly. Fat cells are a long time forming; they are not going to go into a state of dissolution in a hurry.

Take measurements. In four weeks, measure again. If your waistline has lost even one fourth inch, good; you can know that you are on your way toward normalcy.

Limit sleep each night to seven hours. No cat naps during the day. The lady who loves her soft cushions is one who takes on the over-curves. Activity is law of life. All of us are better off by having plenty of it.

Woman With Year To Live Seeking Help of Friends

Oklahoma City, April 1 — (CP) —A widow's humble plea is being answered by sympathetic Americans — how best to spend $10,000 before death knocks on her door, probably within a year.

Advice is rolling in by letter, telegram, telephone and through radio.

Her name is — Mrs. Heart, we will say. She is 51 and a retired Oklahoma city business woman. She was told by a physician:

"You have but a year. Your heart condition will prove fatal in 12 months."

Now Mrs. Heart doesn't know what to do. That's why she has asked for help.

"I just know that somebody — somewhere," she says, "will have a better idea than I."

And folks are offering her their thoughts.

"Make a heap of friends," one man wrote. "Don't plan each day. Just take the time and try and live with and for other people, and you'll be happy."

That and thousands of other words of advice poured in for her at the Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman Thursday. Mrs. Heart bound the newspaper to keep her address secret. She said she knew newspapers sometimes had specialists who gave advice to those in trouble.

Only a few of those writing seemed eager to help her spend her $10,000. Most of them proposed the help others — the poor, the lame, the under-privileged.

After her husband died, Mrs. Heart entered business, built a sizable estate, then retired eight years ago.

"I worked hard for 17 years," she says. "I sacrificed because I wanted a little security when I got older. Now I don't know what to do."

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

For Sallow Skin

It is a mistake for the girl with a sallow skin to put too much faith in cosmetics. They will do much for others, but not for her. Here is an inside beautifying job. The sallow complexion, while no good-looks bargain, isn't as much of a grief as it was in the days of the straw and roses complexion. And it can be camouflaged by the right kind of make-up.

The cause may be a diet deficiency. The day should start with a glass of unsweetened lemonade or a glass of tomato juice. Fruits and vegetables should form a large part of the diet especially green salads. Individuals who are demon tea or coffee drinkers are likely to have yellow complexions. Buttermilk is a good substitute—not as far as the palate is concerned, perhaps, but for the digestive motors. Carrots and yellow turnips should never be eaten. Yellow vegetables seem to have an unfavorable effect upon the skin that is inclined to be sallow.

Take plenty of water, if you belong to this class of beauty wellers. All the avenues of elimination must function normally. The skin will do its work better if there is a daily bath, plenty of friction with a well-soaped, heavily-bristled brush. Water will assist the kidneys; fruits will stimulate the intestinal tract; deep breathing will air-wash the lungs.

If the skin is yellow, one should never select rouge or lipstick in which the rose tints verge on purple. Let them rather tend toward orange, and don't use too much.

The selection of a powder should be no casual matter

The same rule applies to dress. Coral pinks are better than deep reds. Black which is, always fashionable, will be found better than navy blue. Green of any shade is taboo. Is is difficult color to wear anyway—especially cold, definite greens. Grey, unless it is done grey, is doubtful.

Soft browns are pleasing and flattering. Beige is too near the color of the skin to offer a contrast. French blue is a safe selection, as is it for blonde, brunettes and red heads. It is a restful color, a cheerful and youthful one. It should be more popular than it is.

Coming back to the question of make-up; the selection of a powder should be no casual matter. Two shades, one light, one deeper, nearly all will be improved by the use of a rachella powder, slightly darker than the skin, or a blend of rachella and flesh that forms a color suggestive of the petals of a tea-rose. When this is used, rouge can be omitted from the facial scenery. But don't forget; the main thing is diet and normal functioning of the avenues of elimination.

Without those hygienic measures there is likely to be little improvement.

ADVICE to the LOVELORN

By HEATHCOTE FAIRFAX

Letters and Answers

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of 17 and like a boy 19 very much. I have known him for a number of years, ever since he lived on my block when we were younger. Since then he has moved, and his father has died.

He has two younger brothers, and being the oldest his mother ties him down. I admit he does owe his mother something, but he can never plan things ahead of time because his mother may want him to do something. When ever he does ask me out any place I go.

My mother says I'm very silly to jump any time he asks me to go anywhere. She knows I like him, but insists I am too young to know who I like. Should I go with him on such short notice?

"Puzzled"

Dear "Puzzled":

I don't see any reason why you shouldn't go out with this boy any time you want to. If he is as tied down as you say, it's probably impossible for him to give you very much advance notice about dates. It's too bad he can not discuss the thing with his mother, and get her to be a little more comfortable about plans he might like to make. But as long as you and this boy understand the situation there's no need for you to be upstage about him. If he were a boy who was taking his out every night, and you felt he was calling you up at the last moment as a stand-in for somebody who had broken a date, it would be a different matter. But you know this is not so with this particular boy. So stop worrying about it and do as you please.

* * *

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am to be married next month and have selected as best man my cousin who has been more like my brother since I have an older brother, but did not choose him as I see very little of him and he is almost a stranger to me.

My mother tells me that I have not done right, and that I should ask my brother. I am willing to ask him as a favor, but she insists that this would not be proper.

I have agreed to abide by your decision. Please tell me what to do.

"Mr. Alter Mixup"

Dear "Mr. Alter Mixup":

My own feeling is that you should choose whoever you like for your best man, and it certainly should be someone who has been close to you, and who you would feel happiest about having right beside you at your wedding. There is no convention that says the best man has to be a relative.

Sunday School Lesson of the Week

The Dividends of Suffering

By ROY L. SMITH

As far back as we are able to trace the thinking of men we find ancient souls asking an extremely difficult question: "Why do men suffer?"

One of the major tasks of modern science is that of reducing the amount of suffering in the world. It is for that purpose that we have perfected labor saving devices, improved our healing arts techniques, and developed whole realms like psychiatry and public sanitation.

The Sunday School lesson for April 3: "Turning Toward the Cross." Mark 8:27-9:1, 31-34; Luke 9:20-26, 51.

And yet suffering continues among us. It is almost as if with each new scientific discovery or invention we develop new diseases to accompaniments. The pressure of modern life has resulted in an entire catalog of nervous and mental ailments alone.

The Fact of Suffering

It does not attempt to underestimate it, evade it, laugh it off or explain it away. It simply acknowledges it for what it really is—a part of life.

The week's lesson is a study in the attitude Jesus Himself took toward suffering. The Scriptures make it very plain that He foresaw the terrible experience that was awaiting Him. He warned His disciples so precisely and so vividly that they found it hard to believe Him. At times it sounds as if He were actually trying to convince Himself that death by crucifixion did not frighten Him.

The test of Jesus' philosophy and faith began when He faced the prospect of suffering. The shouting crowds, the applause of the multitudes, the assurances of His friends, His awareness of His own unique nature—none of these things were sufficient to blind Him to the terrible fact that He was to suffer and to die.

Going Out to Meet It

One has the feeling as one reads this week's scripture that Jesus went out deliberately and resolutely to meet suffering. It is not easy to escape the feeling that He must have faced again the temptation. He met on the earlier mountain, when the tempter urged Him to save Himself by turning stones into bread. In this case a miracle performed on His own behalf might have made it possible for Him to by-pass the cross.

But to have taken some easy way would have been to fail man. The plain person among us has no magic by which He can evade suffering, and because Jesus shared our humanity in all its phases He walked directly up to suffering and dared it to do its worst.

He Was Fortified

Jesus of Nazareth seems to have faced it at all times confident that He was under the watchful care and love of God. He refused to believe anything could happen to Him which would be more than God could handle.

It was His faith in His Heavenly Father that carried Him through the experience of the cross.

In the first place, He refused to believe this world had gotten out of hand. God was still its master.

In the second place, He refused to believe that anything could alienate the love of God. He had no fear of ever drifting beyond His love and care.

Nothing in the Scripture indicates that He attempted to reason the situation out. He did not depend upon logic.

Instead, He "faithed His way through."

The Way Faith Works

Faith, as Jesus employed it, was not a blind and fatalistic acceptance of life as something that could not be escaped. Instead, it meant a calm acceptance of the inevitables of life as though they were some good thing from the hand of God which contained priceless benefit if they could be rightly used.

Faith to Jesus meant a bold and firm way of sticking out to life as though it might be expected to work. And in Jesus' case it did work. Even His crucifixion proved to be a contribution to His life's ministry. Without the cross the world would probably never have heard of Jesus of Nazareth. Certainly it would never have accepted Him as Lord. Only one who has mastered trouble can hope to be considered a much exalted place in the hearts of men.

Prince Philip Looking Forward To New Home

By NORMAN CRIBBINS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, (CP) — Time and again the Duke of Edinburgh remarks to friends: "I'm looking forward to having a home at last . . . I've never really had one."

For as long as he can remember Prince Philip has been at boarding or naval establishments spending his vacations with relatives and friends.

Now at last he and Princess Elizabeth are counting the days until they can move into Clarence House, Regent Street and have a home of their own after 16 months of married life.

Both have given much time and thought to planning the move —more complicated than even a normal royal "moving" because their furniture has never been under one roof before.

The bulk of the future contents of Clarence House has been kept in commercial storage depositories in London. Consequently the young couple have had to furnish their house on paper. Scale plans of the house were supplied by architects while detailed lists were made of all their furniture and household possessions.

Philip says they have decided where everything is to go and every week or so they visit the new house to see how their plans will work out.

Like the royal couples, Elizabeth and Philip have to fix standard of living according to their income—and some believe Clarence House will be the most economical run home ever occupied by an heir to the throne.

The Duke has no income beyond his naval pay and the Princess has no vast fortune either. The £50,000 ($200,000) a year which the state pays Elizabeth and her family sounds plenty but considering their financial obligations it isn't really so much.

Only things they will get free of charge are rent, rates, repairs to Clarence House and an income tax rebate on their official expenses.

Elizabeth plans to run the house with about 30 servants—a third of the staff employed by the previous Duchess of Edinburgh.

Drew Withdraws Suit Against Star

Toronto, April 1 (CP)—George Drew's $100,000 "Gestapo" libel suit against the Toronto Star was withdrawn Thursday.

Mr. Drew, national leader of the Progressive Conservative party, started action in 1945. It arose from editorials in the Star during the 1945 provincial election campaign commenting on claims by K.B. Jolliffe, Ontario C.C.F. leader, that Mr. Drew, then Premier of Ontario, maintained a "political gestapo" or secret police force.

A Royal Commission found the Jolliffe accusations groundless. At the original trial of Mr. Drew's action, a jury returned a verdict of "no libel" and Mr. Justice D.P. Kelly dismissed the action. Court of Appeal reviewed a new trial on grounds of misdirection of the trial jury.

The Star then appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada to block the new trial. The Supreme Court decided last October that the trial could proceed.

Since the action was a civil one, it could be withdrawn from the courts at any time.

Two-Way Trade Stream Turning Into a Flood

Coutts, Alta, April 1 (CP)—The two way trade stream through this small Canadian town on the United States border is turning into a flood.

Customs officials haven't seen anything like it.

Increased development of Alberta oil fields has sent enormous truck convoys of machinery and drilling equipment flowing through the primary port of entry to Alberta from the United States. The U.S. demand for Alberta sheep and cattle and other produce also has kept the rear door open on the other side.

But this is only one phase of the busy life of the 25 customs men and five immigration officers.

An average of nine automobiles carrying Canadian passengers were cleared every hour at Coutts during 1948. Almost 50,000 autos passed through the post in the one year.

With present facilities inadequate officials have had to take over an old warehouse and part of a C.P.R. office for additional office space.

Recognizing the growing importance of Coutts as a port of entry, the federal government already has appropriated $140,000 for a customs and immigration terminal.

The "import value" of shipments cleared through Coutts from Montana has reflected the great advances made in recent years by Alberta industries. In 1945 the import value was only $3,208,000. Last year it jumped to $16,252,000.

Established in 1936 as a full-fledged port of entry from Montana, Coutts is about 70 miles by road from Lethbridge and lies along the main arterial highway from Guatemala in South America to Fairbanks, Alaska.

BCI Hoopsters Edge Trenton By 28-24 Count

By J. F.

The B.C.I. junior basketballers rang down the curtain on another successful season in the C.O.S.S.A. competition with a thrilling 28-24 triumph over Trenton High School in B.C.I. on Thursday. The Collegians ended their league schedule with the enviable record of nine wins and one defeat.

Although the game meant nothing to Trenton as far as the coveted trip to Toronto was concerned, the visitors strived valiantly to upset the applecart, and their shooting Collegians, as they battled uphill during most of the thirty-two minutes. B.C.I. took an 8-5 lead at the quarter, and in the second frame, it looked as if the home squad would make a runaway of the contest, as they stretched the lead to 15-8. Trenton grew stronger in the third frame, but they were still six points down at the three-quarter mark.

In the final eight minutes, the Trentonians put on a spirited drive, and tied the score 22-22 with three minutes left in the game. But in their eagerness to score, Trenton failed to spot Keith Judd open near the visitors' basket. Keith took a long pass and dropped in the basket with mark-ers just five second after Trenton had deadlocked the count. The visiting team lost most of its sting and B.C.I. netted two field goals to one by Trenton before the final whistle.

Meeker and Faulkner were again the big guns for Belleville with eight and seven points respectively.

Hanson, inspired the fierce Trenton attack with eight points. Frank Berry was the prominent for the visitors with six points.

The teams:

B.C.I.—McClay (8), Duwett (4), Muirhead (3), Scrymgeour (1), Morris, Cameron (2), Howe, Faulkner (7), Dolan (2), Ewald, Meeker (5), Judd (2).

Trenton—H. S.: Brown (2), Hannah (6), F. Harry (6), G. Harry (7), Gibson, Hanson (8), Hall, Campsey (3), Jeffrey. Total 34.

	1st	2nd	3rd	4th	final
B.C.I.	8	7	7	6	28

Short Circuits Win Mixed Commercial Loop

At the Bowl-O-Drome this week the teams of the Mixed Commercial finished the last scheduled games. First place was definitely decided last week when the "Short Circuits" took a lead which could not be overcome by the trailing teams. The remaining teams however, battled hard to gain what they could off of there opponents resulting in some very good scores. The standing high triple held by Rose Hall was beaten by Joe Dunphy with a three string of 829. Rose came close to beating his high triple 36 but was short seven pins bowling 793. Fred Clarke held right behind him with 800 for his three string. Norm MacDonald with a triple of 890 was high for the ladies in the three string brackets also beating the best the men could total (829). Nora also holds ladies' high single with 387. Lam Carson has the possession of men's high single with a 361 score. Ladies' high average M. Fairbairn 217; men's high average R. Jones 219, F. Clarke 217.

Last Half

Short Circuits 46; Live Wires 37; Modern No 1 35; Whiz Bangs 35; K.T.A.'s 29; Modern No. 2 29; Hy Rollers 28; Bombers 27; Lucky Strikers 26; Power Pins 20; C.D.S. Nos. 2 & 3 19; C.D.S. No. 1 18; C.D.S No 2 11; Lectrolites 1

Ladies' high single for the night 286, D. Moorman; high triple for the night 651, Dorothy Moorman. Men's high single 334, Joe Dunphy; high triple 829, Joe Dunphy.

Callaghan Ice Crowds Golfers In Major "A"

With one more night to play in the schedule, the Belleville Golf team leads the Major "A" League by a scant two points over the up-and-coming Callaghan's Ice crew. The former defeated the Golfers 4-3 at the Bowl-O-Drome weekly session last night to narrow the margin between the squads.

In other games York Trading defeated Electronics 7-0 with CNR turning back the Lawn Bowlers 5-2. Central Cigar 'Stogies' outshifted the Northern Electric by a 7-0 count.

The titular race will be between Golfers and Callaghan's ice team as far as the schedule is concerned. Then comes the playoffs. Golf leads with 66 points. Ice is next with 66; Central Cigar, 60; Northern Electric, 45; CNR, 43; York Trading, 41; Lawn Bowlers 28 and Electronics 24.

The scores:

MEET IN KNOCKOUT

Toronto, April 1 — (CP) — Eight basketball teams from Ontario secondary schools meet tonight in knockout competition for the Ontario interscholastic basketball championship.

Peterborough meets Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury tangles with Hamilton Westdale, Ottawa plays East York and Windsor faces Toronto Western Tech.

In an elimination game last night at Hamilton Westdale defeated Niagara Falls, 49-43 and in another Toronto Spring—Kiwi beat University of Toronto Schools, 43-38, and East York beat Central Commerce, 41-30.

PREPARING FOR ANNUAL SPRING FESTIVAL

A national capital parks employee in Washington, D.C., is shown as he sprayed hormone solution on the pink-and-white cherry blossoms at the tidal basin. The solution prevents the petals from falling for about 8 days, which means the blossoms will be out in all their glory for the annual festival weekend. Cherry blossom time in Washington is recognized as one of the most beautiful sights to behold.—Central Press Canadian.

Dr. Alf. Wilkes Heads Quinte Club Tennis

A meeting of the tennis executive of the Quinte Skating and Tennis Club was held at the club house, corner of Queen and Dufferin, on Tuesday evening, March 30. The meeting was called to make arrangements for the reopening of the tennis section for the coming season.

It was decided that the present executive would continue in office until the new season had got under way, when election of a slate for 1949 will be held. The executive is as follows: Chairman, Alf. Wilkes; Vice Chairman, Lea. Hagerman; Secretary, Jean Greene; Treasurer, Bruce McGregor; Membership, Mrs. Lea. Hagerman; Games Committee, Alec Cunningham, Madge Bowley; Grounds Committee, Walter Ives; Membership, Gladys Keough, Jean Greene.

It is anticipated that all four courts will be available for play by May 1st and that two courts will be lighted by that time thus enabling play to be carried on after dark.

There is reason to believe that it will be necessary to limit membership for this season and all prospective members are advised to obtain their membership tickets as soon as possible. Membership tickets may be obtained from any member of the executive.

The club is again intending to enter the Bay of Quinte Tennis League and there is a possibility that two teams will be entered this year.

PLANT MAKES NEWS

Niagara Falls, April 1 — (CP) — A rare Brazilian plant called the twelve Disciples plant made news when it blossomed Thursday at the home of Louis Lundy here. The plant's flower appears only once every 12 years and lasts for a day. Resembling an iris, the flower develops within 30 minutes from a bud on the end of a leaf.

HANGED FOR CRIME

Y Girls Hold Parents Night

Following closely on the heels of the successful gymnastic display of Boys' Department, the Y.M.C.A. a few weeks ago, the girls of the prep and junior divisions will in the performance on the Parents' Night being held in the association tonight. The pattern of marches, tumbling, gymnastics games and apparatus work will keep things moving along in rapid succession from the opening number at 7:30 p.m. Emphasis is not being placed on the expert but rather on the encouragement of as many participants as possible.

The leaders Jean Tilker, Joan Allen and Diane Clarke under the supervision of the director of physical education, Doug Eaton, have spent hours of careful preparation of their classes for this performance.

Parents will have an opportunity to meet together to consider phases and problems of child development with emphasis on emotional growth. Mr. N. J. Reid will give the leadership to this part of the program. Drummond C. McDonald of the "Y" staff and other committee persons will be present to keep things moving.

SHOULDN'T GIVE WORRY

$1 DEER SEEN

Dundalk, April 1 — (CP) — A herd of 31 deer was reported Thursday on the farm of William Mulhall, some 15 miles southwest of this Grey county village. It is believed high water drove them out of the bush.

Y To Conduct Learn-to-Swim Campaign

Dr. E. G. Kennedy recent appointed to the position of chairman of the physical department of the Y.M.C.A. has announced that in a recent survey conducted jointly by the Y.M.C.A. and the School Board 181 boys and girls in grades 6, 7, 8, lack the ability to swim. To help remedy the situation the Physical Committee of the Y.M.C.A., in conjunction with the Belleville School Board has authorized the Physical Director J. Douglas Estlo to conduct a free 'learn to swim' campaign during Easter week. The campaign is open to all boys and girls 10 years of age and over. Application forms are now available at the schools and the Y.M.C.A. At it is important that these applications be returned to the Y. before April 8th parents are urged to have them filled in promptly and returned to the schools.

A series of five lessons will be given each boy and girl during which the fundamentals of the art will be given. At the conclusion of the campaign a simple test will be given each pupil. Any boy or girl swimming 60 feet will be presented with a handsome award certificate.

Parents are urged to see that their children avail themselves of this opportunity of acquiring this necessary skill. With the advent of summer and the hours of swimming pleasure the necessity is more apparent. The Y.M.C.A. has long been a pioneer in the field of swimming and life saving with the established slogan "Every boy a swimmer, every swimmer a lifesaver."

MAN'S HEROIC

They had been overdue two weeks on their return trip by Fort Ballance when the R.C.M.P. chartered a plane at Fort Smith, north of Edmonton and began the search.

When sighted by bush pilot Jack Cameron, the men, suffering from cold and fatigue, were making a gruelling trek through the snow toward relining with three dogs and a toggogan.

Aboard the plane are fish nets, ammunition and other supplies badly needed by the Eskimos, 530 miles northwest of Churchill. The flying time is expected to take three weeks.

Eskimo children mangled by dogs at Port Harrison, Que., a tiny outpost on the shores of Hudson Bay, now are receiving treatment as the result of the mercy flight from Moose Factory, Ont., on James Bay.

The department of health have reported that Dr. B. H. Harper, aboard the aircraft, landed Thursday and prepared to treat the two children whose faces have been cut and torn by dogs set upon them in an Eskimo outpost 50 miles north of Port Harrison.

Dr. Harper will fly out the children, one a baby, and then the other seven years, for further treatment at either Timmins, Moose Factory or Toronto, if necessary.

FATHER WAS NOT AMUSED

Toronto, April 1 — (CP)—The two-year-old grandson of Lyon Hewson amused himself by tooting his father's automobile horn while his pop visited a beer room, but in court Thursday Hewson wasn't amused. He was fined $50 for leaving his son unattended and for having beer in the car.

SEND MINK TO SCOTLAND

Fort Erie, April 1 — (CP) — Fifty mink from a nearby mink farm left Thursday on a trip that will take them by air to Scotland. The animals were purchased by George Anderson of Lerwick, Scotland, who came to Canada to get mink for breeding purposes.

Detroit Wings Hold Whip Hand In Stanley Cup Semi-Final After 3-1 Win in Fifth Game

Detroit, April 1 — (CP)—The Montreal Canadiens may be down a game in their semi-final Stanley Cup series with Detroit Red Wings, but since the difference between the two clubs is so little they're far from out yet.

The Red Wings Thursday night went ahead in their best-of-seven series for the first time since the first tilt when they scored a 3-1 victory in the fourth game to take a 3-2 lead in the set.

The defeat was the second straight for the Canadiens after Detroit won the first game, the Canadiens took the next two but the Wings have emerged on top in the last two.

Harry Lumley, agile Detroit netminder, came through with a stirring performance Thursday night to play a leading part in the Red Wings' latest win.

The Detroit team, however, was sure of the victory until the last four minutes of play. Jerry Couture and Gordon Howe notched the markers 32 seconds apart to break a 1-all tie.

The victory put the Red Wings within a single game of a berth in the Stanley Cup finals against the defending champion Toronto Maple Leafs. The loss means Canadiens will have to win the next two games.

Lumley, repulsing attack after attack, was only fooled once. Rip Riopelle fired a backhand shot as he sprawled tumbling past the Detroit goal and caught Lumley by surprise for the first goal of the game.

Held Till Third Period

Riopelle's score came when Cadieux' Kenny Reardon and Detroit's George Gee were off for roughing just after the second period opened.

The slim one-point margin loomed bigger as Montreal progressed and the Montreal team held onto it until 5:10 of the third period when Sid Abel took Red Kelly's pass and zipped in an angle shot.

In the third session, after slipping between the Montreal defence team of Doug Harvey and Butch Bouchard, Couture slid a 10-foot shot along the ice, that goalie Bill Durnan didn't even make a move to stop.

That was the straw that broke Montreal's back, but Howe was not satisfied. He intercepted a Montreal pass at the blue line, moved our stride in and let fly from 55 feet to score on a shot that had Durnan screened.

The teams move to Montreal Saturday night, where a Detroit victory will give them the series. If Montreal wins the teams will be back here for the deciding game Tuesday.

Lineups:

Montreal — goal, Durnan; defence, Laycoe, Reardon; centre, MacKay; wings, Gravelle, Riopelle; subs, Harvey, Bouchard, Plamondon, Carveth, Harmon, Fillion, Chamberlain, Peters, Mudell, Leger, Richard.

Detroit — goal, Lumley; defence, Quackenbush, Kelly; centre, Abel; wings, Howe, Lindsay; subs, Stewart, Reise, Gee, McNab, Horeck, Polle, Podolsky, Lundy, Couture, Pavelich, and Wiggins.

Referee—George Gravel. Linesmen — George Hayes and Harold March.

Hershey Bears Jump Into Finals Defeating Barons

(By The Associated Press)

Hershey Bears Thursday night jumped into the finals of the American Hockey League's Calder Cup playoffs, and now are awaiting the outcome of the battle between divisional winners to see who their title foe will be.

The Bears, unbeaten in post-season play, completed a sweep through two lower series by humbling the defending champions, Cleveland Barons, 5-1.

This gave them two straight over the Barons—the same sort of burry-out treatment they had accorded Indianapolis.

Meanwhile the "A" series between Providence, the eastern winner, and St. Louis, the western pace setter, continued hot with indications it might go the full seven games.

Providence Reds were forced into, 28 1-2 minutes overtime last night to gain a 5-4 victory over the Flyers at Providence. The Reds now lead three games to two.

The series now shifts to St. Louis where the Flyers will try to get even Sunday night. A seventh game, if necessary, will be played at Providence.

He scored three goals, including the clincher at 18:30 of the "sudden death" second overtime period.

The regulation game had ended at 3-3. In the first 10-minute overtime, Barry Sullivan scored to give the Flyers a 4-3 lead. Then defenceman Danny Summers of Providence staved off defeat with a goal 11 seconds before the end of the period.

Hershey's victory was scored before 7,975 home folks. The Bears ran up an early lead with one goal in the first and two in the second and won coasting.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE H. CARVER, Sports Editor

What is claimed to be one of the biggest conclaves in the history of the organization, is the annual confab of the Ontario Baseball Association scheduled for Peterborough on April 8th and 9th. The baseball ladies will get together in the Empress Hotel where all the important issues of the fast, and season will be discussed. Election of officers etc., will be held and a number of points discussed and problems ironed out to wrinkles added.

Amongst all that, the Peterborough scribe comments on the get-together as follows: "Chairman Eddie Murphy of the committee arranging for the OBA annual convention here tells us things are shaping well. City council is planning on a dinner for all delegates, and the attorney general will be speaker there. Max Swanston, right behind it as are Hugh Campbell, Vern Dawson, Bill Kay and other prominent local subs, while members of the committee itself are all doing their bits. List of invitations for special guests is being drawn up now. Voting delegates have been or will be named from the COBI, the Lakeshore League, the local City League, and possibly from the Lindsay area, to represent this part of the province."

President Don Thomas of the Central Ontario Baseball League and some of his minute men will attend the convention and we expect to take in the proceedings as well. Don't know whether the city league will be represented or not — but it should be.

Some of the better baseball men around the city are wondering why a village of this size, and facilities cannot or will not support an entry in the Central Ontario Baseball League. Last year Peterborough, Oshawa, Kingston and Belleville got off to a flyin start—and the leagues paid dividends. Dividends, that is, if not so much financially but in bringing a better brand of baseball to fandom of this district and area.

That fans hereabouts will "go" for baseball of the better type and higher calibre, was clearly demonstrated at the box office when senior baseball was playing here. We are not disparaging the Belleville City and District League, it is did a fine job in first starting back here after the recent stamp-out, but it must be frankly admitted that it was not quite up to the mark of the Intermediate boys, although that is itself was far from being senior ball as was formerly played here.

"Give me four good players, a pitcher, catcher an infielder the COBL," an optimistic laddie, who knows plenty about the game told this corner the other day. "Surely," he added, "there are jobs available here, somewhere, where players could be accommodated.

A Belleville senior entry pitted against their former arch rivals, Oshawa, Kingston, Peterborough, with Batawa thrown in would meet the approval of the fans here. While some time ago we expressed ourselves as being definitely against a six-team loop the rumor that Napanee is considering a senior entry adds a little zip to things. It has been suggested that two sections of three teams, an eastern section and one from the western part of the league are would be advisable. So that is it now. The sectional idea would eliminate heavy transportation expenses. However a guy can dream.

Everything was going fine for Les Habitants down Detroit way last night. The Olympia crowd was deep in the depths of despair. Ex-Marlie dandy Red Wings, the National Hockey League champions, eyed, were being hoptled, thrown for loose, balked at every attempt, dazzled in every foray by the dashing Canadiens from Montreal. And it looked as though Tommy Ivan's "Terribles" were going to take it on the well-known button right in their own habitation to give the Irvin crew a 2-2 lead in the series, and a stranglehold on the finals against the cocky Maple Leafs of Tawrasta. Yep, it was 1-0 at the end of the second period. Big Bill Durnan were a big smile. He is no stranger to shutouts, but another, Yep, especially in a critical game like this would not come amiss.

The Canadiens supporters in the bleachers were agiee. For Lee Habe b'zar, she, didn't she show enough in dose first two period, in lick dose dam Redwings. She's all wrair, dis dam series. In Merryall,.Sat'day night, she's finis, toute suite. And then, dose Maple Leaf, Pouf! She'll know she'h bin in whitey game. Dose Habs, by lack, no Lach. Ho, they'll be dare. Allouette!

Then the roof, Woodward Avenue, the Penobscot Building, the Fisher pile, Hudson's Store, here, Detroit-Leland, a couple of Cadillac plants and the International Bridge toppled about the Canadiens supporters ears. It came suddenly, savagely, it almost came once, twice, three times. Sheer disaster pulled the bright blue of Canadiens victory sky. The roaring Wings, fingernails, backs to the wall, several mads wound at sheer offensive artillery over the scene and as a hockey-mad Olympic populace rose to its feet as one, raced in to score three thirty-goal goals to run Montreal into the order out of a chaotic two-period defeat. Or what looked like it.

Yep, that's what happened, kiddies. The Wings rising to majestic hockey heights, smote the Canadiens like telling blows in that third period, to win the fifth game of the series. And if you care to see what should be a hockey epic, jaunt down Montreal way come Saturday night, when the sixth struggle between these squads. It should be a thriller diller.

And that murmer you hear from down Toronto way is Conny Smith's hockey yannee orchestra hellions, yodelling "Come on, Canadiens, soften 'em up for us."

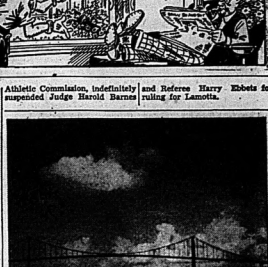
Ike Williams Meets Gavilan In Rubber Match

New York, April 1 — (CP) — Trained to perfection and raring to go, lightweight champion Ike Williams and Kid Gavilan, the slick fighting machine from Cuba, will clash tonight in a 10-round non-title "rubber" bout in Madison Square Garden.

Dead-panner Ike is a 5-to-8 favorite. It's a heavy betting affair with plenty of money showing for both boxers.



Lil Arthur King of Toronto, the British Empire and Canadian lightweight champion and Williams' stablemate, meets Johnny La Russo of the Bronx in the 8-round semi-final bout.

Hard — punching Williams won his first bout against Gavilan by unanimous decision, with votes of 5-4-1, 5-4-1 and 6-4. Gavilan evened the count on a split decision, 5-4-1, 5-4-1, 4-4-2. Referee Ruby Goldstein, who handled both bouts, voted for the draw the second time.

The two fights were so close that Williams and Gavilan were only two rounds apart in the officials' tally for the 20 rounds. Williams received a total of 32 rounds, Gavilan 26 and six were marked even.

The officials, who will be announced when the battlers climb into the ring at 10 p.m. EST, will share the spotlight with the contestants.

Arguments still are raging over the controversial result and aftermath of last Friday's Robert Villemain - Jake Lamotta battle. Lamotta was awarded an unpopular split decision victory. Eddie Eagon, chairman of the State Athletic Commission, indefinitely suspended Judge Harold Barnes and Referee Harry Ebbets for ruling for Lamotta.

Barrie Flyers Need One Game To Take Title

Timmins, Ont., April 1 — (CP) — Defeat, if and when it comes to Barrie Flyers, will probably look strange.

Last night Barrie turned in a 6-1 victory over Porcupine Combines to take their 11th straight victory in almost six weeks. The win gave them a stranglehold, three points to none, on the best-of-seven series for the Ontario junior hockey championship.

Next, and possibly final, game in the series will be played here Saturday.

Barrie found the going tough in the late stages Thursday night. Trailing 3-0 going into the third period, Puckies took new life from a picture-goal by Ray Volpatkins and for the first time in the series outplayed Barrie for the remainder of the period.

Playing for the first time in the series on their home ice, Combines threw third-period shots at Barrie goalie Gil Mayer, that might have proven his worth to the title of best junior goalie in the Ontario Hockey Association.

On the whole, Barrie had the Bon's share of the play. But the Flyers ran into the same stiff back-checking that they found in their first two games against Timmins, when they won by 4-0 and 11-2 scores.

Pat From Long

Gord Pennell scored Barrie's first goal on a pass from Stan Long but the Flyers couldn't find their way again past slim Lorne Howes, Porcupine netminder, until the second period.

Then Don Ashbee tallied on a three-way play with Sid McNabney and John Sheddon and eight minutes later Long found the net on a pass from Harold Hopper.

Goal-getting third-period goal at 1:13 gave an indication of the stick-handling skill latent in the Timmins squad. Volpatkins backed up and fired into the corner as Mayer crouched.

Howes, who has shone throughout the series in the Porcupine nets, was knocked to the ice by Hopper as he crossed the mouth of the net in the third period. Apparently unconscious, he was carried from the ice but he returned 10 minutes later as if nothing happened.

Lineups:

TWO IN A ROW? - - - - By Alan Mavor

Training Camp Notes

(By The Associated Press)

This may be a big year for big Clint Hartung at New York Giants. At first he had a tremendous, fast ball, but nothing else. Now he has developed a curve and may be one of the Giants' few pitching threats.

Jackie Robinson, Brooklyn Dodgers' biggest box-office attraction, is giving the fans down south their money's worth. The agile Negro second - baseman has never looked better since he broke into organized baseball with Montreal Royals three seasons ago.

A pulled leg muscle suffered by Gene Bearden, star hurler for Cleveland Indians, became potentially serious today and Bearden was ordered to bed for several days. Manager Lou Boudreau said Bearden probably won't be allowed to pitch again for a week or more.

Jeff Heath, formerly of Fort William, may be in Boston Braves' outfield today when the Tribe plays an exhibition game against St. Louis Cardinals. Heath, who broke his ankle while sliding home at the end of last season, has been practising running and hitting.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.

Syracuse, N. Y., April 1 (AAP)—Syracuse University, which adopted an unusual and roundabout method of fixing a football coach, has just about completed the task of selecting a new one . . . Syracuse, you remember, set up a fact - finding committee before reaching the decision that Biff Baysinger was guilty of not winning enough games . . . Surprisingly, more than 50 other guys applied for the job . . . one thing the investigators failed to prove was why a college which won eastern championships in boxing and wrestling this winter and had the best basketball team in upstate New York could lose all but one of its football games.

For Herman and for Yale

One suggestion freely offered to the guy who takes the Syracuse job is that he take a few lessons from Yale's Herman Hickman, the most popular losing coach in the country . . . Hickman claims he set his quota for his first season as Yale coach at four victories, just so the alumni wouldn't become too optimistic. Then, to his consternation, he found his kids leading in the big games against Princeton and Harvard . .

HOGAN HEADING HOME

The National golf pace - setter until an automobile accident last Feb. 2 laid him low, Hogan walked the length of a Pullman car Thursday night when he boarded the train here.

Thursday night he said he is definitely "out of the rough and again headed down the fairway."

At least once, his life was feared for when a blood clot traveled from his injuries. He suffered multiple fractures when his automobile and a bus crashed near Van Horn, Tex.

SAVED BY GLACIAL ACTION

Yorkton, Sask. — (CP) — Saskatchewan would be quite barren if it had not been subject to glacial action thousands of years ago, Leo Kustush of Yorkton Collegiate, told the local natural history society. Glacial action, he said, had torn up limestone formations in Manitoba and spread them evenly over Saskatchewan.

Psutka Signs Detroit Contract To Play Baseball

(By The Canadian Press)

Harry Psutka, former catcher with Kitchener in the Ontario Inter-County Baseball League, has been signed by Detroit Tigers of the American League.

Psutka, who just completed a pro year behind the bat with Pittsburgh Hornets of the American Hockey League, disclosed the signing in a letter to Kitchener baseball officials.

He will be farmed out to one of Detroit's farm clubs.

Five goals by Torpedo Tony Demers sparked Sherbrooks St. Francis to a 7-0 victory over Montreal Royals here Thursday night and earned the Saints the right to meet Ottawa in the Quebec Senior Hockey League final. It was Sherbrooke's second straight triumph in the shortened best of three semi-final series. The Saints took the first 10.

Tommy Paddon, a major league baseball player for ten years, was signed Thursday as playing manager of the Cub Terriers in the senior Intercounty Baseball League. Gus Murray, president of the Galt Athletic club, made the announcement after attempts to sign Milton Owen, former New York player, were unsuccessful.

Carl Liscombe, high-scoring left winger of Providence Reds, has been named to the American Hockey League's most gentlemanly player for the 1948-49 season, it was announced Thursday at New York.

Liscombe, who also won the circuit's most-valuable player award will receive $500 from the league for winning the Jack Fox Memorial or "clean player" award. Liscombe was cut-bid Smith of Pittsburgh Hornets for the award.

A Scottish Cup semi-final replay between Clyde and Dundee Utd. has been slated for April 4, it was learned Thursday at London. Last Saturday the teams tied 22 in overtime. The winner of the Clyde-Dundee match meets Rangers April 23 in the final. Rangers ousted East Fife 3-0 last Saturday in the other semi-final.

A blind referee will call the shots of some matches of the Canadian Deaf Hockey League tournament at New York. Charles W. Meikle of Cleveland, blind since birth, began refereeing matches in his home city two years ago on a bet. He relies on sound entirely and says that none of his calls ever has been disputed.

At Detroit, a $250,000 libel suit was filed in Wayne County circuit court Thursday by a Detroit Red Wing hockey player, Jack Stewart, against Andy O'Brien, newspaper columnist from Montreal. Stewart charged that O'Brien, sports editor of the Montreal Standard, made false statements regarding the Detroit player's conduct in early games of the current Stanley Cup series with the Red Wings and Montreal Canadiens.

At Albany, N.Y. Governor Thomas E. Dewey Thursday night vetoed a bill that would have created a commission to study the possibility of legalizing off-track pari-mutuel betting in the state.

Canada Has Held Badminton Title Of World Since '33

. . . It may not be known—nor appreciated—but Canada has held the world's professional badminton championship since 1933 when Toronto's Jack Purcell knocked off American and British netmen in a round-robin tournament. And there's faint hope of any other country getting it, at least this year.

The world title will be at stake tonight (Friday) when two Montrealers—defending champion Stan Cutts and challenger Doug Grant—meet at Toronto.

This world title has been termed a "phoney" and they have jeered "sez who it's a world championship" but particularly since this is the third time in as many years that Cutts and Grant have met for what they term the so-called globe-girdling title.

It's the McCoy

Well, for one, the Canadian Badminton Association says that title is the real thing—there's no international federation which covers the program, but they say our blessing because there isn't a pro anywhere who will accept Cutts' offer to a game," said a C.B.A. official.

"Anywhere professionals won't accept a challenge because they're afraid of losing to a Canadian and the U.S. Badminton Association, which doesn't say whether it will or won't recognize the event as a world championship, probably is waiting for a meeting each other for the championship since they're now the two finest! showed the rest of the Badminton Canadian Senior Amateur Hockey Championship—four in the east and four in the west.

East:

Sydney Millionaires, Toronto Marlboros, Sherbrooke St. Francis, Ottawa Senators.

West

Winnipeg Nationals, Regina Capitals, Fort Frances Canadians, Trail Smoke Eaters

Toronto claims the only one-armed girl softball pitcher in Canada. She is Ethel Carrington, 23, who lost her right arm in a bicycle accident 11 years ago and devoted her time to learning to pitch from the portside. She led an industrial team to the Toronto intermediate title in 1947 and will line up again this season.

Allan Cup Survivors

(By The Canadian Press)

Eight teams still survive in playoffs for the Allan Cup and the Canadian Senior Amateur Hockey Championship—four in the east and four in the west.

East:

Sydney Millionaires, Toronto Marlboros, Sherbrooke St. Francis, Ottawa Senators.

West

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Figures may lie in some cases. But a bridge player must assume they will till the truth. A pair of hands that counts no less than 11 tricks may be expected to make a game of some kind.

When one player of a pair discovers 11 tricks, he should tell partner. How? He does this with a signal. The signal is a jump of one; a number that is one higher than legally necessary.

If responder is the one who first finds out there are 11 tricks in the pair, he is the one who jumps. If opener is the first to learn they have a total of 11 tricks, he is the one who jumps.

There is only one special provision or condition in this rule. If responder jumps his first response, he also promises two sure tricks. Without two sure is he delays his jump until the second round.

How does either player decide there are 11 or more tricks in the pair? Simple! By adding what he has to what partner has shown. Simply what you have to what partner has promised.

An opener with a bidder promises no less than five tricks. His partner with six sees in the pair. Answering a bid of one, three tricks are promised by responder who does not jump his bid. If the opener happens to have eight he sees 11.

SOUTH	NORTH
♠A K 5 3	♠6 2
♥K Q J 9 8	♥A 8 7 2
♦K 6 4	♦A 8 3
♣A	♣Q J 5 4

Response by north is two clubs, his takeout suit. With eight tricks, south sees not 11 in the pair. Therefore, he should jump.

He has an unshown biddable spade suit. His second round bid is three spades. This promises discovery of 11 tricks in the two hands. So, neither partner will stop short of game.

The simplicity of this is the only thing that seems to confuse some players. In reality, it should be more complicated. Or maybe I have this mixed up.

New York April 1 (AP)—Henry Fonda has his work put out for him.

The slow-talking actor has signed for the duration of the play "Alister Roberts," which may well prove longer than the war in which both Messrs. Roberts and Fonda served the navy.

It's an actor's dream — the security of a long running and successful role. The few that have achieved it include Frank Bacon with "Lightning," and Joseph Jefferson with "Rip Van Winkle," James Barton "Tobacco Road," Frank Fay, "Harvey."

Not Worried

By now Fonda is accustomed to the concern of friends that his long absence from the screen will endanger his box office power.

"Heck, I was never much of a box-office name anyway," he shrugged. Besides the movie version of 'Roberts' will bring him back."

This will be a unique project. It will mark the first time for a picture to be made by the same cast and company of a stage hit.

More Casting

Fonda is one of many Hollywood exiles in the big town. Take a look at the ex-Dutchess now facing the footlights. There are Irene Rich, Robert Cavendaugh in "As the Girls Go," both get big hands from movie fans.

Others include Jessica Tandy and Director Nanned Desirey; Bert Wheeler in "All For Love," Rex Harrison in "Anne of the Thousand Days," Ralph Bellamy in "Detective Story," Madeleine Carroll and Conrad Nagel in "Goodbye, My Fancy," Pat Morrison in "Kiss Me Kate," Bill Eythe in "Lend An Ear," John Garfield in "The Big Knife," Paul Muni in "They Knew What They Wanted," and Melvyn Douglas in "Mice and Men."

AT THE CAPITOL — Lovely Jane Frazee plays leading lady to Roy Rogers, King of the Cowboys, in Republic's tuneful western, "Grand Canyon Trail," which is now showing today and Saturday at the Capitol Theatre. The added attraction, Robert Louis Stevenson's adventure on the high seas "Kidnapped," stars Roddy McDowall. Continuous show Saturday from 1.00.

Answer to Yesterday's Puzzle:

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was in her room darning holes out of socks, and I said, Hay ma, do you think socks have flavor?

No I dont, and I dont think I have, ordinary common sense, judging by present company, ma said. Really, I mean really half the time when you open your mouth to speak I dont believe you have the slightest idea what's going to come out of it, she said.

Me thinking, Heck, I'm never going to say another word to her till she talks to me first.

Sounding then a swell way to make her apologize me, and I just stood there without saying anything and neither did me and after a while I got disgusted and went out to see what the fellows were doing, and in about a hour I got thirsty and went in for a drink of water, and ma was back in the kitchin, and there was a swell smell of cookies back there, proving what was in the oven, and I thawt, Heck, I aint going to say anything to her till she talks to me first, even if I ask for a cookie, darn it I am.

And I finished my drink and stood there waiting for her to break the spell by speaking first, which she didn't do and I thawt, She can wait a year of all I care, she'll find out.

And me started in to open a can of tomatoes, saying to herself, I hate this can opener, it takes a proverbial Wizard of Oz to do anything with it. Drat such a contraption, she said, and I said, Do you mean me, ma?

What are you talking about? you said and I said Indeed you are me to drat that contraption?

I declare you get sillier by the minute, ma said, and I said, Anyway I'm not the one who's doing the talking to myself.

Oh, if they're done, I suppose so, ma said.

Meaning 3rs, and they were

Franco's Spain Completes Only Small Part of Her Reconstruction Program

Madrid, April 1 (AP)—Forced into economic and political isolation by world opinion, Generalissimo Franco's Spain has completed only a small part of her reconstruction program.

Ten years after the civil war, Spain's problems are still lack of housing, electricity and raw materials and an inadequate transport system.

The country was devastated by a 33-month war. More than 1,000,000 persons had been killed. Destroyed buildings were counted in the thousands.

The start of the Second World War forced the Spaniards to try to do the job with little or no outside help in credits and materials.

The general recovery program was put in action with a budget of approximately 2,000,000,000 pesetas (about $1,000,000,000), called for construction of 400,000 new low-cost housing units, 60 dams, 15 canals, numerous hydro-electric plants, more roads and a better and expanded railway system.

Despite the scarcity of raw materials, more than 40,000 houses were built up to the end of 1948. Another 110,000 are nearing completion.

Thousands of homeless have solved the problem by their own means in the new "satellite villages" scattered around Spanish cities. In a single field only 500 yards from Madrid's bullring, more than 300 long houses made of brick, clay and wood have been constructed by the homeless. Almost all are one-room shacks with families of up to seven persons living in them.

The reconstruction budget provided for dams, canals, rail-roads, but lack of materials, principally cement and iron, slowed construction almost to a standstill.

Despite this, Spain now has 54 dams, the 20 largest of which, with a capacity of 140,000,000,000 gallons of water.

Spain, which depends mainly on hydro-electric power for industrial and domestic use, nearly doubled the pre-civil-war output in the first six years of peace with production of 4,175,000,000 kilowatt-hours in 1945. But Spain must increase production to at least 8,000,000,000 kilowatts to meet growing consumption.

The Spanish railroad system is far from being either adequate or modern. The rolling stock is serviceable but is hopelessly old, although more than 90 per cent of it has been rebuilt since 1939.

But the root of all Spain's economic ills is lack of raw materials. This is caused by lack of dollars. Dollars are difficult to get because of political liabilities of the regime and unfriendly world opinion.

Treasure Hunt To Reclaim Loot Seized Completed

Berlin, April 1 — (AP) — The United States is about to write finis to one of the great treasure hunts of history.

It goes under the name of restitution.

In January, 1943, most of the United Nations served notice in a London communique that they would reclaim the loot seized by the Nazis in their mad attempts to rule Europe.

When the war ended the big search started. In the American zone of Germany alone, 21,000 claims were filed. A staff of 60 Americans and 500 Germans was organized to weed them out and fill the bill wherever possible.

The job is expected to end formally June 30, but it is virtually complete now.

Up to the end of February, nearly 200,000,000 reichsmarks (about $100,000,000) worth of property, excluding art treasures, had been turned back to their owners.

Art treasures — paintings, statues, silverware, entire libraries, rare books, religious icons — also were turned over in a constant stream of more than 200,000,000 reichsmarks (about $200,000,000.).

Most of the art treasures went back to France.

The Soviets filed 485 claims. More than 300 of these were rejected. Russia demanded that Soviet teams be allowed to sleuth around the American zone in search of loot. The Americans turned him down. They said the claims were rejected because the Russians had failed to produce proof of ownership.

An American official said the Soviets, instead of complaining about the American zone, should look at their own restitution record. By February, 1948, last date for which a Soviet report was available, the Russians had returned only 45,000,000 reichsmarks worth of property from their own zone. Of this, 20,000,000 worth went to the Russians themselves, and large shares were handed out to Soviet-sphere countries.

Demonstrations In Damascus Back Army Coup

Damascus, March 31 (AP) — Small demonstrations were staged in Damascus streets today in support of the army regime that deposed Syria's government in Wednesday's bloodless revolt.

There was no indication in this dispatch as to the fate of President Al Sayed Shukri Al Kuwatly and Premier Khaled Al Azm. They were reported arrested Wednesday along with other cabinet ministers. The army took over control of communications, implying possible censorship.)

Just how the army's well-organized coup would affect scheduled Israeli-Syrian armistice negotiations was not made clear. Some observers believed policy on the touchy subject would not be disclosed until a new government is formed.

ADVENTURE IN MAIN
Woodchopper Lester Wiles of Kingsfield, Me., is shown carrying axe and bear that turned a run-of-the-mill day into a day of adventure and excitement. While cutting wood on a dam project, Wiles saw the bear come out of his winter den right next to him. When the brute attempted to pet him with his deadly paws, Wiles struck him with an axe and fled. Returning to camp, Wiles took another axe and struck out after the animal. Following the trail of blood from the first wound, Wiles stalked the animal into a thicket and with one blow killed the bear. — Central Press Canadian.

Remember That Night

By Margaret Gorman Nichols

"Now Karen, this is where come in. I was the only person in the world who knew you were alive. And I—I didn't go for you! I didn't know where Craig was. And I—I was selfish. I'd just been offered an important part and I didn't know what to do with a baby. My mother had died in the meantime. I was fearfully upset about that. There wasn't any money left and I was living in small quarters with another girl.

"But I have no excuse. I should have gone for you! But I tried to comfort myself by hoping and praying that nice people would take you and that you'd have a happy life.

"And so all the years before and after Craig came back home I knew he had a daughter growing up in Harriston. But I was selfishly afraid to tell him! That's why I wouldn't marry him.

"And all these weeks I've known you, Karen, I have tried to make you like me enough to forgive me when I had to tell you this.

"Today I went to the hospital and told Craig. I asked him to forgive me, too."

Her voice was quite low now. "He didn't bring us to the theatre tonight because he . . ."

"Because he couldn't forgive you?" Karen asked.

Brenda shook her head and smiled. "No. Not that. He did forgive me, but I had to tell you before he saw you. He's . . . waiting, I think. He knows I'm telling you now. He said he'd wait. He wouldn't let him.

"Karen, do you—do you want to see your father?"

Her father! Craig! Her head ached with crowded thoughts and pictures. But it was clear, all very clear now, and it was really quite a simple story.

"Yes, I'd like to see him now, Brenda."

"You understand everything!"

It was such a long time ago, it . . . And Karen knew she was asked to be forgiven.

Looking up, she smiled.

"I understand everything. I told you I could never hate you because you've been so good to me, Brenda, . . . I—I think you've more than paid for that one mistake."

The others eyes filled. "Thank you for saying that, my dear."

She opened the door and Karen saw Craig's distinguished gray hair.

"I'm going to leave you with—with your father, Karen."

Craig came into the dressing room filled with flowers and he and Karen looked at each other.

My father she thought. This tall, distinguished man, this famous surgeon. All through her childhood she had dreamed of meeting her mother.

She thought of Philip — Philip again. Brenda had said that she owed her success to him and now it was also because of his interest that she would no longer wonder who she was and would no longer have a queer feeling when any one mentioned a birthday. And no longer would she feel different from other people. Philip — again!

Craig came forward and without saying anything took her in a long embrace and held her close a long time. Karen felt this strong, steady man tremble and knew she was trembling, too. She did not want to cry. But tears she could not help stifled over her lashes.

"Karen," he said. To relieve his feelings, he smiled.

"I should have known. You look like you and I took a good bit alike. We didn't call you Karen but it's really a nicer name than the one we gave you."

He knew he must be gentle with her. He knew he could not show his feelings. My child! My daughter! But for Philip he would never have known!

"I know," he said kindly. "It is hard to believe. It's a great shock. So much has happened to you tonight. But we'll get used to it after a bit—get used to being father and daughter."

He smiled again.

"We liked each other from the beginning, didn't we? I want to hear all about you, Karen. We've a lot of time to make up. Twenty years. But right now I think we should think of Brenda. We love her, both of us. And while we're forgiven her, she hasn't forgiven herself."

She looked terrible," Karen said. "Yes, let's find her."

But Brenda had left the theatre. They went directly to the apartment.

Sitting beside him in the car, unable to take her eyes from him, Karen asked, "Do you think she'll marry you now?"

"I asked her today. She didn't answer. I don't know how she went through the performance tonight. But I do, really. She's a real trouper."

His hand covered hers and he laughed quietly. "Why, you've come to me utterly famous! That's a handicap for any father — a famous daughter!"

But his expression was serious again. "I couldn't have asked for any one lovelier than you, Karen. Your foster-parents did a fine job. I want to know all about you. We'll go away together some time and you can tell me, everything. Are you happy about this, Karen?"

Still she kept her eyes on him. Happy? She scarcely knew what she felt.

But she said, "I couldn't have asked for or hoped for any one better or finer than you. Now I won't feel different from other people. Sometimes I'll forget and remember with a shock. And then I'll never had a real birthday."

Parking the car a block away from Brenda's apartment, they walked. She slipped her arm through his and suddenly felt very safe and happy. The feeling of safety was new. Even as a child she had felt she was drifting.

"Shall we tell people about this?" he asked. "I can't very well keep you hidden. You're in hiding all these years. Of course we'll tell people! I want to boast and brag and show you off! But we'll have to give a slightly different version of the story to the public. We won't mention Brenda."

When he looked down at her, he looked up. "Yes . . . Father."

He had a queer strained look as if she had hurt him.

"That," he said, "sounds strange for you to say. I know, and strange still for me to hear you say it."

Mrs. Reid opened the door of Brenda's apartment and left the room.

With one swift mighty sound Karen, Craig said, "One arm is filled with my daughter, Brenda. I'd like you to fill the other. Karen and I need it. We're no agreed. What has passed has passed. We're happy that we didn't miss each other completely and we're going to make up for all the time we've lost. We're going to have fun. This is a happy occasion and I think we should all go out and have some champagne to celebrate. To celebrate several things. And one of them is that you and I are going to get married, Brenda, come here."

Slowly, her eyes shining, she came across the room and filled his other arm.

But they did not go out. They sat in Brenda's lovely living room and talked for hours. They set their wedding for Monday and since they could not go away because of the play, they would have no honeymoon until the summer.

"You see what being an actress means," Brenda said, "I can't even have a honeymoon!"

But Karen's mind wandered to Philip. It was past midnight. It was Tuesday. Tomorrow — oh, tomorrow! Tomorrow is the end of my life, the end of my love. It isn't right to love another woman's husband and dream of him and wish he would kiss you! And he had been more wonderful tonight than ever as he stood in her room filled with flowers. "I don't know" she thought, "why he was such a wonderful tonight."

When Craig left, Brenda said with a sigh, "I feel that I've come to the end of a long journey. I'm going to marry Craig after all. Going to marry Craig! We've waited so long for each other.

"And in a couple of years I'm going to leave the stage. I've always wanted to retire at the height of my career. The exit that way is so much more graceful. And Craig will take a leave of absence and we'll go abroad. I'll leave the stage to you. We'll all be one family. I'll leave it to you—to carry on."

She nodded. "So much had happened tonight, Karen. But you've been thinking of Philip . . ."

"And tonight I loved him more than ever — if that's possible. I don't feel sad about it any more. I feel — empty. That's worse."

"And I feel like empty of secrets that have been my weight concerning me down for years. Have I expressed it, Karen sentiments?"

Karen nodded. "Yes. That day I told you about myself you knew. . . ."

"I waited until you had proved you're happy and I was afraid it might upset you if you knew. Philip couldn't know who you are. Over the phone from England he was merely intrigued with your story. Luckily he couldn't see my face and knew what his words were doing to me."

She smiled. "You dropped your purse in a theatre lobby and everything happened from there."

Today would be like any other day, Karen thought later as she looked out the window of her room. Today people would eat and talk and work! And tonight people would pay their money to see her. But Philip wouldn't be in the theatre tonight. He'd be entertaining the members of his wedding party!

That same afternoon she was trying on suits and hats and shoes in the exclusive shop where Brenda bought her clothes and thinking, "You can't show how you feel. You can't look miserable for Brenda's sake. She's happy."

Touching the soft fur, Karen smiled. "For your wedding, too." That's right — smile. Tomorrow you must smile at Philip at his wedding reception. Oh, how tired her mouth would be from smiling.

Then Brenda said, "I'm going to leave you as soon as you've decided on a hat. Why not stop at the hospital and see Craig He'd be delighted. He called this morning before you were up and he's like a boy." Poor Karen. Don't try to hide your misery, child. Your eyes are frightened, though your mouth is smiling. It isn't fair that love likes yours should be wasted!

She pulled her furs over her shoulders. "I really think I'd better ride along. I'm going to see Lilyan for a moment before the wedding rehearsal. That's at three. I'll just have time to see her before she leaves for the theatre."

Why had Brenda gone to see Lilyan? Had the visit anything to do with her — Karen?

"I'm mixed up," she thought. "But I'll be allright after tomorrow. I'll know then. I'll see him married. There won't be anything to hope for. I'll straighten out my life and be all right. I've got to be."

But since that fateful night in June she had built everything around Philip. Everything had been for him, her work, her hopes, her thoughts, and her dreams.

Craig followed his pretty young secretary into his office. He came directly to Karen, who arose and kissed him. There was no awkwardness in the meeting and kissing him seemed a perfectly natural thing to do.

With his arm around her, Craig said, "Miss Lee, I want you to meet my daughter, Karen Reid."

"Your daughter!" She laughed. "Why, I didn't know you had a daughter, doctor."

"A great many people don't. Karen has a new name. She's an actress."

"I scarcely has been an exciting day. First you tell us that you and Miss Bond are going to be married and then you introduce me to your daughter." Her eyes scolded but she smiled. "And all the time I thought you were a bachelor."

When she left, Craig sat in his desk chair, leaned forward, and took Karen's hand.

"Did you see the papers? They raved about you. I've been thrusting papers at everybody, doctors, nurses and patients, saying 'That is my daughter.' I don't know I had a daughter, did you?' And thinking I didn't know myself until yesterday."

"I've just been buying clothes for Philip's wedding tomorrow. Now do you know why this isn't a happy day for me?"

"Oh! of course. You love him. Brenda said that a long while ago. All I can say is that I'm sorry. That's all anybody can say. But it doesn't help. I wish it could be you and Philip. I'm making a poor job of comforting you, Karen. Physicians curse many ills but they're helpless when it comes to curing sick hearts."

Affectionately he patted her hands. "Would you mind very much if I took you on a tour through the hospital? I'm proud of the hospital and proud of you. I think you two should know each other."

And while Karen was meeting doctors, nurses, secretaries, and patients, Philip was standing over the fireplace in his apartment lighting one cigarette from another.

It was a few minutes to three o'clock and at three there was a rehearsal for the wedding. On a sofa pulled toward the fireplace lay an open newspaper with Karen's photograph. Her eyes seemed to be mocking him. In the next room, his bedroom, he heard his servant walking from chair to dresser as he placed his clothes on a trunk.

Canada Associated With Protest Over Persecutions

Joins U.K. and U.S. Notes To Three Iron-Curtain States

BEVIN SAYS PACT COULD MEAN WORLD PEACE

Claims Men Who Rule Russia Fear Friendship of the West

Washington, April 2 (CP) — Foreign Secretary Bevin of Britain, here to sign the Atlantic Pact, said Friday night it "can be the greatest contributing factor to world peace ever known."

In a speech to the National Press Club, he said it was a "fundamental principle" of the pact, involving the United States, Britain, Canada and several western European powers, "that we will never indulge in aggression — but to the would-be aggressor we say: think twice, think thrice."

Bevin told 600 newspaper men and guests at the press club that he has agreed with Winston Churchill's estimate that the men who rule Russia fear the friendship of the west more than they fear its hostility. Churchill said in speech in Boston Thursday night that Russia's rulers are determined to keep their people cut off from the outside world.

But when he was asked about the idea once expressed by President Truman that Joseph Stalin be given a chance to talk Kremlin-Bevin laughingly replied "the mysteries (of Russia) are as dark to me as they seem to the stark American pressmen."

New Agreement

In response to another question, Bevin said that a new 50,000,000 trade agreement Britain has worked out with Russia is to begin with the decisions of the Marshall plan European organization.

Answering a question as to the meaning of the recent shake-up in the Russian high command Bevin said there is an old French proverb meaning "they are forever changing and are forever the same."

Bevin made these two points in connection with the pact and security for the west:

Ottawa, April 2 (CP)—Canada associated herself today with separate protests made by the United States and Britain to three iron-curtain satellites over recent religious persecution.

The protests were made today by the United States and United Kingdom legations in Budapest, Bucharest and Sofia and representatives of the two countries made it clear to Hungary, Roumania and Bulgaria that Canada fully shares the views of Britain and the U.S.

Treaty Violation Charged

The protest followed that, in persecuting Ca[illegible]al Mindszenty on charges of espionage and other persons, the countries had violated clauses in their peace treaties which guaranteed human rights and freedom of worship.

Acceptance here by the External Affairs Department, the representations were timed for announcement at the same time in London and Washington. Canada does not exchange diplomatic representatives with the three countries.

The Canadian government was formally associated with the United States and the United Kingdom in the protests sent to Hungary and Roumania against "violations of the peace treaties with those countries" which called for the protection of human rights."

The Dominion did not declare war on Bulgaria, and the Canadian protest could not be made formally to that country. However, the U.S. Charge D'Affaires and the United Kingdom representative in Bulgaria informed the Bulgarian government orally that the Canadian views are identical with Britain and the U.S.

Liquor Revenue Is $37,000,000

Toronto, April 2 (CP) — The Ontario government received $37,000,000 in revenue from the sale of liquor through Board of Ontario in the year ending March 31, 1948, a report tabled Friday in the Legislature shows.

Net income of the Board was $36,807,802, which went into the board's surplus account, increasing this account to $68,300,740.

Sale of spirits, beer and wine from the board's store were $75,454,309. Sales at all outlets totalled 73,474,121 gallons, an increase of 9,353,417 gallons.

SMALLWOOD BUSY GETTING CABINET IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Interim Premier Heads Nine-Man Cabinet

St. John's, April 2 — (CP) — Joseph Smallwood, Provisional Premier of Newfoundland, today was busy lining up his cabinet which will run the new province until a provincial general election can be held — probably some time in May.

Three of the nine were placed in the Department of Finance, Justice and Natural Resources. These jobs went to G. A. Winter, Hollett R. Curtis, justice, and W. J. Keough, resources.

Mr. Smallwood's cabinet — to be known as a "council"— is comprised mostly of men who supported the Confederate cause. An exception is Mr. Winter, the new finance minister. He is a merchant and a member of one of St. John's most distinguished families.

Mr. Keough is a co-operatives expert from Harbor Grace and Mr. Curtis a St. John's lawyer.

Other cabinet appointments still to be allotted portfolios are M. J. Sinnott, a retired magistrate; J. R. Ballam, former member of the National Convention, H. W. Quinton and Miss Mary Ellen Hefferton of St. John's school teachers.

Dennis is 'Glum' After Failure To Make Escape

White Plains, N.Y., April 2 (AP) — Handsome Gerard Graham Dennis, Canadian, accused of murdering his wife in the United States, was said to be in a "very glum" mood after his unsuccessful attempt to escape Friday night.

Dennis broke away from officers and made a three-block dash. But a rookie patrolman, Cornelius Mullane, 27, outran the dapper former St. Catharines man and overpowered him. Dennis was fired at Dennis during the chase.

Mullane said he told police to have staged a series of raids on wealthy homes across the United States that netted him $600,000 in furs, jewelry and other loot.

He pleaded not guilty last Tuesday to 12 indictments accusing him of 27 charges in connection with entering Long Island homes in this area.

Police had taken Dennis on a tour of New York City Friday in an effort to have him point out persons who had bought loot from burglarics.

As in White Plains as Dennis and officers started to leave a restaurant where they had eaten he dashed through the door and ducked in an alley.

Mullane, a patrolman with less than a year of service, joined the chase as Dennis headed for alleys, fences and dodging clothes lines.

In a parking lot, Mullane overtook the fugitive, who tumbled to the ground and surrendered without further resistance.

Sun-Times Will Build New Plant

Owen Sound, April 2 — The Sun-Times announced today a contract has been let for the start of the construction of a new building to house the printing plant and all departments and offices of the newspaper. The two-storey building will be of fireproof construction. The new building will be one of the most modern and complete newspaper plants in a city of this size. Modern equipment will start immediately.

The present newspaper press will also be installed.

MG EXHIBITION IN GERMANY

Berlin April 2 (Reuters) — American scout soon will have a chance to see for themselves Germany's present industrial capabilities. Beginning next week, a "military government German industrial exhibition" will display German products in New York at the Museum of Science and Industry.

Stassen Requests Aid For China, All of Asia Under "MacArthur Plan"

Boston, April 2 (AP)—Harold E. Stassen said Friday night that the U.S. should move against Communism by "bolstering" southern China and all of Asia with a billion-dollar-a-year "MacArthur plan," patterned after the Marshall plan.

The 45-year-old Pennsylvania University President and prominent Republican shared the forum honors with Winston Churchill at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology convocation of top scientists and thinkers at Boston Garden.

Churchill, a dealer in drama, will be remembered for a showmanship performance which he ended by singing the United States Marine Hymn.

He started it with a "thank you speech. He concluded it the same way Friday night by Massachusetts standards — by singing at the mid-century convocation.

It wasn't a big performance. But it is the bulky British wartime leader was at his stage best.

One minute he had a distinguished audience of nearly 14,000 roaring over his sly comments.

Next he brought them to a quick hush with bold and brave statements like this plea for United States and Britain.

"That we may continue to march shoulder to shoulder along the path of truth, of justice and of honor."

Stassen said "we should move, and move promptly, to bolster the southern half of China."

He attacked Stalin and the entire philosophy of Communism, saying he saw little difference between the "Fuehrer principle of Hitler's system" and the "centralism of Stalin's."

The "MacArthur plan" was brought up after Stassen declared: "Early the Marshall plan in Europe has been the most significant single right thing we have done since the end of the war.

"It is high time that we have a parallel MacArthur plan in Asia."

Churchill later told the audience of nearly 14,000 that Stassen's was "thoughtful and powerful address."

"I cannot conceal from you," Churchill said, "that I find myself in agreement with it on very many points of substance and on all points of sentiment."

The big sports arena was still as he added:

"If I may feel that in our own small island across the ocean we have reached conclusions which in the main harmonize with those of the great republic, we may indeed face the future with confidence and hope."

District Police Disliked Working With Cons. Keays Inquiry Told by Insp. Page

Mr. Page was the fourth witness testifying before Commissioner Mr. Justice Gordon Marshall in connection with the inquiry into allegations by Keays of administration inefficiency, interference and perjury on the part of seven police officers and crown attorney.

At the conclusion of Friday afternoon's hearing the inquiry was adjourned until Monday morning at eleven o'clock. Since the hearing started a total of 42 witnesses have been called and nearly a million words have been written into the transcript.

Next week it is expected that efforts will be made to speed up the hearing which thus far has taken longer than was expected to continue at least another ten days.

Frequently Mr. Justice Mackay has urged that cross-examination be kept relevant to matters in the realms of relevancy.

"You must remember that I have to digest all this evidence," pointed out Commissioner Mackay Friday as cross-examination seemed to stray considerably from the point of relevancy.

Mr. Justice Mackay told the constable that he agreed there was a feeling between Keays and officials at Belleville but that it would need "rather convincing evidence" to convince him constable's contention that he had been discriminated against by police officials at Toronto.

Constable Keays said that officials at Queen's Park and at Belleville had admitted that Keays possessed outstanding ability along some lines.

Cross-Examination

Cross-examination by Keays had proceeded to the extent that Inspector Page was being questioned about the fast driving of department automobiles.

Keays had claimed he had been told by Inspector Page of his right to drive a car and had been detailed on fourth radio operator without being given the opportunity of a holiday.

"Why shouldn't you have your car taken away in view of your past performance while at Niagara Falls and your fast driving of department cars?" asked Inspector Page.

Haigh Committed For Trial on Murder Charge

Horsham, Sussex, England, April 2 (AP)—John George Haigh, 39-year-old company director, today was committed for trial April 26 on charges of the murder of Mrs. Olivia Helen Henrietta Durand-Deacon, 69-year-old widow.

Asking for committal to the Central Criminal Court at the old Bailey, Defence Counsel G. Morris said this was "an exceptional case.

No plea was made on Haigh's behalf but Morris said he reserved his defence and no witnesses would be called today.

This morning's hearing lasted less than two hours. Five witnesses—all police officers—were called in the brief action.

A statement was read to the court in which Haigh was alleged to have said he shot the widow in the back of the head with a pistol in a tank. Then after going to a restaurant "for a cup of tea" he went back to the apartment and into the tank with a stirrup pump.

PASSENGER IN CAR KILLED IN CRASH WITH STREET-CAR

Hamilton, April 2 — (CP) — Howard Mallard, 29, was instantly killed early this morning when a car in which he was riding crashed head-on into a street car on Main Street East near Houghton Ave. Stanley Garrett, also in the automobile, is in hospital in critical condition.

Million Barrels Of Cement Will Be Imported

Ottawa, April 2 (CP) — Importation of 1,000,000 barrels of cement from England should enable Canada to "substantially" meet its consumers' requirements this year, Trade Minister Howe told G. K. Fraser (P.C.-Peterboro West) in the Commons on Friday. He said the company makes 90 per cent of Canada's cement.

Mr. Fraser asked about cement after contending it's still hard to get nails in this part of the country.

Mr. Howe said deliveries of additional wire were going to the plants now and the full effect of additional production should be felt next month. It shouldn't be hard to get nails now, he said.

PHEASANTS DOING WELL

Toronto, April 2 — (CP) — If favorable weather conditions continue, the pheasant population at Peice Island in Lake Erie this fall will be the largest in years.

This cheering word for hunters came Friday from Dr. C. H. D. Clarke, biologist in charge of game management for the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests. The department said he spoke up because misinterpretation of figures given recently in a speech at London, Ont., by Al Stokes of the Wildlife Management Institute who is conducting a survey on the island.

NEWFOUNDLAND GIVEN MEMBER IN THE CABINET

Colin Gibson Minister Mines and Resources

Ottawa, April 2 — (CP) — A shift in cabinet portfolios, bringing J. Gordon Bradley of St. John's into the Federal Council as Newfoundland's first minister, was announced to the Commons Friday by Prime Minister St. Laurent.

Taking the spotlight from dull end-of-the-week debate, the announcement disclosed that Mr. Bradley, 61 and Attorney-General in the last Liberal government in Newfoundland—becomes secretary of state for Canada, succeeding Hon. Colin Gibson.

Mr. Gibson, 58, who represented Canada Friday at the union ceremonies in Newfoundland, takes the post of mines and resources, being given to Hon. Paul James A. MacKinnon, 67, who, in turn, becomes a minister without portfolio pending retirement from the government and the Commons.

Mr. MacKinnon represents the Alberta constituency of Edmonton west.

Political circles expect he will be appointed to the Senate when parliament is dissolved and an election called, probably this June or October.

The Commons spent a day on diversified business, studying and adopting supplementary estimates for the fiscal year just ended and giving approval to an advance of $11,000,000 on the $25,000,000 the government expects to spend in Newfoundland this year in the extension of federal government services.

Military Junta Dissolves House Representatives

Damascus, April 2 (AP)—Syria's military junta dissolved the house of representatives today and confirmed the government of Brig. Husni Zayim, who seized power in a bloodless coup on Wednesday.

The junta also ordered the formation of a constitutional commission to start drafting a new constitution and new election laws. It promised that new elections would be held as soon as the commission has completed those tasks.

Zayim will appoint the constitution's drafters and fix the date of the new elections.

The junta Friday released two members of the cabinet from their arrest.

The deposed president, Al Sayer Shukri Al Kuwatly, is in hospital, it was learned. Other cabinet ministers include his Premier, Khaled Bey Azem, still are under arrest.

Those released Friday are Muhsen Bey Berazi and Hassan Bey Alabara, who held the home affairs and finance ministries under Kuwatly.

Syria's Arab neighbors have given a guarded welcome to Hosni Zayim to guide the min shapping their attitude toward the junta.

Rutland Railroad Slashes Pay 10 Cts. Hr.

Rutland, Vt, April 2 (AP) — The Rutland railroad today slashed 10 cents an hour from the pay of all employees.

Officials said the cut was made under an agreement specifying that wages would be reviewed when the bankrupt road's operating fund dropped below $300,000. The reduction must be retroactive to January 1, they said.

The employees were given a five-per-cent boost only two months ago after negotiations between management and union representatives.

The trustees said the line's revenue has dropped 20 per cent compared with a year ago. Eighty shop workers were laid off this week, they said.

Stuck Auto Horn Causes Excitement

Palmerston, April 2 (CP)— Bank clerk Jim Kelly was rousted from a sound sleep recently by an excited voice on the telephone saying "the burglar alarm's ringing, someone's robbing the bank."

Grabbing his revolved. Kelly sped to the bank but all was quiet. A slightly-amused constable explained that the alarm was only an automobile horn that became stuck.

Seven Seriously Injured in Crash Of Three Cars

Fracture of Skull Possibly Sustained by One of Injured

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 2 — (CP) — Seven persons were seriously injured in a three car crash on Queen Elizabeth Way about five miles northwest of this city early today.

Rushed to the greater Niagara General Hospital in ambulances and taxis, were the following:— Donald Davey, Niagara Falls, Ont., Alex Smith, Joseph Latner and his wife Elizabeth, all of Hamilton, and Richard McLeod and wife of Stamford township. Details of the accident were reported most critically injured.

Details of the accident were not immediately available but it is believed the drivers had stopped on the road because of engine trouble. McLeod and his wife stopped to assist them and they were struck by the third car containing Davey, Williams and Smith, all officers of the Army, Navy and Air Force Club at Hamilton, who were travelling west after attending a social evening here.

Fracture of Skull Feared

Williams is suffering from a fractured fracture of the left ankle, several facial lacerations, cuts to one eye and shock.

Latner has multiple paralyzed injuries to both feet, indicating they have been tossed out of the car and dragged along the ground, doctors said.

McLeod escaped with bruises to the forehead and shock and his wife with face and leg lacerations and undetermined back injuries which are not thought to be serious.

Davy has multiple fractures to the lower jaw and possible rib fractures.

2 U.S. Trawlers Sold by Leader In Fish Industry

Boston, April 2 (CP)—Isadore Bromfield, one of the leaders in the fishing industry here, announced today he had sold two trawlers and a fleet of scores of excessive demands by Atlantic fishermen for higher prices on boat operators.

Bromfield said union activity and the increased amount of Canadian fish entering the United States market were factors result in additional vessel sales.

The trawlers were purchased by an army mission for use in Germany.

Meanwhile, other fishing leaders predicted that 12 other boats will be sold. Among these is the Cormorant with a capacity of 500,000 pounds.

CHARITIES BILL, FILIBUSTER WILL RESUME MONDAY

Jolliffe Will Continue Debate Started Last Wednesday

Toronto, April 2. (CP)—The filibuster against the Ontario Government's Charities Bill is expected to start around two in the legislature, Monday.

Provincial Treasurer Frost announced as the House rose Friday that he will call for resumption of the second reading debate on the bill requiring all charitable foundations such as the Atkinson Foundation, owners of the Toronto Daily Star and The Star Weekly to dispose of 90 per cent of their capital stock.

C.C.F. Leader E. B. Jolliffe spoke 6½ hours against the bill last Wednesday before moving adjournment to the debate at the suggestion of Mr. Frost. He has the right to continue his address when the debate resumes.

The government Friday cleared the order paper of most of its major legislation, and announced that a protracted siege. The legislature approved the last of the estimates—the departments of Health, Welfare, Mines and Development and Travel and Publicity—gave third reading to which are still to be brought to be settled.

Davy has multiple fractures to the lower jaw and possible rib fractures.

Root of Tree Grows Through Hole of Axe

About a year ago George Fuller of Belleville pulled his pyewhacket up on the bank and strolled across the property of Arthur Taylor, near the end of the bridge. When he walked past a tree he beheld on old axe head laying on the ground a few feet from the base of the tree.

Figuring that it belong to the mar the looks of the property he started to pick it up to throw it away, but, try as he could he was unable to even budge it.

Upon investigating this somewhat unusual circumstance Mr. Fuller noticed that a tree root seemed to be the cause of the remaining so stubbornly in the ground. The truth seems to be that the root of the tree had grown out of the ground about two feet, proceeded through the hole in the ax where the handle had once been, and for about another two feet and then grew into the ground. Mr. Fuller cut the roots off at either end and it now takes the appearance of his harvest time moose head. This odd growth of nature is now on display in the window of the Ontario Intelligencer at 348 Front Street.

This is not the first of these freaks of nature that Mr. Fuller has come across. A few years ago he lost a valuable ring in the Bowmanville Lake and the beds many times in attempts to recover the ring but with little success. A year later he planted potatoes in the same patch with forgotten about the ring. Believe it or not when he pulled up some of the full grown carrots, there was the 25 cent piece imbedded in the carrot. The carrot had grown right through the coin and had imbedded tightly in the carrot.

Will wonders never cease?

Citizens Protest Any Other Outlets For Alcohol Sale

A protest against any other outlets for the sale of beverage alcohol in Belleville, other than No. 2 Highway) or other residential or semi-residential area in Belleville was voiced unanimously at a meeting of some fifty interested citizens from various organizations held in Kiwanis Community Hall.

It was decided to circulate a petition to the effect among all the citizens of Belleville and an executive committee was appointed to draft this petition and arrange for circulation. The committee named was Rev. F. W. Burt, Mr. O. Butler, Mr. A. C Cole, Mr. F. Domander, George Elliott, Major Ken. Graham, Rev. F. R. Harback, Mr. C.E. Meyers, Mr. R.L. Orr, Clifford Parker, H. C. Selden, Mr. G. Spencer, Rev. E.A. Wicks with J. Trevis Fast, secretary treasurer.

Further plans have since been made to circulate this petition on Monday, April 11, between 5 and 7 p.m. This announcement is made so that all citizens may plan to be easily contacted at that time. Canvassers will be requested through various organizations.

Belleville Still Best Says J. Bone After Journey to West Indies; Found Many Islands Unattractive

Wearing a healthy tan, Mr. Jamieson Bone returned on Thursday from an extended tour of the West Indies. He returned more firmly convinced than ever that the geographic formation of "There is no Place Like Home" knew whereof he was speaking.

Mr. Bone sailed aboard the "Lady Nelson" luxurious southern cruise liner, stopping at Bermuda, Nassau, Barbados, Trinidad and Antigua. He took a stroller from Trinidad to Caracas, capital of Venezuela where he was guest of his daughter and son-in-law Captain R.E. Dahl, and Mrs. Dahl. Captain Dahl is associated with the Linia Aeroposta, government-owned airline.

Mr. Bone who is noted for his shrewdness of speech, direct approach to the subject at hand and a decided leaning "to the point" around the bush" summed his impressions of the sunny south in the terse statement, "Belleville is the best looking place I've seen since I left."

Not So Green

"These gems of the Caribbean; these pearls of the Antilles" spoilt the impenetrable Jim Crowing with a decided "Bah!" "Most of them are just distant pastures, not as green as they appear to be."

"Many of them," he said, "are dotted with dirty-stricken, unbaked islands of volcano formation which gives one the feeling that he is liable to be blown up any minute as happened at St. Pierre, Martinique in 1902 when 40,000 were killed."

Bermuda, however, are different Dominican is a beautiful country but with little style in its lush growth, colorful flora and delectable fruits. This island has an annual rainfall of 200 inches annually. It rains 360 days out of the 365 however, only a minute a day.

Bermuda is another beautiful tropical island. It is covered with a green cedar which unfortunately has been attacked by a fungal disease which lessens the attractiveness of the approach to the island.

Bermuda Most Attractive

"Bermuda struck me as being the most attractive island of the group I visited," Mr. Bone said. "Its white and colored people alike are healthy, happy and prosperous with a number of the colored population owning attractive homes and their own businesses."

Mr. described Barbados as a "flat stretch of island, with a seeming monotony but with beautiful hotels. This island is one of the most attractive winter resorts in the south."

Touching at Trinidad, which he described as being "too hot" Mr. Bone took to the air and three hours and half hours later his plane dropped on the strip at the Caracas International airport.

"We flew over hot steaming jungles and swamplands dotted with oil wells which are the principal sources of Venezuelan prosperity. Caracas is a beautiful city nestling in a deep valley between towering mountain peaks which rise to a height of 9,000 feet," said Mr. Bone.

Caracas Colorful

With its population of one-half million, Caracas is one of the most colorful cities in South America. Beautiful while residences of the old Spanish type, terraces, patios dot the city proper.

The government of Venezuela, Mr. Bone pointed out, was one by military dictatorship. The history of the country is a long series of revolutions and counter revolution. Outstanding in the country's historical archives is the story of Simon Bolivar, "George of his time" 1830. This story is one of the most blood-curdling epics of torture, murder and graft that is found anywhere in the world, past or present.

"Caracas' hotels are beautiful beyond comparison. There is nothing in the United States or Canada that can approach them with their pure white old Spanish motif, with tall palms and wide patios. The city is making great strides and before long will be one of the most modern cities in the world.

Mountainous Country

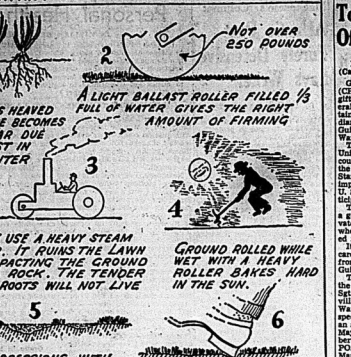
The remainder of the country is a mountainous wilderness with peaks ranging up to 16,000 feet in height. The mountains are inhabited by savage Spanish - Indian tribes whose pet hobby is to pin any intruders to white ants with six-foot darts tipped with a deadly poison.

"I" asserted Mr. Bone, "confined my activities strictly to the city of Caracas."

The climate of the city is "eternal spring" with only a minimum variance the year round hovers between 70 and 80 degrees.

Cost of everything in Caracas is "terrific", amounting to three times that in Belleville.

Among the many colorful things of Caracas is its population. Ten per cent is negroid and the rest whites, native Indians and mixed Spanish and Indians.



Many colorful characters are to be found in the Venezuelan capital. Among them are a number of ex-Nazis who have made their home there. Whites are described to visitors as "eternal bums". They usually are men of questionable character with pasts of varied hues left in their native countries. Even the Caracas bartenders define as "typical tropical tramps". Apart from these, Mr. Bone said, the city is full of pleasures."

Returns by Plane

Just prior to his sailing date for home, Mr. Bone decided the long ten-day trip via ocean liner would be too tedious. "I did not relish crawling through heat and past jungles, so I decided to return by air."

He cancelled his steamship reservation and took an airliner from the Caracas airport arriving in New York exactly 10 hours later and had hardly been in the air

Farmers Busy Across Dominion Preparing for Spring Seeding

By The Canadian Press

Spring is coming back to Canada and across the land the farmers are busy with preparations for the annual cycle of seedtime and harvest.

In Southwestern Ontario balmy weather has enabled spring farm operations to start already. In most other parts of Canada, except possibly in sections of Quebec and Manitoba, seeding is expected to get under way earlier than usual.

An old Quebec saying holds that a late Easter means late seeding. Easter Sunday this year is April 17, two weeks later than last year. But apart from folk sayings, there are indications this spring of a late start on Quebec's long fields. Snow still lingers in many areas.

On the prairies, the arrival of winter followed closely upon dry summer and fall. That meant little moisture soaked into the subsoil before cold weather came. Now many farmers are finding the land drying out rapidly but the subsoil is frozen and not workable. The farmers can make an early start on seeding but the lack of moisture in the soil could be bad for crops if spring and summer rains are scanty.

"Normal spring seeding conditions" are expected in Manitoba. Farmers plan to sow more wheat and Barley this year than last but less flax.

Start Late Next Month

Saskatchewan grain growers hope to start seeding about April 26, about 10 days earlier than last year. Their wheat acreage likely will be increased to 15,800,000 from last year's 14,389,000, but sowings of barley, rye and flax will be cut down.

Alberta expects to sow 10 per cent more wheat than last year's 6,259,000 acres, about as much barley and oats as in 1948 but less flax. As in the other provinces, the drop in flax acreage is due to flax prices no longer being guaranteed.

Agriculture in British Columbia is carried on the year 'round. Seeding is going on now in many districts.

Seeding in the Maritimes likely will start about the first week of May, with general acreage of grain crops approximately the same as last year. A large scale tree renewal and grafting program will be stepped up in the orchards of the Annapolis Valley, where 15,000 trees were grafted last year.

Fewer potatoes will be planted in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia this year than in 1948. Growers in both areas are having difficulty last year in marketing all the potatoes they produced.

British Guiana To Tend Graves Of Four Canucks

By BURCHELL O. WILLS
(Canadian Press Correspondent)

Georgetown, British Guiana (CP) — Four graves, given the gift of Canada's Governor-General that ever a small plot containing the graves of four Canadian airmen killed in British Guiana during the Second World War.

The Canadian flag — given to United States authorities by Viscount Alexander when he visited the base last year — replaced the Stars and Stripes in a simple but impressive ceremony in which U. S. and British authorities participated recently.

The ceremony was in line with a general U. S. policy to de-activate the base at Atkinson Field where the four airmen were killed in two separate air crashes.

It marked transference of the care of the graves of the victims from the American base to the British Guiana Volunteer Force.

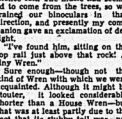
The Canadians, who flew with the R.A.F. ferry command, were Sgt. F. A. R. Milbury of Centreville, N.B., and Sgt. H. D. G. Ward of St. Lambert, Que., respectively pilot and navigator of an aircraft which crashed here on May 30, 1943; and P.O. K. F. Probert of Moose Jaw, navigator, and P.O. R. P. Bisbner, of Winnipeg, Man., wireless air gunner, of a Marauder bomber which crashed April 11, 1944, when it failed to cut during a take-off.

Buried in the same plot were P.O. S. Blackburn of the R.A.F. and Capt. H. C. Wedderburn of the U.S. civilian, who were killed in the latter crash.

To participate in the ceremony, Col. William B. Reese, chief of staff of the Antilles Air Division, flew from Puerto Rico. Others present included Sir Charles Woolley, Governor of British Guiana, and Lady Woolley; Col. L. Reed, commanding officer of Atkinson Field; N. A. Worley, Chief Justice of British Guiana; Col. W. A. Orrett, commandant of the British Guiana local forces, and Lt.-Col. E. J. Heywood, officer commanding the colony's volunteer force.

Ceremony at Grave

Units of the British Guiana Volunteer Force and airmen from Atkinson Field and the British Guiana Police Force formed a hollow square around the graves.



"As we bury them here, in a small way to the Canadians buried here," Col. Reese said, "we cannot but try to analyze the feelings and the sentiments behind the ceremony for this occasion.

"In addition to an overt act of honoring the Canadians who perished in this country in the recent war, I feel that there is a desire on the part of the people at Atkinson to express respect and friendship not only to the Canadians but to all of the people of the United Kingdom. Our statesmen have realized for a long time that our futures were inseparable.

"Here in British Guiana, on land leased to the United States, we have a Canadian cemetery. The complexity of the real estate situation is unimportant, but the symbol of the relations is most important."

BULLETINS FROM BIRDLAND

BY WINIFRED E. WILSON

WINTER WREN

A burst of song met us as we gained the top of the slope and came in sight of woods separated from ploughed land by an old, tumbled-down fence. Dancing melody flowed fast, the sound of tinkling bells interrupted now and again by gurgles; then suddenly silence fell. The music had seemed to come from the trees, so we trained our binoculars in that direction, and presently my companion gave an exclamation of delight.

"I've found him, sitting on the top rail just above that rock! A tiny Wren."

Sure enough—though not the kind of Wren with which we were acquainted. Although it might be stouter, it looked considerably shorter than a House Wren—but that was at least partly due to the fact that its stubby tail was not even standing up straight, but actually tipped forward. The bird was darker brown than any Wren we knew, and more striped underneath. While we watched, another wonderful trill welled out of his definitely that this was a new species for us to enter on our lists. But we must refer to the "bird guide."

The description of the Winter Wren which we found there fitted exactly. It was 4 inches long. It was the size of a Golden-crowned Kinglet. We read that this was "perhaps the finest songster of our northern wrens," giving "one of the longest performances of any of our birds", and not often seen by the ordinary observer because it seldom comes into the open. The "kip, kip, call note is reminiscent of the Song Sparrow's "chip, chip."

When we learned that a Winter Wren is this far south only in winter months, and generally nests somewhat north of our populated sections, we felt particularly pleased to have obtained a good view of the tiny mite, and heard his high, rippling song to advantage, before his departure — which would likely be fairly soon. In winter it frequents old brush heaps anywhere between southern Canada and the Gulf of Mexico. The breeding grounds are our deep forests, where it loves to build under old logs in upturned roots of trees or hollow stumps. Occasionally it may find a cervice in some old building not so far from civilization. The nest of twigs, weeds, and old grass is lined with a soft material: feathers, hair or moss. Unlike most bird homes, it has a circular opening.

BRONZE MEMORIALS

BY RAHN LIMITED

The use of bronze for memorials is not new, but never has it been more popular than today. The development of "Bronze on Granite" memorials, marks a distinct advance in cemetery care, and many of the largest, most beautifully landscaped cemeteries are insisting on this modern type of marker. They are impressive, economical and permanent. The first cost is less, the upkeep is nil, and are priced easily within the reach of all. The dignity and beauty of a fine cast bronze memorial and its unrivalled permanence makes it the logical selection as the cemetery tribute. The initial cost includes installation anywhere in Eastern Ontario.

For illustrated booklet and personal interview write or phone today our district representative.

PROPER AND IMPROPER USE OF HIGHWAYS

On the motor toll of 740 lives lost and non-fatal injuries to almost 15,000 persons in Ontario in 1948, the latest issue of Ontario Government Services says: "In the vast majority of cases, these accidents might more properly have been termed 'caused occurrences' — the result of the improper use of our streets and highways."

"Improper use of the highways" is explained. It "includes not only the wild, reckless, drunken driving of the irresponsible few, but it includes also the neglect, indifference, thoughtless and discourteous actions of the normally-law-abiding majority."

This latter group presents a more difficult problem to cope with than the out-and-out dangerous driving of a small share of the Ontario motorists. The faults are listed as "inattention, poor judgment, discourtesy and faulty habits," which "may be quite as dangerous under certain conditions as the foolhardy behavior of the more irresponsible individual."

Some lapses are called minor but these can and do have tremendous consequences.

The Highways Department realizes that improvement in the driving habits of such persons cannot be brought about by legislation, nor can law enforcement correct the situation since the violations are more frequently against the laws of courtesy or of good driving technique rather than against specific traffic provisions. The report makes this statement, that "in fact full insistence on all the privileges of the law is only too often the cause of an accident as when one driver insists upon his right of way in a difficult situation."

The Department has been making every effort to bring about a clearer knowledge and understanding of the requirements of good driving and safe walking. Its campaign has been carried out unceasingly with the co-operation of the newspapers and radio stations. So necessary is constant reiteration of the clear understanding of driving and walking on highways that the Highways Department will intensify its efforts at this year.

At the basis of the problem is this fact that the success of this or any safety program rests upon the willingness and determination of the individual driver and pedestrian to drive carefully, to walk sensible, to be courteous and to recognize the rights and privileges of other users of the highways.

The reward is worth while. It will mean the saving of human life — maybe, your own and the prevention of suffering and loss.

FOR CANCER CONTROL

During the month of April the people of Ontario are being asked to give $500,000 for the war on cancer.

Research is of great importance. Money contributed in the present month's campaign will in part go to the promotion of the work of research into the cause and for the cure of cancer.

Extension of facilities is also of prime importance. Six of the eight cancer treatment centres now being assisted by the Ontario Cancer Research and Treatment Foundation must have larger quarters. The Government grants will aid in defraying cost of diagnosis and treatment but cannot be used for clinical construction.

Education is one of the most important branches of the work for here is a means of saving and of extending life. It will make all adults familiar with the early symptoms of those forms of cancer which can be successfully treated. Cancer information must be made available to all people and so a decade may help to save the life of a loved one, a friend, or even himself or herself. For this purpose money is needed to provide literature, films, displays, advertising and other needs.

The service branch is of great value. It will ease the burden of the cancer patient by providing directly or through existing agencies these services: cancer dressings, local transportation services, sick room supplies, rehabilitation, occupational therapy and comforts.

The fact that more than 15,000 Canadians died of this dread disease last year indicates the need of this cause. Cancer has now become the second greatest cause of death. The Cancer Society of Canada tries to dispel fear and ignorance which still surround this disease. Many people do not know that most cancers can be controlled if caught soon enough. This is very important and recognition of this fact will help to save many lives.

We always live prospectively, never retrospectively and there is no abiding moment. — Jacobi.

THE LOST CHANCES

He thought he wanted money, so his every day was planned
To buy and sell for profit, but he couldn't understand,
When he grew to be a rich man, why his wealth so little meant.
He had all a fortune offers,
but he still was not content.

He had faithful been to business and the code of business men.
In their way he had succeeded, but he wondered, now and then,
If his friends in humbler places who had served without a sou
The needy and the helpless, were not happier than he.

He remembered many chances he had coldly brushed aside.
Which if only he had taken had enriched his life with pride.
But "too busy," he had answered; and too late, at last, he learned
There is something more than money in a lifetime to be earned.

GOOD HUNTING

A fine book for anyone to read who is interested in nature — and we all ought to be — is the one by John Kieran which he called "Footnotes to Nature." I took it from its shelf in my library to read again, as this new spring-time stirs land, in it he tells of how he always used to carry his gun with him on his tramps and adventures in the open. But soon he discarded that gun and only took, then, his camera and notebook.

I don't see how anyone who loves birds can kill them. There are such glorious, fascinating creatures. Their habits in the way of life are so stimulating to any one who will give time and observation to them. And it is so easy to make friends with them. About one's home, they are so appreciative of food thrown to them, and many return year after year to the houses placed for them.

Nothing is so thrilling as to get a good picture of the many varieties of birds that make such a good camera. Among the most beautiful and absorbing books published today are those by Edwin Way Teale, for he hunts with his cameras, and all through his books are wonderful pictures that he has taken of birds, insects, and animals. He is a master at this branch of all hunting — Good Hunting, with his cameras. I look forward to his book on the migrating of birds, on which he has been working for several years.

Naturalists often spend hours in one place just to get one new picture or information about the habits of a bird. And many rig up their camera to get a particular picture. I recently noted the picture of a bird, with its bill in a tree, in a most dangerous position, but now that the picture that he hoped to get of an eagle's nest.

I have one beautiful book just from the library, but this is not a good camera and an expert to shoot such scenes. But how greatly such pictures pay out! For years I have studied the red squirrels about my summer place in Nova Scotia, and have photographed many interesting pictures in fun in all their actions. I talk to them, and they would give more than one penny for their thoughts if I could tune in to you hunt with your camera.

THE PACKSACK

OF GREGORY CLARK

Women with a flair for interior decoration have committed terrible crimes in their day. Their worst, perhaps, occasion, was what they did to John James Audubon.

The priceless elephant folio of 435 plates of birds of America was in the form of a portfolio, and was published by Audubon in London between 1827 and 1838. Another 85 plates were added in the octavo edition printed in America between 1840 and 1844.

Somewhere about 1860, ladies with a flair began finding, in their grandfather's attics, beautiful big colored plates of birds, which could be had cheap when framed in white, with a gilt gold moulding. By the end of the century, most of the known sets of Audubons had been looted and ripped and framed to fade and go out of fashion.

Only, to come into fashion again, every few years. Dealers bought the mutilated portfolios. Collectors grabbed the single plates. I remember, in the royal tour of 1939, when we reached Fredericton, N.B., how I smelt continuation of that royal procession fell out of it for an hour or two, to go prowling in the University of New Brunswick where so they found a complete Audubon folio was to be seen. That is how rare and far apart this treasure is today.

In Canada, we have a similar though lesser tragedy; and in the same ladies with a flair for pretty wall decoration are largely to blame. In 1859, Mrs. Agnes Fitzgibbon published in Montreal "Canadian Wild Flowers," containing ten gorgeous colored plates by Mrs. Fitzgibbon and colored by her by hand. Susanna Moodie Traill wrote the text of the book. Only a few complete sets have been these plates, neatly torn from the book, and framed with that same white and gilt, on the walls of my grandmother's friends. The book, lately, in precious treasure today. Boys collecting grabbed it here, the season of redecorating is at hand. The women are unveiling around with far-away expressions. Stand to! Guard the old books!

Inter-Com System Replaces Sitters

Vancouver (CP)—On Vancouver's East Boulevard a group of six parents have mechanized babysitting.

An inter-office communication system connects the babies' room in the six homes with a master receiver at the elbow of bridge-playing mothers assembled at one of the houses.

Before they installed the system four years ago, mothers would dash home every 15 minutes or so to see if junior was all right. Now junior calls mamma.

Canada Can Have Australian Butter If She Wants It

Ottawa, April 1 (CP)—It doesn't stick to milking matter, Friday's date might explain the whole thing.

But the possibility of an April fool's joke is being given quickly discarded, the question remains: Who started all this confusing business about getting Australian butter to Canada?

After three days of checking trade and government officials both in Canada and Australia, the only tangible result is:

Canada can have 2,000,000 pounds of butter if she wants it.

That much was made definite Friday by the Australian Commerce Minister, Reginald Pollard, who seems to have started the butter confusion himself when announcing in Canberra Wednesday that Australia could supply Canada 1,000 tons.

In Hobart, Tasmania, there was some criticism about shipping butter to Canada instead of to Britain. But nobody seemed to know what shipments were in mind.

Mr. Pollard answered that criticism by saying "Canada's great contribution to Britain's need in other directions justifies any help we can give her." He said 1,000 tons of butter was being shipped.

Then, Friday, he said Canada could have 2,000,000 tons if she wanted it.

But, replied puzzled Canadian trade and government officials, Canada doesn't want any assistance. At least, not now.

The only explanation, Pollard said Friday, is a somewhat clarifying statement, that "Canada's need is great, for Canada. And further, more, if Canada didn't want to buy it, the butter would certainly basis then it would be available elsewhere by private Australian merchants.

In fact, he added, "some has already been bought and shipped," presumably to Canada.

Ottawa investigators even more.

An Ottawa agriculture minister Gardiner told the House of Comons Thursday night that Australia had brought no butter from Australia this year.

The only man who possibly could clear up the matter is Canada's High Commissioner to Australia, reported from Sydney to be en route somewhere between there and Canberra.

Great Fun In Box Full Of Baby Chicks

By H. M. SAYNER

In The Kansas City Star-Post

Whether there is any money in raising chickens or not, they are supposed to argue. We do affirm that chickens provide amusement as well as profit. We recommend you take your box of baby chicks from the station, where a noisy chorus of cheep-cheepings announces their arrival, whence a lazy disagreeably below 90 degrees, the show begins.

Baby chicks is the performance of dipping each chick's beak in water, then lifting its head so its like winding up the clock. It's fairly launched, cock-eyed, into eating and drinking career. You take him gently in your hand, dip his beak in the water, then his legs, so that one leg sticks out between the first and fourth. If he cannot get his feet on something to push against, he will sprawl himself, legs digged, and swallow a little water. Between the water and the feel of your hand, he may shut his eyes contentedly and go off to sleep.

Baby chicks, though, arrive with an appetite that defies digestions. Some are born sturdiers. When a dozen individualistic gets his feet against your hand, his strength is astonishing. Here is proven that one is only been a creature for a few short minutes.

The inventor of the feeding trough has arranged for holes that are just big enough to admit the head of a chick, but not his body. Thus, everybody can get a bite to eats more if his feet are in it. He will get them in it if it is physically possible. The baby chicks eat hundreds of calories of good energy trying to push their whole body through the holes in the feeder. When they've learned to be wary. Then in disgust he jumps on the revolving slat which is being powered by the motor running on the feeder. It spins around and dumps him on the opposite side. But he's up again and at 'em, like the Guards at Waterloo; and then he's off to the other side on the water vigor.

When chicks are about three weeks old, throw them a single scrap of meat or crust of bread and watch the fun. Hockey and lacrosse have nothing better in the line of sport. The lucky chick that gets the morsel darts away with it, all the other chicks hotfoot after him. He twists, turns, bobs, weaves, ducks and dodges and doubles.

Mackenzie's Column:

Atlantic Pact Purely Defensive Says Writer

By DeWITT MACKENZIE

Associated Press News Analyst

The North Atlantic pact as an alliance for defence, then, the people of the signatory countries are being bunco'ed by their governments.

We are assured that the alliance is purely defensive. It is an instrument of peace.

Unity and preparedness among peace-loving countries is the only "peace pact" worth the paper it is written on. Might doesn't necessarily make right, but it wields an impressive authority.

That power-packed peace alliance doesn't alter the unhappy fact that there is no way to guard against itself. It only means that the western Allies are pooling their resources and getting organized defensively against the Communist menace. It means that they are establishing a defensive frontline running from northern Norway down through central Germany to southern Italy. That's a line which aggression must not cross. Meantime the "cold war" will go on.

Foregone Conclusion

Observers in Washington understand that rejection of the Russian proposal for a Soviet alliance is a foregone conclusion. The only question is what the form of rejection will be.

It's given to wonder whether this isn't the end of the road for the western Allies to reiterate their desire for peace. It is unwise to assume that all eastern Europe knows that the Soviet Union is a menace to peace.

Undoubtedly there are plenty of Russians who believe that they do believe the western powers have had the best of it in every possible way. I don't doubt that belief, but they do some good and in any event don't affect the record.

Will Expansion End?

Such a reiteration of peaceful intentions might fit well with the views of Secretary of Foreign Secretary Bevin and some other statesmen in London and Washington. John Hightower, AP diplomatic expert in the capital, tells us that in fact, once the Atlantic pact comes into force, Moscow may decide to launch a business expansion has come to an end and that the Kremlin may seek a truce in the cold war.

This wouldn't mean that the Communist world revolution for the spread of Communism had been abandoned. It would merely be a new phase of the strain in Europe still suffering grievously from effects of the late world conflict.

Decision Must Be Made on Que. Divorce Bills

Ottawa, April 2 (CP)—Senator John T. Haig, Progressive Conservative leader, told the Senate Friday that parliament must make a decision about the Quebec divorce bills before the Easter recess.

Basing his remarks on a Commons division, in which the principle of divorce bills earlier this week, Senator Haig said if parliament is not willing to deal with divorce bills it should introduce a bill to abolish the divorce courts.

Senator Haig spoke after the government leader, Senator Wishart Robertson, moved a government order of contraband stamps. His purpose, he said, was to get rid of about 1½ tons — cost about $20,000.

Bileski, who received about 1,000 letters weekly in his mail order stamp business, was a school teacher in Sandwich, Ont., when he enrolled in 1931 to turn his avocation into a full-time job.

Doctor Clients

Bileski says that most of his clients are "older people" and that they include "an enormous amount of doctors." Bileski confesses that one of the values of stamp collecting, when children are involved, is that it spread to counteract this comic book craze.

He calculated that there are about 1,000 stamps in a million dollars — that would be the single collection with the greatest possible type of stamp. And he estimates it is within a few years of that, if it were possible for any one person to gather all the stamps in existence.

Bileski has his own private art laboratory, and he has an assortment of letter covers. In the letter category, he has a number of envelopes and replies once in the hands of his clients.

One envelope carried no address. It has a cartoon of Hitler and a shoe in the corner. It apparently was delivered to the German leader without trouble. Another envelope that Hitler apparently never received was addressed to: "Adolf Hitler, Master of the World."

Mother and Child Wounded by Shot

Toronto, April 3 (CP)—George Cooper, 45-year-old interior decorator, was arrested to appear in court on a charge of attempted murder as a result of the shotgun wounding of his daughter, 13, his wife and baby daughter.

Police said Cooper was badly beaten about the head in a fight with two of his older sons after the latter two children blasts ripped through the front window of a home by shotgun fire. end.

The pellets caught Mrs. Cooper in the side and shoulder. Eight-month-old Cynthia Cooper, in the arms of her sister, Connie, 12, was also wounded by the shot. All three were taken to hospital. Bileski was later released and authorities said charges against the other two are satisfactory.

Mrs. Cooper, mother of seven children, left her husband two weeks ago, police said, and moved with four children to live here from her husband's home to live with her parents.

Police believe the shooting Cooper neared through the front window and threw a whisky bottle in the front door. After the fight with his sons he walked to his home and returned with a 12-gauge double-barrelled shotgun.

Two shots were fired through the window and the vene[illegible] blind inside.

CHAMOMILE TREATMENT FOR VARICOSE ULCER

The more I study the situation the more I wonder how people with just an ordinary or average income manage sickness, accident, illness, accident, doctor bills and hospital bills the way the family budget.

Nowadays, I say, For it is a far greater problem today than it was when I was a boy on Chapel Street and there wasn't a poorer family in Canadaigua than the Brady family—but, come to think of it, we were hard up because injuries in an accident disabled father from earning the single breadwinning hours, but more of that another time.

Even when I was an honest doctor in Penn Yan—say what you like, fellows, I was honest in the first five or ten years of practice, and that's more than the newspaper quack or starve—medical care was far beyond the reach of people who earned their living. Of course people didn't run to "specialists" with their complaints in those days and medicine medicine was then unknown. Clinics were teaching institutions and independent laboratories were scarcely heard of, much less the use of them in the modern use of the kick-back.

But that's another story, too. In response to an increasing number of inquiries and requests from readers I purpose to tell here what I think about orthodox medicine, compulsory and voluntary health and medical insurance, in a few articles in the next few months.

Now let's see if the chamomile tea is ready. Some old timers will know what chamomile is. It is a little plant with a pretty kind of Hausfrau used it for but she never had the virtues of anything from the vapors to worms, and she drank it over her own. Chamomile flowers grow wild in some part of America and are cultivated in others, but the dried herb found in the drug stores comes from Germany or England. The growing flowers resemble daisies, and the dried flowers have a dull white color, fragrant odor and bitter, somewhat acrid taste.

For obstinate, painful varicose ulcer boil a heaping teaspoon of chamomile in four cupfuls of water, let it steep fifteen minutes in a clean vessel and let cool. When it is cold apply it to the ulcer by means of a soft cloth soaked with many layers of washed cheesecloth (gauze) and keeping this constantly moistened with the chamomile tea. Then cover the gauze with oiled silk or other water-proof cover and keep it in this way for a few hours with a bandage or by wearing over it a large stocking. Moisten the dressing every few hours with a few spoonfuls of the tea and let the dressing without change for two or three days.

Where you discover how much relief this treatment gives you and how much more rapidly healing, add to your daily prayer this one: "Bless Almighty God." God will know whom you mean. It would be too embarrassing to the doctor to name him here. All I can tell you is that he is skilled in the treatment of various veins, varicose ulcers and phlebitis. He thinks that if I would pass the chamomile treatment of varicose ulcer along to you folks it'd make a lot of them. All right. We'll wait and see. A reasonable number of friends may be desirable. I wouldn't know about that—but a lot of them never died male ills difficult, I should think. I often wonder how a character with a heart of iron dares to pay anything or do anything and risk offending or antagonizing this or that group of friends.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Croup in the Tertiel Zone

My 18-months-old daughter has croup every month. Our apartment has 78 day temperature 65 at night and the child will not stay outside. — Mrs. W. Z.

Answer—A temperature so high is favorable for the development of croup. Keep the daytime temperature down to 70. If you evaporate at least a gallon of water a day in each room an air temperature of 70 will be much more comfortable for every one. Keep the child out of doors at 75 to 78 can be. If control of croup is not by your methods, use window screens of unbleached muslin to admit cool, fresh air. Send stamped envelope to the baby's steering room. Send stamped self addressed envelope for pamphlet on Croup.

Gastric Ulcer

Husband suffers from gastric ulcer but refuses to go to hospital and I am afraid his condition is getting worse. He is only 36 and has had ulcer for 10 years. — (Mrs. M. F.) His heavy drinking over-

Answer—For the children's sake let your wife see a doctor. Ulcer is a medical ailment. There may be some help in preparing his food—consult your doctor. Alcohol You Have Indigestion. For a copy send twenty-five cents and stamped self addressed envelope.

Peanut Butter

I say very fond of peanut butter but I am afraid it is packed of jam or jellies. But I have been told it is very fattening. (M. W.)

Answer—It is a very valuable dairy butter. Peanuts or peanut butter is an excellent all-round food for anybody.

Turns Stamp Hobby Into Full-Time Job

By SAMUEL SOLOMON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Winnipeg — (CP) — Forty-four-year-old Bileski is the man who made a childhood hobby pay off.

A "bug" on stamps in his youth Bileski now is regarded as one of the foremost philatelic authorities and operators in the country. His annual business is said to surpass through his hands, and that's the figure mounts.

Only a few weeks ago, Bileski sold a single stamp for $30,000. The 300,000 stamps at an auction in Hamilton, Bermuda. He was the successful buyer of a government sale of contraband stamps. His purchase weighed 1½ tons — cost about $20,000.

Bileski, who received about 1,000 letters weekly in his mail order stamp business, was a school teacher in Sandwich, Ont., when he enrolled in 1931 to turn his avocation into a full-time job.

Quinte Tennis League Plans For Season

Recently a meeting of representatives of Point Anne, Trenton and the Quinte Tennis Club met at the Quinte Tennis Club for the purpose of making arrangements for re-opening the Bay of Quinte Tennis League for this season.

A review of last season's successful operation was given and it was decided that the time had come to try and put the league on a firmer basis.

A committee, under the chairmanship of Les Digby, Quinte Tennis Club, and members Thorold Horwood, Point Anne and Paul Jones, Trenton, was formed to prepare a constitution to present for approval to a general meeting.

Alf. Wilkes, Quinte Tennis Club, was requested to send invitations to any club in the district who might be interested in entering a team in the league this year.

It is proposed to start a league schedule about the middle of May.

A general meeting of all interested parties has been called for 8 p.m. on Wednesday, April 6th, at the Quinte Tennis Club, corner of Queen and Dufferin.

CENTENARY

Master R. Nobes entertained twelve of his young friends to his birthday party last Tuesday. This was his twelfth birthday. A bounteous supper was served complete with birthday cake. The evening was spent in games by the Sills' girls. This proved very entertaining and everyone was reluctant to break it up.

Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. R. Crowe, (nee Anita Calvert), Mr. and Mrs. Ross Marshall, (nee Evelyn Roy) and Mr. and Mrs. G. Wright, (nee Aileen Redford), on the birth of baby boys.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Lee, Colonia, and Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Lee, Batawa, spent the weekend at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. Aikens.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Woods and Mr. and Mrs. Elwin Hart, motored to Smiths Falls recently.

Mr. Mack Holton, Port Hope, spent the weekend at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. Holton.

Mr. Mervin Wellbanks spent the weekend with Mr. and Mrs. G. Sills and Keith.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Christopher, and Steve, Belleville, and Mrs. W. Hinds, Marysburgh, Prince Edward Island, spent Monday with Mr. and Mrs. E. Hart.

The theme of the conference is "Advance, O Church of God, Advance". Guest speakers will be Mrs. Roger Self, Regina, President of the Woman's Missionary Society and Miss Margaret Brown of West China.

On Tuesday evening at 5.30 a supper meeting will be held for the executive of the Presbyterial (presbyterial presidents of afternoon and evening auxiliaries) and the nominating committees. Immediately following the supper they will meet with Mrs. Self and Miss Brown to discuss ways and means of developing the Advance program in the Presbyterial.

Registration for Presbyterial will begin at 9 a.m., Wednesday, April 6th and the opening devotional will be conducted by Mrs. T. Ferguson at 9.30.

Session Highlights

"Stewardship of Year" will be presented by Mrs. S. Homan, Corresponding Secretary, in a unique manner assisted by various secretaries.

The afternoon session will be highlighted by the Dominion President's address on "Presenting Our Advance Program" at 2 o'clock. Mrs. S. W. Spotton will conduct a "Membership" forum in the afternoon.

The evening session beginning at 7.30 will be opened with a Vesper Service by Trenton Church Evening Auxiliary Miss Margaret Boyes will speak on the subject "In the Midst of the Storm". Mrs. Roger Self will be the candidate appeal. The evening program is planned for the younger people of the Presbyterial.

This promises to be one of the finest presbyterial meetings in years and a large attendance is expected. Rev. and Mrs. D. Martin of King Street United Church assisted by the members of the Missionary Society will be hosts of the occasion.

ROSLIN

Roslin—On Wednesday evening a large number attended the play "Don't Darken My Door" presented by St. James' A.Y.P.A., of Tweed, in the Anglican parish hall, Roslin, under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The setting for the three-act comedy, was the living room of Rodger Kent's country home.

Rev. Mr. Downing of Tweed, introduced the cast as follows:

Rodger Kent, a bachelor, Graham Mouck.

Rosemary Kent, his romantic niece, Betty McCulloch.

Tom Garfield, Rosemary's persistent suitor, George Owens.

Peggy Foster, maid-of-all-work, Ana Thompson.

Alec Stubbins, Peggy's devoted swain, Bryce Craig.

Louise Featherstone, Laura Thompson.

Susie Featherstone, Peggy Sherry.

Directress, Mrs. J. J. Luffman.

Between the acts, Mrs. Earl Gray gave two solos, "The Desert Song" and "My Hero".

Results of the National League hockey games between Toronto Maple Leafs, and Boston Bruins, and Montreal Canadiens and Detroit Red Wings, were given from time to time.

After the play, refreshments were served to members of the cast, by the ladies and a social time was enjoyed.

Personal

Mrs. W. Copeland and Miss D. McCormack spent a recent Friday with Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Alford and family.

"Look what followed me home, mama, can I keep him?"

For after dark dates
By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

Today I'd like to tell you about a dress that should enjoy a busy, happy social life this Spring. It would be a nice choice for late afternoon or for informal dinner and dancing dates. The dress is of navy blue tissue faille, which makes it a Spring favorite as to color and fabric. The neckline is low and square and is framed by cap sleeves. The bodice is draped criss-cross fashion, and the pannier drapery at the hips accentuates the pencil-slim skirt.

CENTENARY

Films Shown At H. and S. Meeting

Centenary—There was a large crowd in attendance at Centenary School on Wednesday evening for the March meeting of Centenary-Alfred Home and School Association. The meeting opened with regular business.

In the absence of the Secretary, Mrs. B. Hollinger, the position was filled by Mrs. Warren Spencer. The treasurer gave a very full report. The Association has purchased since existing chairs for Mrs. Keith Roblin and Mrs. C. Brown have made a record collection. This is a lovely piece of work, and a hearty vote of thanks is hereby given these two men. A microphone has been purchased which makes a very fine P.A. system.

Mrs. J. Sargent spoke on the T.B. X-ray clinic, and urged everyone to take advantage of this. She is in charge of this district and anyone wishing to procure cards, kindly contact her.

The meeting was then turned over to Mr. Seeney, district representative of the National Film Board. He gave two films, one on "Sports" and one on co-operative farming in Manitoba entitled "People With a Purpose". He led in a discussion after the picture. Mr. Ronald Longwell, Foxboro, was present, and urged everyone to take a deeper interest in their local department of Agriculture. The next meeting will be held on April 19.

Mr. Lloyd Pearson and Mrs. C. Bain then chose sides for a spelling match between the two communities. Mrs. K. Jones was the winner.

A duet by Miss Barbara Hamilton and Mr. C. Smith was much enjoyed. Master Charles Keary sang a solo and Mrs. Fred Moon gave a reading. This brought to a close a very interesting program.

Refreshments were served by the conveners and the remainder of the evening was spent in dancing.

GORE

Gore— Centre and Victoria farm forum were entertained by the Ladies' forum at Huff's Island and school on Monday evening. The evening was spent in folk dances and various games which were greatly enjoyed by all. Refreshments were served at the close of the evening and Mr. Melvin Fulwer moved a vote of thanks to Huff's Island forum who sponsored such a royal entertainment.

Centre W.A. members met at the home of Mrs. Elmer Young on Wednesday with a good attendance. The president, Mrs. John Calms called the gathering to order. Further plans were discussed for a bazaar to be held in the Fall. Mrs. Mac Wallbridge conducted the afternoon, took charge of the program period. Readings were given by Mrs. Clarence Vandler, Mrs. C. Young and Mrs. Earl Fox, followed by a contest and later, refreshments were served by Mrs. Young and her assistants.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Redner entertained a delightful party of 36 guests at their home on Friday evening. A number of games were played. The greater part of the evening was spent in playing euchre and nine tables were in play. The ladies prize was won by Mrs. Kenneth Green, men's prize by Mr. Earl Onderdonk and the consolation for ladies by Mrs. Earl Fox and the men's by Mr. Allan Wesse. Refreshments were served by the host and hostess at the close of the evening.

Personals

Mrs. Mae Humphrey and John were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Winston Pulver, and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Brooks and Glen, of Stirling, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Green and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Anderson, of Belleville, were Sunday tea hour and evening guests of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Fox and Lee.

Miss Audra Brickman, Mrs. Earl Fox and Mrs. Douglas Redner attended the Redneerville Women's Institute meeting at Miss Allan Wesse's home on Thursday.

Beautiful Windows

By A. SENDERSON

Among the many adjuncts of life which do so much in adding beauty, comfort and pleasure to every side; the glistening rainsprung the single stream, the song of birds; the whisper of the wind in the pines; the tint of flowers; and the windows, great and small, with their many colors, behind which, and in front of which so many of our waking and sleeping hours are passed.

Walking along the main street the other day, I was struck by the diversity of the windows; each seemingly in its own way the thought of the decorator; what he specifically wished to tell the public. From gazing at the local store windows, and admiring them with their various displays; their array of perfumes, competing with "all the perfumes of Arabia;" toys and dolls; sporting goods; china and silver; diamonds and pearly roses and chrysanthemums, I thought of those other windows, not so prominent, perhaps; but still for those who would, to see, whose beauty lay not in what was behind them, but in themselves, as the poet says; told by means of tiny pieces of colored glass, of infinity, and skillfully assembled together, leaded frames, making a masterpiece glowing with color, and from crayon, palette or pen, fully exemplifying the Chinese proverb, that, "One picture is worth ten thousand words."

How Glass Originated

Briefly, let us view for a few moments how "glass" came to be. Originally it was a by-product of volcanic eruption, known as "obsidian," a greenish-grey, glassy, black substance, used by the world's earliest craftsmen, the Egyptians, in such works of art as the making of pottery, vases and beads.

Gradually the art of glass-blowing was discovered, and since obsidian was fusible and the knowledge of this was carried into other lands. Finally, 4,000 years, we have great factories making items and articles of glass, and even for all kinds of purposes.

Sand, limestone and soda are the principal various genres which were greatly enjoyed by all. Refreshments were served at the close of the evening and Mr. Melvin Fulwer moved a vote of thanks to Huff's Island forum who sponsored such a royal entertainment.

First to Introduce Color

Bernhard von Linge, of The Netherlands was the first person to introduce colors to glass, and became known as the Father of Stained Glass. Little, one-inch pieces of colored glass were set in leaden frames called 'cames', and when these were assembled formed beautiful mosaics, the most well-known and finest examples of this art is found in the cathedrals of Europe, and the most renowned windows were those in Chartres, France, in the 15th century.

Belleville is rich in these wondrous, rainbow-hued, window pictures; some are found in public buildings; many in churches, and others in what were once the private homes of the city. As we begin our window-gazing itinerary, let us visit first at the

Woman's Suffrage Grows Gradually in Latin America

By REGINALD L. WOOD

Buenos Aires (AP)—Latin America is gradually opening the voting booths to women in a movement that began less than a score of years ago.

The evolution has been slow. Many things have kept women out of politics. Men were jealous of their "prerogative" of making and administering laws. Others feared social prejudices.

Suffrage in the Latin Americas ranges from simple voting privileges in local to top government and judicial posts. There never has been a woman president, but it is possible in seven republics—Cuba, Brazil, Chile, Venezuela, Ecuador, Panama and Uruguay. Thirteen Latin-American countries have extended suffrage to women. In a few countries women already have their own political groups, in the form of feminist clubs make up strong wings of existing parties.

Maria Eva Duarte Peron, wife of President Juan D. Peron of Argentina, is influential in the nation's government. She occupies an office in the labor department and concerns herself with working conditions and social welfare. Her influence in the government is undeniable.

In Chile, Gabriela Mistral knkown in private life as Lucila Godoy Alcaya—won the Nobel prize for poetry in 1945. In recognition, Chile has named her consul at Los Angeles, Calif.

Chile is among the most recent countries to give women the right to vote, but it may be in 1952 before they can cast ballots for a president or congressman. Chile's 16 recognized parties have women's auxiliaries and there is one small woman's party (partido feminista).

MAN IN FRONT OF RADIAL

Brantford, April 2 — (CP)—An eight-year-old boy playing tag was killed Friday when he ran in front of a radial freight train. Hughie Goold, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jeff Goold of nearby Mount Pleasant, was "it" and chased a playmate in front of a Lake Erie and Northern Railway train.

Edward May of Brantford, the engine driver, told police the boy jumped out of grass beside the tracks when the train was 50 feet from him. The accident occurred only 100 yards from the boy's home.

St. Paul, Minn., (AP)— Rod Barnick was tired of his shackle Friday night after he and a crew of friends had plowed through 32,744 letters containing keys to find the right one.

Barnick and the key irons put on last Saturday on the "truth or consequences" radio program in Minneapolis. Unwittingly, he later put 156 keys to the shackles on a playing along with the gag, he's sent them out. Actually, 117 letters were delivered Friday night. Mrs. Barnick took the shackle-opener from letter No. 32,744. It was postmarked from 10468 Regent St. Los Angeles, having travelled all way across the continent and back since last Saturday.

Butter plates for china of different patterns

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When I was growing up I remember that we and all our friends had "sets" of china. . . . and I was so bored with the same old patterns I decided that when I bought my own china, I would not have a "set." So I have plates of several different patterns, and we've just begining to use them, most happily, in our new house. (We're just back from the wedding trip!) But now my problem is bread-and-butter plates. . . . we haven't any, we need them, and I don't know what kind to buy that will look all right with the various patterns of plates. What do you advise?

Vera W.—!

I chuckled about your boredom with the traditional "sets" of china. I heartily agree with you, and I have never seen the reason for the uninteresting repetition of the same pattern of china, when one can have such a joyous time choosing different patterns, different color-backgrounds. It isn't easy to find just the kind of pattern in these small plates that will be in harmony with the other plates of plates. Sometimes you can buy (I've done it) bread-and-butter plates to match the larger plates, but if you can't find these, I advise you to choose the small plain white (with a fine decoration) to be used with your plates with a white background, or off-white ones for plates with an off-white background.

Engagement begins when she says "yes"

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please settle a discussion that came up in our club last evening? Two of the girls maintained that a girl and/man become engaged when the man proposes and the girl accepts. But several of the other girls insisted that they are considered engaged from the day on which the man gives the girl the engagement ring. Which is the right idea?

Fran L.

I am surprised how often this question is in my mail lately . . . It seems to be one of today's many "wonderings", and that is doubtless the reason why this question came up in your club meeting also. Actually, the girl and man are engaged when the girl accepts the man's proposal-of-marriage. This is the spiritual basis of the engagement. . . not the giving and receiving of the engagement ring, which, after all, is only the material symbol. (And if the engagement were supposed to be reckoned from the day on which the ring is given, what about the many engagements that are not "bound" by an engagement ring!)

Groom remains seated

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My fiance would like to have me ask you a question. We know that when at our wedding breakfast the best man proposes a toast, 'to the bride and groom', I remain seated while the guests rise to drink the toast. . . . but does the groom rise or remain seated?

May Bride

Since the toast is proposed to both of you, you both, bride and groom, remain seated while the toast is being drunk. Then, when the guests are seated, your groom rises and expresses his appreciation as well as his own.

When church wedding . . . but no reception

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When the plan is to have a church wedding but no reception of any kind afterward, is it proper to invite relatives and friends to the wedding?

B. T.

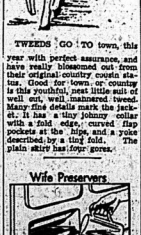
Yes, of course! A bride may prefer to have only the ceremony, thus emphasizing the religious aspect of the marriage, or for any other reason she may not wish to have a reception or any other festivity after the ceremony. But, of course, she may want to have her and her bridegroom's relatives and friends with them at the ceremony.

Shoes With a Sandal Look

BY PRUNELLA WOOD

THE PRETTIEST feet are wearing bronze sandals shoes this resort season, and as go the chic resorters in Winter sunshine, so go we all, come Summer at home.

The bronze shoes shown you here are new, in that a sandal with her husband! I have been putting it off, as I couldn't want to see anyone's home broken up, and I don't know just what would be the outcome, as I hear he is a man who is a very heavy drinker.



"I have said that I husband to leave me, but he says he won't because this is his home. I have no one I can go to, and anyhow I don't like to see my home broken up. But I can't go on like this much longer."

I hope this woman will not carry out her idea of going to see this other woman's husband, as it can only make things worse all around. If she herself can have the forbearance to ignore the situation for awhile longer, it might be that in time her husband may tire of this affair and decide to be a real husband again to his wife. In the meantime, I urge her to try and avoid quarreling with her husband about this matter, but at the same time to make it quite clear that as long as he continues it, her only duty is to her children.

There is one other suggestion that "Broken-hearted Wife" might consider. That is, it might help her to discuss her problem with someone in person. If she would like to do this, I would be glad to tell her where she can go in her vicinity to find someone who will try to aid her.

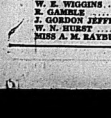
ADVICE to the LOVELORN

BY BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A mistake betrayed wives often make

There is one very common mistake that women often make when they discover that their husbands have been unfaithful to them. This mistake is for the wife to go to the woman in the case and ask her—and the asking usually amounts to crying and pleading—to let her husband alone.



Such behavior usually does little but aggravate an already inflamed situation. To try to drag a husband out of an entanglement by this kind of main force accomplishes nothing. He also cases out of ten, a wife who makes this mistakes only succeeds in angering her husband and antagonizing the other woman. Then she has two against her instead of only one. One wife who has fallen into this error writes me that her husband has been having an affair with a married woman for about five years. "It all started," she says, "when I became sick, and had to go away for quite some time. . . When I came home I heard about it, but couldn't believe it, as my husband has been just wonderful to me. But as time went on, I found out that it was true.

"I spoke to him about it and he admitted it. I went to see the woman and pleaded with her not to see him any more, but it didn't do any good, as the affair is still going on. I have five children.

Besides going to see the woman herself, my correspondent, who signs herself "Broken-hearted Wife", intended reporting the affair to the woman's husband.

Another husband pleaded with me not to go and see him," she writes, "as he said it would be the one who would get hurt. Do you think I should have a talk

Women's Club Seeks Outlet For Energies

BY ARIENNE LEZAK
Canadian Press Staff Writer

New York (CP)—The Canadian Women's Club of New York is looking for a new way to use its energies.

Through the war and since it has been helping Britain with food and clothing shipments. Now this need there is less, club officers say, and a new philanthropic problem will be decided upon at the annual meeting in March.

"We'd like to channel our activities in some other direction," says Mrs. Duncan Fraser, former president, in an interview.

Aims of the club are defined as "social and philanthropic." Many Canadian women newly arrived in New York can testify that it has lessened homesickness. Scores attend the club's weekly teas and even more dine at the occasional fanction to entertain a visiting celebrity.

But the club's main emphasis is on philanthropy. In one war year it sent thousands of hand-made garments to British children, provided an ambulance for the army in Halifax, sent a mobile canteen to Britain and helped equip service canteens in Canada and Newfoundland.

The thrift and organization exercised by the 200-odd members is demonstrated in the fact that of a membership of 700 when the war began, administrative expenses accounted for only fifth.

Need Not So Great

Clothing and food parcels still are going overseas, though Mrs. Fraser is hopeful that Mrs. Roosevelt and a trustee of the club will "there isn't quite the same enthusiasm as in 1939. Now that we know people were being bombed out of their homes."

The Canadian Women's Club was founded in 1930. Two of the chief organizers were Toronto women—Dr. Mary Lee Edward, now principal of the Women's Hospital here, and Miss Jessie M. Murdoch, head of Jarvis City Medical Centre. President this year is Mrs. B. Moir Leslie of Halifax.

Any woman born in Canada or the daughter of Canadian parents may become an active member; associate membership is available for women born in the United Kingdom and those who have married Canadians.

The club is not affiliated with any other society in New York or Canada "although naturally we try to help each other out when ever possible," said Mrs. Fraser, "and a lot of our members also belong to the Canadian Society of New York."

Activities of the club include an annual bazaar, which, with donations from club members and friends, constitutes the main revenue, regular sewing and knitting groups, weekly bridge parties, an annual dinner and supper dance, and a weekly tea. Dues with the tea is called the "Tea of the Province." Members from one province cook, act as hostess for the afternoon.

Each province and Newfoundland is represented in the membership of the club.

Fashion Show Chat Swings to Advice

Montreal (CP)—Women's fashions are always changing and now there comes a change in the manner of fashion-show presentation, says Betty Merrick, Montreal fashion commentator and writer.

"The day of mention ornament, ing when it was just a lot of chit-chat is going out," said Miss Styran. "The new fashion is telling women what they should wear and how a particular style is appropriate for a particular silhouette."

It's fine to try and put Designer Dior across but, says Betty, "there's much point in trying to sell it to a woman who is not going to have any more to do with it than look at it in a fashion magazine."

She tries to tell why a garment is in fashion and to what ages and figure-types it is suited.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Keeping the neck in form

When you see a gardenia-and-rose face supported by a marigold-colored neck you wonder how the two of them ever got together. You may observe a radiant, smooth face that is upheld by a scrawny neck. Strange combination, these! But explainable. The age-conspicuous parts are unoiled, pasted, carefully powdered. The neck is on its own. It gets even for neglect. It loses youthful contour. The skin may become coarse and discolored.

Get neckwise, my friend. If you are in your twenties, it is time to do something. When slathering on the fragrant cream at bedtime, start at the collar bones. If the neck comes first, it will not be overlooked. Stroke up and-down with flattened fingers. While doing this, let the muscles be relaxed.

Do not overlook the fact that double chins and chin can come early in life, so, while you are at it, tone the muscles that extend from the angles of the jaws and the corners of the mouth up to the temples. They are the ones that keep the lines of the chin and throat tight and firm. Sweep along the jawline with outspread fingers, then up over the cheeks. Massage is strengthening and normalizing, more so than many women realize.

Beauticians can do and are doing much for double chins and necks. A facial is more than a facial if it includes a good deal of surrounding territory. It is not a perfunctory mastering of a few square inches, but painstaking cleansing and massaging until the flesh has no longer the signs of contact with harsh fabric that often leaves pinch marks and often are laden with dust.

The back of the neck takes a lot of punishment from collars and furs. Suppose you take a double-chin chart to a facialist. You may be surprised. With the short crop, there is no friendly mane to curtain and conceal it. There may even be a double chin.

Remember, that little thing has happened to evet the most fastidious girls.

Sketched by Peg Bracken Jackson, for Fullness under the chin can come from age

After applying cream, rubbing it in well, manipulating the flesh lightly so as to strengthen the tissues, apply an astringent. Witch hazel serves this purpose. If the skin seems to lift loose, an ice friction will be found helpful. Rub the cube in the face you would keep yourself from feeling shivery.

You may find comfort in a chin strap. But remember, it isn't just the support that helps the strap should hold a cold compress. In a few minutes the flesh will glow; that shows that the blood streams have heard the call and coming along to feed depleted cells.

Lastly, keep your head on the level. Letting the chin drop is a habit that leads to the fine lines of chin, jaw and throat.

RUSSIA ASSAILS ATLANTIC PACT IN MEMORANDUM

Soviet Protest Will Be Rejected, Prediction

By EDDY GILMORE

Moscow, April 2 (AP).—Russia today assailed the North Atlantic pact as an offensive instrument designed to daunt those countries which refuse to accept Anglo-American world domination.

An acid Soviet memorandum charged it violates international agreements and undermines "the very foundations" of the United Nations organizations," the memorandum charged.

The pact, the note asserted, violates existing treaties between Britain and Russia, France and Russia and the Potsdam and Yalta agreements.

Transmission of the memorandum was announced in the official Soviet news agency, Tass. It went to the United States, Britain, France, Belgium, Canada, The Netherlands and Luxembourg, the original signatories.

It appeared as statesmen from the seven countries gamed and other western powers were gathering in Washington for ceremony of a joint British-American military staff at Washington, and a west European union defence organization with headquarters in France, the memorandum said.

Russia charged that language in the treaty describing it as being formed within framework of the United Nations is a "cover up" of aggressive intent. None of the signers is threatened with attack, so article 51 can not apply, it said. The memorandum asserted that the pact violates article 53 of the U.N. charter which bans regional groupings under certain circumstances.

Russia's mutual-assistance treties with Communist countries and Finland and Britain are bilateral and "directed solely against a possible repetition of German aggression," the note said, and therefore are not comparable to the North Atlantic treaty.

"One cannot but see the groundlessness of anti-Soviet motives of the North Atlantic treaty," the note said, "inasmuch as it is known to all the Soviet Union does not intend to attack anyone," the note said.

Rejection Foreseen

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

Washington (AP) — Diplomatic authorities predicted today that the United States and 11 other Atlantic pact nations will reject outright Russia's protest against their security treaty.

Russia's protest was delivered here last Thursday, having been sent around to the State Department by all the nations embassies.

The text as released by the Russian news agency complained that the North Atlantic Pact, due to be signed here Monday by 12 countries, is aggressive in character and is directed against the Soviet Union. Russia had previously taken this stand in a less formal way.

There was no immediate official comment here, but there appeared not the slightest chance that the protest would affect the signing schedule.

Acheson scheduled a high-pressure round of conferences with Western European foreign ministers today. They included a talk on Germany with Robert Schuman of France.

Acheson arranged talks later in the day with the foreign ministers of Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg (4:30 p.m.) and Portugal (5:15 p.m.). They will go into the pattern of a determined effort by the Atlantic Powers to iron out all their major differences. The unity effort will be made partly by the Atlantic Treaty to be signed here Monday.

Emphasis on "Peaceful" Nature

Thursday Acheson discussed the German and Greek situations as well as other European questions in a two-hour talk with Foreign Secretary Bevin of Britain, then went immediately into a conference with Dirk U. Stikker, Netherlands foreign minister, with whom he talked mostly about Indonesia.

Sir Harry Lauder to Take It Easy, Quits "For Good"

By RUSSELL LANDSTROM

Strathaven, Lanarkshire, Scotland —(AP)— Sir Harry Lauder, who once left from mill boy and coalminer to word fame as an entertainer, is retiring at last — and for good, he says.

The Scottish genius of song and mimicry, who has entertained three — or is it four? — generations of admirers around the globe feels that at 78 he's entitled to take it easy.

Many people think he quit work years ago. Far from it. It should be as long as commercial swan song in the middle '30s, he didn't stop being a minstrel as through the war he sang, capered and pantomimed for troops at home, charity, the war effort generally.

No amount of advice could induce him to give it up after the war was over. With his niece and helper, Miss Greta Lauder, he went right on organizing shows, recruiting local talent, playing Scottish town on Scottish town, churches, schools, hospitals, youth clubs, flower shows and other community projects.

Those causes need help now more than ever, he fired back at those who told him to slow up. "Besides, my work has always been my hobby and to stop work would be to stop living."

So he kept on the go, singing his songs, but more and more himself — musical milestones in a career that stands out in the whole rich history of the stage.

Remember them? "Roamin' in the Gloamin'," "I Love a Lassie," "She Is My Daisy," "We Deoch an Doris," "It's Nice To Get Up In The Morning," "Lass Of Killicrankie," "Donald, The Baker," "Somebody's Waiting for Me," "Keep Right On to the End of the Road."

For all his zest and durability, however, Sir Harry was pressed to a few months ago to call a halt. Even now, though, he shrinks from the word "retirement."

"It's a word I've simply always been far too busy to use, and one I've avoided. I've worked hard all my life and enjoyed every minute of it. Still, I suppose a man can't go on forever, although I'll be perfectly content to do it, daresay it's time I took a breather."

A Reservation

Characteristically, Sir Harry reserves the right to step out again if he feels he can do sufficiently worthy cause appeals to him. Both those closest to him are confidently his retirement may be accepted as complete.

Sir Harry, who has grown stockier, ruddier and balder with the years — and there's little to a bare mill. It paid him only two shilling and a penny (a trifle more than 40 cents) a week. But life has brought him, in his own words, richness beyond his dreams, rare experiences, fine friendships and extraordinary opportunities to help his fellowmen.

The eldest of seven children, he was obliged by his father's death to go to work at 11 to help support his mother, four brothers and two sisters. After the mill job came a stint in the coal mines of Lanarkshire. His singing baritone voice convinced him he had a chance to escape from rough labor. He joined a concert party, made a hit at a week's trial at a Glasgow music hall, then his provincial music hall, then his first London engagement.

"What an entry into Mecca," he recollected. "I had five pounds (about $20) in my jeans, and fear and trembling in my heart."

He ended up in a street lodging house, lived mainly on bread and cheese. A relief job for a stick comic in a rough and tumble music hall opened the way to better things. His audiences banged and yelled their approval of "Tobermory" and "Stop Yer Tickler, Jock." Before the week ended half the genius in London were clamoring for contracts.

Laughing, ambitious Harry Lauder certainly had turned the corner. Good songs followed one another with that sure touch which others later described as magical. The United States beckoned, but hesitantly at first. One man met him when his ship came in was reported to have groaned: "We've booked a Scot, four feet nothin', with crooked legs and a nose that's the size of his face."

But Harry was a hit from the moment he popped onto the stage at a New York theatre. In later years he made more than a dozen trips to the States and Canada, and toured triumphantly over the world, a bandiller playing to packed houses.

Knighted in 1919

When the First World War broke out he became a great morale builder, a kind of international Santa Claus. His wartime services knighthood was conferred on him in 1919.

Always generous with money, he encouraged yarns about his apocryphal stinginess. He was a kind out of them. But the real Harry was kind and generous.

In the statements so far made on the treaty by Bevin and others it has been emphasized and stressed here for the signing of the treaty by all the countries has been placed on the "peaceful" and defensive nature of the alliance. Virtually nothing has been said about the real power which will be arrayed behind it.

Diplomats viewed Winston Churchill's outspoken speech in Boston last night as sharply pointing up that aspect of the project. The former British prime minister declared bluntly that American possession of the atomic bomb during recent years had proved to be the only salvation of Europe against Communist Russia.

Only U.S. is Now In Canada's Class In Resources

* Toronto, April 2 (CP)—Transport Minister Chevrier Thursday night told more than 700 members of the Newfoundland Association of Toronto that "no other country in the world with the exception of the United States is in Canada's class in wealth or natural resources now that Newfoundland has entered the Confederation."

"As Canadians, we are accustomed to choosing our friends," said the federal minister. "We need have no doubt of Newfoundland because we believe Canada will be a greater country because of its entry."

2,500 Fewer Unemployed Seen In 3-Week Report

Toronto, April 2 — (CP)—The number of unemployed in Ontario dropped 2,500 during the three-week period March 3-23, Bert Sullivan, regional director of the Dominion Unemployment Insurance Branch here reported today. Job opportunities increased slightly.

Declines in unemployment figures were reported in Cornwall, from 1,678 to 1,440; Hamilton, 2,315 to 2,150; Kingston, 833 to 747; Kitchener, 1,861 to 1,762; London, 1,305 to 1,101; Oshawa, 1,210 to 1,149; St. Catharines, 1,702 to 1,516; and Windsor, 3,742 to 3,497. Small increases were reported in Belleville and Ottawa.

Sailing Maritimer Uses Big Ketch

Halifax — (CP) — Capt. W. A. (Bill) Crowell is living proof that Nova Scotia is still building ships and iron men. In his 23-foot ketch the "Queen Mary," he has sailed 65,000 miles on voyages that have taken him around the North American continent and through the St. Lawrence River and Great Lakes.

In July of 1938 he set out from Halifax with companion. His only companion was his dog Togo. Nova Scotia was at his destination 14 months and six days later, after covering 12,000 miles.

His second trip, made in 1939, took him up the St. Lawrence River, into the Great Lakes and through the canal system to New York where he was greeted by the captain of the Cunard liner Mauretania. Then on to the Gloucester, Mass., and was named honorary commodore of the Gloucester Fishermen's Races.

His travels were interrupted by the Second World War but in July, 1947, he sailed for Hawaii. Yesterday in the harbor, spectators across the Gulf of Mexico for the British Isles. Thursday he encountered a bad storm that almost took his life and forced him to return home.

Now age has no navigate? Capt. Crowell said he can use instruments but would rather depend on dead reckoning. In fact he claims he would have attempted his last trip without a clock or compass if his fellow church people had not pressured him with one.

Recently, when a freighter sailed into Halifax harbor, spectators gasped when they saw half a boat lashed to the decks of the freighter. It was the 23-foot craft of Capt. Alain Gerbault, who sailed from Nassau, Bahamas and not having the $680 for shipping his boat home, he sawed it in half.

He now intends to rebuild it and sail her in the Halifax bicentenary celebrations this summer.

BREWERY WORKERS STRIKE

New York, April 2 — (AP)—A strike of 7,000 workers at 14 breweries in the New York Metropolitan area began early today, a union spokesman for the Brewery Workers of America (CIO) announced.

The plants involved include virtually all major breweries in the area.

The strike action came after an unsuccessful 13-hour negotiation session.

Key issues concern job security and plant safety conditions.

The union also is seeking an $8.50 increase in the present week-a-pay (37½ hour) section in the work week from 40 to 35 hours and other benefits.

'Little Assembly' Has Proposals For Mediation

By NORMAN ALTSTEDTER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Lake Success, N.Y., April 2— (CP) — The Russian-boycotted "Little Assembly" of the United Nations has new proposals for mediating international disputes, including the cold war.

Meanwhile, the Little Assembly Thursday laid more long-range plans for improving international co-operation.

Formed in 1947, the Little Assembly Thursday laid more long-range plans for improving international co-operation.

Formed in 1947, the Little Assembly meets between sessions of the General Assembly and handles secondary problems of keeping the peace. It has concentrated on devising methods of conciliation.

The Little Assembly's plans, some members said, offer a way for Russia to co-operate with the majority in the U. N. — if the Soviet Union wants to ease East-West tension.

Russia and the Eastern European countries boycott the Little Assembly, contending it seeks to by-pass the Security Council. Will Russia Take Seat?

However, Russia took her seat in the trusteeship council after boycotting it for more than two years. Some observers say Russia might do the same in the Little Assembly.

Its proposals are:

1. Use of the veto should be limited. The veto has been wielded 31 times — 29 by Russia and twice by France.

2. Conciliation steps should be standard practice. Mediation of a new case should start as soon as both sides have laid down their arguments.

3. The president of the General Assembly should use his power of moral persuasion in an attempt to conciliate problems in the same way.

4. A panel of conciliators should be on call for the Security Council and the General Assembly. This would be in the hands of the ing of Chester W. Nimitz, retired United States fleet admiral, named recently as administrator of the plebiscite in Kashmir.

The Little Assembly also will consider a Russian resolution calling on the Security Council to apply the method of conciliation where necessary to develop co-operation between states.

Canadiens Brace Selves For Last Ditch Stand

Montreal, April 2 (CP)—With defeat looming as elimination from the Stanley Cup playoff hinted, Montreal Canadiens defend their last-ditch stand against Detroit Red Wings in the sixth game of the final series here tonight.

And if Montreal Coach Dick Irvin carries out his threat to bench seven of his top-producing veterans, the Habitants may present a reshuffled lineup in a bid to prolong their current National Hockey League series to a seventh game. The Wings lead the series 3-2 after taking the last two games by identical 3-1 scores.

Irvin said he may use Floyd Curry, up from Buffalo of the American League, on right wing in place of either Maurice Richard or Joe Carveth, the second and third highest scorers for Montreal during the regular schedule.

A Montreal victory would send the teams back to Detroit for the seventh and deciding clash Tuesday.

While the Habitant forwards go all out for goals, one man goalie Bill Durnan of the Montreal defence will have to stop is big Gordie Howe. The shifty left-winger has scored all the 13 Detroit goals in the five games to date.

At his present pace, Howe has a good chance to break Richard's record of 12 goals he set in the 1945-46 playoffs. In marked contrast to Howe's sensational effort, Richard in this series has only been able to connect for one counter.

The Rocket's slump started at the tail-end of the schedule when he could only score one goal in the last 11 regular games.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE B. CARVER, Sports Editor

If Toronto's youthful Maple Leaf cockerels believe in lunches and aren't allergic to numbers, they had better ditch their Stanley Cup wears on the flavors "X". R. W. Hewitson, Toronto Tely sports editor, while doing his regular hot-stove league during which way the wind blew night came up with the surprise that the present hectic Stanley Cup series was becoming definitely linked up with that number.

Subsequent events and those preceding Hewitson's statement would strengthen what the Toronto sport writer claimed. Since that we've been doing a bit of research work, and adding it to current Stanley Cup events, it would definitely seem that "X" is closely tied in with the mad rush for the Stanley powerwares.

For instance, in the ten games played to date, "X" plays a prominent part in the scores. Eight of the ten have finished with one team or the other scoring three goals. Toronto defeated Boston 3-0; 3-2; 3-1; 3-1. Canadiens defeated Detroit 4-3; and 3-2. The Redwings turned back the Habs 3-2 and 3-1 besides handing them a 3-1 defeat which totals three goals. The remaining game saw Boston defeat Toronto 5-4 which adds up to nine, a multiple of three. Three games have ended with 3-1 scores.

Maple Leafs defeated the Bruins four games to one in their series, or by three games. Then Jay Deitzel boys turned back Canadiens three times. According to the "bunch" Les Habs handed defeatism the Wings in Montreal to win their third game, and by a three-goal margin.

Boston lost the services of Milt Schmidt, Johnny Crawford and Peters, three of their star players. The Leafs brought up six Pittsburgh Hornets, or twice times three. If Leafs take the Stanley Cup, it will be their third straight win.

The figure "three" has been prominent in Stanley Cup and National Hockey League playoffs. Boston Bruins won the National League title in 1941-42. Montreal Canadiens copped it in 1944-45 and 46 and added 1947 for good measure.

The old Montreal Victoriaz was the first team to crash the charmed three-in-a-row circle in Stanley Cup playoffs. They won the title in 1927-28 and 29. The great triple-year winner was the famous Ottawa Silver Seven who copped the hardie in 1902-03. Montreal Wanderers were next winners in 1906-7-8. From that time to the present, honors were distributed among the teams with several winning two years in succession. Maple Leafs can join the small coterie of triple-year winners by taking the cup this year. Wanna bet three beers?

Tonight at the YMCA the Belleville Pappas Billiards Intermediate basketball squad clash with the Broadview YMCA team, winners of the second game of their points-to-count series. The Broadviews defeated the local squad in Toronto last week by a 46-33 score earning a thirteen-point margin to take in the game tonight. Billiards led at the half-way mark 15-14 then faltered badly with the Y crew racking up a substantial margin. However, Coach Walkley crew with much in their favor are confident they can not only defeat the city team but bring home the round bacon. Game starts at 8:30.

The Bay of Quinte District Soccer League is seeking referees. With the advent of the soccer season it is rather important that any person or persons with experience in this line come forward to lend a hand in the development of the league. The referee is essential to a good game of soccer and the executive has a number of persons come forward with their assistance. Any interested parties are asked to contact the secretary, Douglas Eaton at the YMCA in Belleville.

The league expects to get under way on or about May 24th. The meeting attended by eight clubs voting representatives and many non-voting people went on unanimous record as being completely satisfied with the Ontario Softball Association. The schedule will be drawn up as soon as the definite number of entries is received.

Four teams from the Bay of Quinte district will engage in COSSBA basketball championships being held in Toronto next Friday and Saturday. In the girls series, Napanee will represent the district in the junior series while Albert College will uphold the honor of the local set-up in the senior series. "Red" Townsend's BCI juniors and senior boys' teams will be in charge in the men's series. The games are being held at Parkdale Collegiate Institute and the Hart House gymnasium.

Kid Gavilan Beats Williams In Non-Title Bout

And there's a good chance that the Cuban flash soon may be matched to meet Sugar Ray for the title in Yankee Stadium this summer.

Robinson was an interested spectator Friday night when Gavilan, a 2-to-3 underdog, won a 10-round, non-title decision over lightweight champion Ike Williams in Madison Square Garden. The unanimous verdict made it two straight for the Kid over the Trenton, N. J., Negro. Williams copped the first bout 12 months ago.

A capacity crowd of 18,201 paid $60,885, biggest gate of the indoor season, to see the "rubber" bout of a thrilling series.

The Havana contender, sporting a 9¼-pound bulge in the weights —146 to 136½ — won with a blistering surge in the last two rounds. He bulled Williams all over the ring in those vital frames connecting solidly with flashing left hooks and right uppercuts.

The weight difference was too much for Williams to overcome. He came from behind with a spurt in the fifth, sixth and seventh rounds but was spent after that. Williams clipped Gavilan with four rights in the sixth but the Kid didn't even blink. Neither scored a knockdown.

Ottawa, April 2. (CP)—Montreal Royal Juniors will be shooting for their third straight victory in their best-of-five Eastern Canada semi-final series against Inkerman Rockets when they meet again in Montreal next Tuesday night.

The Quebec Junior Champions took a 2-1 lead in the first half of Friday night's second meeting to turn back the Ottawa District color-bearers 7-4. They won the first game 10-2 in Montreal earlier this week.

Tag Miller's Royals are strong favorites to oust the Rockets in three straight games and advance into the final brackets against the Ontario Hockey Association Junior champions.

The Hirschfeld-Langill-Frampton line was the standout contribution for the Royals. Hirschfeld and Frampton led the Montreal scoring with two goals each, while the others were evenly divided among Dick Moore, Neil Langill and Gordie Armstrong.

Soccer Notes

(By D. E.)

Soccer is now definitely established in the sport realm of Belleville. Clubs are now in the process of being organized with definite ideas of putting soccer on the map in this district. Northern Electric, Bata and American Optical are now organized as clubs with elected executives. The executive of the league has met and formulated plans for the coming season. With the coming of the warmer weather it is hoped that the various clubs will be seen on the playing fields preparing themselves for the games ahead. According to Les. Digby, president of the league: "No effort will be spared to give Belleville the best possible in association football."

• • •

At a recent meeting of the Northern Electrical Club, Bob Baverstock was elected chairman of the club. Other officers of this club are Jack Jones, vice-chairman; Sect. Treas., Jack Bennett; manager, Bill Gander; trainer, Morris Fogarody. Bob Baverstock announced today that his club will field a strong team and will wear arsenal colors, red and white. Bob also said that Northern hopes to have its own grounds at Sidney Street. Over twenty employees of the company have signified their intention of turning out for the team.

• • •

The Belleville United Club will be holding a meeting at the Y. M. C. A. on Monday at 8 p. m. and any players or other interested persons are invited to attend. Membership in this club is open and as a consequence a large number of enthusiasts are expected to attend as this team will be representing local talent. Any interested persons will be welcome.

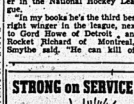
Word has been received from the American Optical Club that they are now in a position to hold a general meeting of their players so that an executive can be elected to operate the club.

Joe Klukay Given Praise By Con Smythe

Toronto, April 2 (CP)— Joe Klukay, the wingman from Sault Ste. Marie Ont., who has been working quietly and effectively all season for the Toronto Maple Leafs, got a big bouquet of praise yesterday from Leaf president Conn Smythe, who called him "the most underrated player in the National Hockey League.



"In my books he's the third best right winger in the league, next to Gord Howe, Detroit's ace, and Rocket Richard of Montreal," Smythe said. "He can kill off those penalties, too."

With Leafs marking time until they meet either Montreal Canadiens or Detroit Red Wings in defence of the Stanley Cup, Smythe thinks a lot of his line of Klukay, Max Bentley and rookie Ray Timgren.

"Bentley will never play in any N.H.L. uniform but that of the Leafs," he said. "I've had offers for him but I've laughed at them."

The trio, nicknamed the Three Feathers Line because of its feathery touch, were linked in early February and have been going strong ever since.

Big Fish And the Solunar Tables

BY JOHN ALDEN KNIGHT
(Noted Sportsman, Angler and Creator of Solunar Tables)

Every fisherman, regardless of age, color, creed or variety, dreams of hooking, playing and landing some day if the gods be kind, the fish that will break all records. Each time he ventures forth to lake or stream, hope springs anew that this may be the day.

In other forms of sport, such as duck gunning or upland shooting, the size of the quarry is more or less standardized. Game birds are not pretty much to pattern. With fishing, however, anything can happen. Game fish run in a wide range of sizes and records are constantly being broken.

In Paris, France, the banks of the Seine are lined each day with gudgeon fishermen. It is a rare thing to see one of these fellows hook or catch a fish, but they must take one now and then to keep their ardent enthusiasm at its constant peak.

Gudgeon, in case you may not have heard them, are tiny fishes, but the Frenchmen price them highly.

Large Specimen Landed

Some years ago a gudgeon fisherman landed a truly monstrous specimen. Its length was measured and its weight was taken in grams so that the proper record could be made. Somehow in the confusion and excitement the measurement was recorded incorrectly, with the inevitable subsequent dispute.

For a period of two weeks, off and on, Paris news releases appeared in the New York papers giving us the latest up-to-the-minute details about whether the monster gudgeon measured the metric equivalent of six and one half or six and five eighths inches. After all, it's all in the point of view.

Since all of us are in annual quest of bigger fish, and better, let's take a look at a few of the pertinent facts that may have some bearing on our success.

In the first place, a large fish probably is a smart fish, as fish go; otherwise he would not have lived long enough to grow to such proportions. That being the case, extra care should be used in fishing for him. Unusual noise or any slight appearance of the unnatural in your tackle and its behavior will serve as a warning that all is not as it should be.

Big Ones Shy

And here is another thing about the big fellows. Because of their extra bulk, the majority of them hesitate to expose themselves at the surface, as to be an invitation to their natural enemies. For that reason most record fresh-water fish are taken on subsurface lures.

Another rule of the big fellows will take a surface lure best that is the exception rather than the rule.

One of the most successful bass fishermen I know takes a great many of his bigger fish at depths of twenty, twenty-five and thirty feet, fishing his casting plugs slowly and erratically. Another man who catches far more than his share of large trout, does so by using weighted nymphs that sometimes sink down next to the bottom of the deeper pools.

It must be remembered that adult fish need only occasional food. A growing fish who is putting on flesh and bone must secure food regularly in order to gain weight. An adult fish who has attained most of his growth must feed only enough to keep himself in good condition.

One of Ten

The biologists tell us that it takes about ten pounds of natural food, such as minnows, insect larvae and crustaceans, to build a pound of fish. Conversely, it takes only about one pound of such food to keep a pound of fish healthy and in good condition for a season.

Thus an adult fish eats only one tenth as much in proportion as does a smaller, growing fish. Consequently, he is not apt to be a most part, the lesser members of the species.

A fish that feeds only now and then can be expected to be somewhat hungry and therefore somewhat less mealtimes. If conditions are not suitable he will remain quietly in his resting station and ignore your lures and flies. Under conditions must be favorable for him to feel inclined to feed and then he must be lucky for himself.

It has been quite well established that the trends of the barometer have their effects on the fish's feeding habits, a rising glass or a steady one is preferable and a falling glass is bad news.

Water temperatures and water conditions and levels also are important. Any abnormalities in these will be bad for the fishing.

Favorable Periods

A diligent study of the vital statistics surrounding the capture of more than two hundred record fish shows that the great majority of the fish were taken during the dark of the moon or the first quarter. And if the moon happens to be in perigee so much the better.

Thus, if you can find a day when the weather is fair, when water conditions and temperatures are right, when the moon is in the proper position, and when the barometer is steady or rising, the probabilities are that you will have a good day for hooking that fish of your dreams, either in fresh or salt water.

Having selected the day, the next thing is to determine the time or times of that day when the fish are most apt to be active and feeding. That is where your Solunar Tables really pay off.

Over ninety-five per cent of the record fish mentioned earlier were hooked during the Solunar Periods.

So there you are, equipped with all the rules and regulations. Here's hoping that you can hook that big boy this year and, just as important, land and get onto him long enough to tire him out and bring him home with you.

Near-Capacity Crowd Will View Senior Contest

Toronto, April 2 — (CP)—Toronto Marlboros and Sydney Millionaires will clash for the Allan Cup emblematic of Canadian senior hockey supremacy, when the two teams, first and third place finishers in the Ontario Hockey Association senior series, meet in the first game of the best-of-seven series at Toronto Gardens tonight.

Undertings going into the first game of the best-of-seven series last Wednesday, the Nova Scotia squad forced the Dukes to a 1-1 tie and Toronto fell itself lucky to have scored, 53 seconds before the game ended. The close rivalry is expected to draw a near-capacity crowd to Maple Leaf Gardens tonight.

Coach Joe Primeau of Marlboros says his boys will "go get 'em with hustle and speed," while Sydney's counterpart, Coach Jack Fritz, thinks his team will show much better now they have become accustomed to the Gardens ice surface and the opposing squad.

Toronto defenceman Alex Barkwell was lost to the team in a workout Friday when he crashed a goalpost and tore ligaments in his right ankle. Primeau will send young Gord Simpson, from the Marlboro juniors to replace him. George Armstrong, who has been improving all year in the junior ranks, will be used to pack the Duke lineup.

Two other Toronto players, Ray Hannigan and Al Buchanan, missed practice Friday — Ray with a cold and Al with a sore hip — but both will dress tonight.

The Duke Sydney's top playmakers, Gord Whalen and Alex Bilyea, also missed Friday's workout. Whalen is resting an injured knee and Bilyakew has a swollen ankle but they are expected to be used.

Barrie Flyers Favored to Win Over Porcupine

Timmins, April 2 — (CP) — Barrie Flyers are overwhelming favorites to take away their second straight all-Ontario junior hockey title when they clash with Porcupine Combines here tonight.

The Flyers now hold a 3-0 edge in the best-of-seven series. If you go by the books the tilt is a foregone conclusion. They downed the Combines 4-1 in the first game, 11-2 in the second and 4-1 in the third game.

It probably won't be a dull night for little Lorne Howes in the Porcupine nets. Although he has seen 19 goals hit the rigging behind him, Howes has played sensationally throughout the whole series.

In the last game, the Combines came up with a third - period spurt that made the Flyers reach their margin.

It was a pretty third - period goal by Ray Volotaire that gave the Porkies life. From then on they gave Gil Mayer a rough time in the Barrie nets but were unable to beat the clever little goaltender.

However, the Flyers are counting on their superior speed and general know-how to sweep the series in four straight games.

MAY IMPORT CRAYFISH

Vancouver — (CP) — British Columbia may import New Zealand crayfish a seafood similar to lobster, for experimental purposes if this province's waters. Two B. C. scientists who returned from New Zealand recently said the Canadian fisheries department is interested in crayfish.

Training Camp Notes

(By The Associated Press)

Rookie catcher Stan Lopata, borrowed with Toronto Maple Leafs, is regarded as one of the prize recruits of Philadelphia Phillies' campaign to win the National League pennant.

Lopata came up from the Delaput semi-pro. He played in the Phils' farm system with Terre Haute, Ind., Utica, N.Y., and Toronto. With the Leafs last year he hit 175 total bases, including 15 homers, and drove in 67 runs. Just 24, he might show the National League something in the next few years.

St. Paul Saints Win Northern Series Playoff

(By The Associated Press)

St. Paul Saints are the United States Hockey League's northern division playoff champions. The Saints edged Omaha 6-5 in overtime Friday night to win the northern series in two straight games.

Bob Jill fired the tying goal with three minutes left in the final regular period. He also scored the winning marker after 14 minutes and 22 seconds of overtime play.

Omaha took a 5-0 lead in the first period and kept the margin with a 4-3 lead in the second. George Homemuke got three for Omaha, scoring his second and third goals early in the second period.

Ed Slowinski scored two goals for the Saints in the second period, and added another in the third.

The Saints will represent the northern division against Tulsa, the southern division winner, in the final playoffs for the league title.

Tulsa invades St. Paul tomorrow night to open the best-of-seven final series. The balance of the schedule:

Tuesday, Tulsa at St. Paul; Thursday and Saturday, April 9, St. Paul at Tulsa.

If additional games are necessary, the teams will play at Tulsa April 10; at St. Paul, April 12 and April 14.

Four Cage Teams Remain in Hunt For Championship

Toronto, April 2 (CP)— Four teams—Windsor Patterson Collegiate, Sudbury Tech, East York Collegiate of Toronto and Peterborough Collegiate and Vocational School—remain in the hunt for the Ontario Intercollegiate basketball title after four elimination games were played on Friday night.

In the first game, Sault Ste. Marie Collegiate dropped a 34-30 decision to Peterborough cagers and in the second game Hamilton Westdale won 46-44 in double after a fourth quarter rally to put them ahead.

In the final two games Ottawa Tech got the nod over the East York squad 33-33, and Toronto Western Tech was smothered by Windsor Patterson 48-16.

The Peterborough-Soo game was close all the way. The first quarter ended 7-6 in Soo's favor and they managed to keep their lead until the fourth quarter with the score 21-11 at half time and 29-19 at the end of the third quarter. In the final quarter Peterborough counted 15 points, holding the Soo to a single point to win.

Little Marvin Zinn potted 14 points for Sudbury Tech in the first quarter of their game with Hamilton. They never lost. At half time Sudbury was ahead 32-20 and a close-guarding game by Westdale in the last quarter gave them 17 points, five points short of a victory.

The game between Ottawa Tech and East York Collegiate was the closest of the evening. Ottawa was behind 7-11 at the end of the first quarter, edged ahead 21-17 at half time and battled through a sizzling second half to drop a close 33-33 decision to the Toronto cagers.

A well-conditioned Windsor Patterson Collegiate squad had little trouble eliminating Toronto Western Tech in the final game. The Windsorites took a 5-3 lead in the first quarter, extended it to 24-11 by half time and in the last half potted 23 points against Western Tech's 5.

Canadian Negro Wins Decision Over LaRusso

New York, April 2 — (CP) — Toronto's Arthur King, lightweight champion of the British Empire and Canada, Friday night won a unanimous eight-round decision here over Johnny LaRusso of New York. King weighed in at 133½; LaRusso scaled 135½.

The 25-year-old Italian-born Canadian carried the fight to LaRusso throughout the whole fight, rarely unleashing his right. LaRusso depended almost entirely on a wild right hand.

There were no knockdowns in the King fight and the crowd of 18,201 frequently clapped derisively for action.

King scored repeatedly with his snaking left, staying inside LaRusso's wide swings. But the New Yorker was not aggressive enough to rouse King's fighting fury.

Only occasionally, when LaRusso managed to land a right, did the fast Toronto lightweight unleash a vicious two-fisted flurry that pulled the fans to the ropes.

The fight was the 24th victory in 26 professional fights for the 22-year-old Canadian Negro.

Lanier, Martin Cannot Play This Season

New York, April 2 — (AP) — It is unlikely that Max Lanier and Fred Martin will return to organized baseball this year.

The two former St. Louis Cardinal pitchers, suspended for jumping to the Mexican League in 1946, failed in the first 364 for a legal shortcut back into baseball's good graces.

Judge Edward A. Conger Friday denied their request for a temporary injunction to stop baseball from keeping them on the ineligible list. Their suspensions normally would expire on July 1.

The Judge gave a number of reasons for his decision. Among them, he said, was a serious question whether his court had jurisdiction in the matter.

Furthermore, granting the players' application would give them immediately the relief they might win after trial.

Lanier and Martin have a $2,500,000 damage suit pending against baseball, brought under United States anti-trust laws. It also seeks a permanent injunction against the suspension.

Judge Conger said the denial of the temporary injunction has no bearing on the merits of the damage suit.

Danny Gardella, former New York Giants' outfielder, is seeking a similar injunction. Conger is scheduled to rule on it Wednesday. Gardella also has a $500,000 damage suit pending.

Hank Biassati Impresses Mack With His Hitting

West Palm Beach, Fla., April 2. (AP)—Hank Biassati is one of those newly-acquired shock troopers Connie Mack believes will bring Philadelphia Athletics their first American-League pennant in 18 years.

The 25-year-old Italian-born first baseman from Windsor, Ont., made an excellent impression on the veteran old boss during the Spring training season. Biassati appears to have made the big league grade in his second try even though he's slated now only for duty as an understudy to first-sacker Ferris Fain.

And it is in this important second string capacity that Biassati could play an important part in lifting the A's from their 1948 fourth-place finish to the long-sought pennant.

The surprising Athletics made a game fight in the pennant chase last year. Only the lack of reserve strength in August robbed them out at the finish. It should be a different story in 1949.

Biassati has been batting in great style and his hitting has opened eyes of Mr. Mack and Skeeter Mack. The toughest thing for Biassati is that the A's already have a first baseman many experts deem the best in the junior circuit. That does everything well and hits when it counts.

But Mack doesn't mind too well that Fain has a pair of bad knees. He needs a big, strong, capable fellow like Biassati around as insurance.

The A's wanted to send him to Savannah again last season but the likeable fellow began to lose no time telling Mack he could do better than that. So Mack let him. He actually refused to send him to Savannah and Mack finally placed him at Toronto in the International League—triple 'A' ball.

Biassati proved he was better than his word as he played in 146 games, smashed out 30 home runs and batting in 89 runs.

TEAMS SPLIT

Toronto, April 2 — (CP) — St. Catharines and Toronto carried off semi-finals in Ontario Junior Hockey Association playoffs Friday night.

In the first game of a twin bill, Marlboro Midgets ran their unbeaten string to 33 games with a 6-3 victory over St. Catharines Midgets. Then Marlboro Mt. St. Catharines Lions trimmed the Hamilton Tigers in the juvenile event.

The Lions' victory gave them a 2-0 lead in their best-of-five series. The third game will be played in St. Catharines tonight.

Victory for the Toronto midgets gave them a 2-0 lead in their best-of-five series.

Boston Coach, Dit Clapper, Will Retire

(By The Canadian Press)

Aubrey (Dit) Clapper, Boston Bruins star for the last 20 years, Friday night announced his permanent retirement from hockey.

Clapper said he could no longer continue because "my family and my business in Peterborough, now demand all my attention."

Clapper's decision came as a stunning surprise to both President Weston Adams and General Manager Art Ross of the Bruins. They have no idea who his successor will be.

Stan Cutts of Toronto Friday night successfully defended his title as world professional badminton champion by over-whelming challenger Irving Grant of Montreal in two straight matches, 15-5, 15-4.

The Soviet season opened in Moscow Friday and will extend to Sept. 30, it was announced at Leningrad.

The limit catch remains the same, 40 fish or 15 pounds plus one fish, the length limit is seven inches.

At Phoenix, Ariz., Freddy Fitzsimmons finished sitting out his suspension Friday and joined the Phillies' "Whiz" combo. Fitzsimmons was suspended until April 1 and the Giants were fined by Commissioner A. B. (Happy) Chandler because the club approached last year while still under contract to Boston Braves.

At Montreal, Montgomery Maids, Ontario senior ladies' basketball champions from Toronto, Friday night scored an easy 42-32 victory over Montreal Olympics, Quebec titleholders, in the first game of the eastern Canada final. Second game of the two-game total-point series will be played tonight.

The Movie Column

By BOB THOMAS

New York, April 2 (AP)—Newspapers here and all over the United States and Canada have been full of news about the motion picture academy this week. It's time for serious talk about the future of the academy.

The issue arose when academy president Jean Hersholt resigned with a blast against producers who opposed the annual awards. The producers replied with a few mortar shells aimed at "Dr. Christian," tied at the way Oscars are handed out, the big boys pulled the financial support out from under the academy.

Let's face it—the academy is an imperfect institution. Its original purpose is often clouded or ignored. It was founded 21 years ago to reward artistic and scientific achievements in the movies. This was important, since the industry was then almost devoid of prestige.

Academy awards have added stature to the much-maligned industry. But they have often been handed out because of politics and sentiment, no matter how strongly the academy denies it. Costly Business

The academy is a costly operation. It maintains a library, theatre, a sizeable staff and a publicity office. Its annual affair is done in the Hollywood manner—expensively. It has no endowments, as the Nobel and Pulitzer awards do. Someone has to foot the bill and so far it has been the major studios.

However, the academy says it will carry on and find some way of financing the awards.

But if no other support comes forth, the academy will have to slice its expenses to the bone or die.

The academy will probably survive, in some form at least. After 21 years of being shot at, Oscar is a tough guy to kill.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

There is no bidding like Horse Sense bidding for accurate slam decisions. Most others get there by inferential deductions. We reach there only by revealing the most essential values.

Three maid items are a must in determining a safe slam. They are (1) 12 tricks or more in the pair, (2) knowing a satisfactory trump suit, (3) and having enough aces and kings for quickest controls.

How does a pair show enough tricks? Opening one bidder promises five; responding bidder is assumed to have two. Each raise in number by either shows one more trick in his hand.

However, as soon as one player has at least 11 tricks in their pair, he jumps. The number of tricks shown by his jump is plain. With what his partner has shown he has the balance to count on.

6 H	Pass

The north club suit is biddable. Takeout comes before assist. North's first response shows three tricks. With eight, south has enough for a jump. Heart rules by north shows his fourth trick.

South thus sees 12 tricks and knows hearts will be trump. His four no-trump is the ace-king asker. Six clubs is Kibitzer signal of two aces and no kings. Grand slam may not be safe.

West led a diamond in due time. Declarer has two sure trump spades and south sluffs a diamond on a fourth high club. This takes all 13 tricks. Now I bid seven.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

New York, April 2 — (AP) — That long grapevine from Florida carries the word that Joe McCarthy has scouted on Walt Dropo as Boston Red Sox' first-baseman and that Billy Goodman will be back on first come opening day . . . and Adrian's Bobby Locke has an opportunity to become the first foreign golfer to win the United States Open championship since Britain's Ted Ray nosed out his compatriot Harry Vardon in 1920.

Sportspourri

Samuel Hopkins Adams, the author, argues that his home town of Auburn, N.Y., has as good claim as nearby Cooperstown that it is where baseball originated. . . At least Auburn folks can show you a picture of a neatly-uniformed team taken in 1867 . . . Fred Hooper's flying horses, Olympia and Ocean Drive, will fly to Louisville for the Kentucky Derby . . . The American Hockey League has an unusual bit reasonable way of making the "most gentlemanly player" award. It lets the referees decide.

Runaway Race

When the U. of Oklahoma running track team had to make room for more seats in the stadium, coach John Jacobs' Athletes moved their workouts to the edge of the intramural softball field . . . They had to run from there to escape indignant softballers after one track man innocently picked up a rolling ball during a game and threw the runner out at second . . . Next step was the golf course, but someone stirred up a hive of bees and the lads decided their pace was too hot . . . They're still looking for another spot, but Jacobs may decide to keep the beehive in reserve for a close meet.

AT THE CAPITOL — Star Roland Winters, Charlie Chan in "The Golden Eye," and Lynn Merrick, Mrs. Chan, starting Monday at the Capitol Theatre. On the same program is "The Walls Of Jericho," starring Cornel Wilde, Linda Darnell, Anne Baxter and Kirk Douglas. Both hits are being shown for the first time in Belleville. Matinee daily at 2.00.

Pop was smoking the 2nd half of his first cigar, and ma said, Somebody called on the fone and asked for you and wanted you to call back, William.

Thank you, my dear, but cant we get a little more definite? pop said. For instance, Was it a man, woman or child? he said, and ma said, It was a woman, but I wont remember his name. I wish he had spelled it for me, she said.

Why, was it an unusual name? pop said, and ma said, Oh, no it was quite a common name, but if he had taken the trubble to spell it out, he would of fixed it in my memory. All I remember is, it had something to do with an animal. Now for instance, what would a fox remind you of, William? she said.

Something foxy, or sharp, pop said. Was the name Sharp? he said, and ma said, No, but that was a very clever guess, as I'm sure we're on the rite track. Let's try a wolf, what does a wolf make you think of? she said.

A wolf whistle, and a wolf whistle suggests girl chaser, pop said. By gollies I'll bet it was Mr. Howell, and ma said, No, that wasn't it either. Try a lion, William, she said.

A lion makes me think of a roar, and a roar makes me think of a howl, pop said. Could it of been Mr. Howell? he said and ma said, No, it was not any of those three.

That's just as well, come to think of it, because I dont know a sole named Sharp or Chase or Howell, pop said, and ma said, Then for land sakes why waste your time? William, that's it, you've suggested the name, she said.

The doooce I have, pop said, and ma said, But of course. You've wasted your time, and to waste is to lose, and what's lost is no more, and that's the name, Mr. More. Now wasn't that clever of us, William? she said.

It was practically brilliant, I'll

Answer to Yesterday's Puzzle:

CHARITIES BILL

The C.C.F. have moved right up and now occupy chairs into the caucus room.

There is, however, one fly, however, that the Hepburn may be cen off before it gets properly started. The government could end the lengthy debate by a motion of closure.

The Speaker has the discretion as to whether this motion be put to a vote. It is considered unlikely he would allow such action by him to the House before Mr. Joseph Sinclair (PC — Antigonish), drew attention to the fact that Mr. McCarthy (Lab-Prog. Toronto Bellwoods) have spoken. Opposition spokesmen in any there is a second method by which a filibuster could be avoided.

The government could bill the Atlantic Foundation — the only charitable foundation mentioned so far in the debate — to escape section duties. This would have the effect of clarifying the status of the foundation and similar foundations in the hands of charitable organizations.

The Toronto Star has said in a front-page editorial that if the government considers the foundation is not a bona fide charity it should put the matter before the courts for determination. It also said if the Star sought a ruling from the courts, the government might withdraw the bill pending the courts' decision.

Welfare Minister Goodfellow said Friday the government will increase the basic old age pension from $30 a month to $32.50.

Wine Purchased

During debate on the health estimates, A.A. MacLeod (Lab-Prog. Toronto Bellwoods) pulled two empty wine bottles from beneath his desk. Holding one in each hand, he told Health Minister Kelley that he had been informed that the two brands of wine (Grimsby Wines Ltd. Sherry and Bright's Catawba) had a "touch of dope in them that puts the consumer in a coma."

Would the health minister have the provincial analyst examine them?

William Griesinger, the liquor commissioner and Minister without portfolio, replied. "You've been told! Can you prove it?"

Mr. MacLeod: "Unfortunately I don't have the victims here."

(Mr. Griesinger said later in an interview that he would have "certain words" made immediately. The wines were last analyzed Nov. 2, 1948 and were found to be "palatable.")

Planning Minister Welsh rose to an argument when he told the House "one of the great bottlenecks" in home construction was the fact that 80 per cent of the cost of a home is labor.

C.H. Millard (CCF-York West) "That's not true."

Mr. Welsh said this percentage was true "when you chase the cost of materials right back to the source."

NEWFOUNDLAND

Supply Approved

This interim supply for the newly-created province later was approved by the Senate and given Royal assent.

At the House opening, Agriculture Minister Gardiner answered a suggestion that Danish butter be removed from the market with the statement that there is no more butter available now than there was a year ago, when there was not enough butter to meet demand.

Reconstruction Minister Winters said Central Mortgage and Housing is not making "as much progress as we would like" in the development of a comprehensive housing project for Toronto and surrounding municipalities. The main difficulty was the lack of housing and services, particularly schools.

Mr. St. Laurent told George Drew, Progressive Conservative leader, that Canada will be competently represented" at the Commonwealth Prime Minister's Conference in London. Mr. Drew had suggested Mr. St. Laurent himself go to London and not send a substitute. External Affairs Minister Pearson will represent Canada.

Trade Minister Howe said the importation of 1,000,000 barrels of cement from the United Kingdom should enable Canada Cement Company to meet its consumers' requirements this year. The company supplies 90 per cent of Canada's cement.

In the Senate, Senator John T. Haig, Progressive Conservative leader, said parliament must make a decision on the handling of divorce bills from Quebec, which has no provincial divorce court. If it did not want to deal with the bills it should pass a measure eliminating the procedure.

Debate Private Bill

The Commons debated without taking action, a Private bill introduced by Wilfrid Lacroix (L—Quebec — Montmorency) which would outlaw communists and strip them of their citizenship rights.

William Irvine (CCF — Carlboo) dubbed the legislation "a bill of wrongs" and said its stop-tion would mean a sanction of the suppression and the oppression practiced by the communists themselves. Under it, a person could be convicted merely for having an idea."

Joseph Harris (PC — Toronto Danforth) suggested during study of agriculture department estimates that radio "soap operas" were responsible for lower fertility. He reasoned that radio advertising had doubled the consumption of soap which, when it goes down the garbage, promoted the fewer through its alkali content.

He urged the department to give guidance to the investigation work and detailed to the radio room in order to give him a rest.

Keays asked Inspector Page if it was reasonable to expect that Keays should have been given the right to defend his status.

Conditions of Morale in 1947

The Inspector stated that when he came to Belleville early in 1947 conditions relative to morale and efficiency had been "very good" but some time later had commenced to change. He said it was during the investigation of the Jean Rodgers shooting that he had made up his mind there was something wrong with Keays.

"So it took you 11 months to find there was something wrong with Keays?" asked Keays.

"It took me that long to assure myself that something was wrong" stated the Inspector.

The Inspector said Keays had been described as a murderer basing his decision on a fingerprint taken from the gun found at the side of the girl's body. The RCMP had made the print unreliable for identification.

Keays denied he had ever referred to the Jean Rodgers murder" but the Inspector stated "Keys' report 'would speak for itself."

Inspector Page stated he had received complaints of Keays from various officials and was pressed by Keays for details. The inspector declined to state names but was directed by the commissioner to answer "in a general way."

The Inspector then stated that the crown attorneys of both Hastings and Prince Edward counties had requested that Keays take no more part in investigations if the cases were to come before them for trial.

When apparently irrelevant matters were being discussed Commission Counsel C. F. Hope objected that Inspector Page had been called for questioning solely on the LeRoy Woods case and he "had not heard the Woods case mentioned."

Referring to irrelevancy of much of the cross-examination he contested that certainly "Kilroy had been here."

Reference to "Keeping Keays Out"

Keays delved deeply into personalities during his cross-examination of Cpl. Stan Palmateer of Bancroft, and referred witness to his statement during the inquiring that he had requested the late Inspector Storey to "keep Keays out of his territory."

"Did you say that just because Inspector Storey is dead?" asked Keays.

"I did not," replied the witness. "I requested it of both Inspector Storey and Inspector Thompson and I have also requested it of Inspector Page."

Reference was made to a complaint against Cpl. Palmateer that he had disrespected O.P.P. men to do work outside the department. The witness admitted the complaint but stated there had been "nothing more to it" after a consultation with the crown attorney and Elmer Sandercock, M.P.P. for Hastings East.

The witness denied that he had ever seen Crown Attorney Donnan drunk in court. He said he had known Mr. Donnan to take a drink but denied he had ever seen him intoxicated in court.

PEAT FOR POWER

Edinburgh — (CP) — Scotland's vast peat bogs may soon become a great new reservoir of power for industry and transport. Research now indicates that peat may prove an ideal fuel for gas turbine engines.

RAINBOW BRIDGE

The Rainbow Bridge which spans the gorge between Niagara Falls, Ont., and Niagara Falls, N.Y., has an overall length of 1,450 feet, including the steel arch of 960 feet.

DISTRICT POLICE

The Commissioner interrupted to point out that possibly Keays had been taken off investigation work and detailed to the radio room in order to give him a rest.

Keays asked Inspector Page if it was reasonable to expect that Keays should have been given the right to defend his status.

Conditions of Morale in 1947

The Inspector stated that when he came to Belleville early in 1947 conditions relative to morale and efficiency had been "very good" but some time later had commenced to change. Enforce Existing Laws

These six ministers were expected to be placed today and Mr. Smallwood said further appointments probably would be made in a few days.

The council has powers to enforce existing laws and to make expenditures according to a pattern set forth by the commission government, which ended Thursday.

Mr. Smallwood said he expected the provincial election would be held late in May before the Labrador fisheries begin.

Mr. Smallwood was born at Gambo, on Bonavista Bay, on Christmas Day, 1900. He worked for several St. John's and Canadian and American newspapers. He is the author of several books and had a radio program in the capital at one time.

He was elected to the National

Atlantic-Pact Powers Called In First Huddle

Washington, April 2 — (AP) — Foreign ministers of all 12 Atlantic-Pact powers were called into their first huddle today to start drawing up grant strategy for the non-Communist Western World.

Canada's representative at the pact signing, L. B. Pearson, minister of external affairs, arrived here Friday night. After the signing he will go to New York to attend the opening session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Two strategy groups are specified in the pact itself — a consultative council and a defence committee. All 12 members presumably will be represented on each of these bodies.

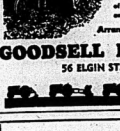
The council, according to the treaty, must be summoned when it can meet on short notice to deal with any emergency. It is the body which would be summoned into hasty session, for example, if one of the members of the alliance should be attacked.

The defence committee presumably will get the task of drawing up detailed plans for rearming the Atlantic powers mainly through a proposed American aid program, and defending the Atlantic region in case of attack.

Diplomatic informants said no decisions could be reached on problems of organization today, and probably none could be expected until after the treaty comes into force.

There is much speculation that the headquarters of the Atlantic alliance will be placed in Europe rather than the United States — probably in either London or Paris.

Denmark, Italy, Iceland and Portugal were represented in a treaty meeting for the first time today, having been invited to join up after the pact was fully effective. Besides Acheson, Bevin, Pearson and Rasmussen, the roster of pact signers included Robert Schuman of France, Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium, D. U. Stikker of the Netherlands, Joseph Bech of Luxembourg, Halvard Lange of Norway, Carlo Sforza of Italy, Bjarni Benediktsson of Iceland and Jose Caeiro da Mata of Portugal.



Along with the preparations for signing the treaty, Acheson, Bevin and Schuman were going ahead with plans to try to work out final agreement on the future of Germany. No decisions are expected until late next week.

HOME FOR REFUGEES

Allahabad, India — (CP) — Swami Bhavan, once the home of Prime Minister Nehru, has been converted into a national children's home. Preference will be given to refugee children under 10 years of age who are either orphans or destitute.

DROUGHT HARVEST

Sydney, Australia — (CP) — Drought alone for the Darling River in the South Wales gave rabbit trappers a harvest. One man trapped 9,000 rabbits in three nights.

Remember That Night

By Margaret Gorman Nichols

Phillip glanced at the phone and words for Lilyan came to him. He saw himself going to the phone, calling her, and saying, "I can't marry you tomorrow because I'm in love with Karen Mallare. I'm more completely, more passionately in love than I ever believed any one could be. I can't go through with it, Lilyan! I'll do anything you and your father suggest but I can't marry you. I'm sorry but that's the way it is."

But he couldn't because he could not hear to hurt and humiliate her and because of his fondness for her father!

The clock chimed three times softly. Dropping his cigarette into the flames in the fireplace, he crossed the room, put on his hat and coat, and went out. On the street he hailed a taxi. Late for the rehearsal of his wedding! But he had never wanted this kind of wedding.

"A fine wedding rehearsal with everybody late!" Tony said, grinning, shaking his hand. "Lilyan late, Karen, either. Nor is Karen's needy, your best man. Where's everybody?"

"Lilyan isn't here?"

Tony misinterpreted the anxiety in his voice. "Not worried, are you? You don't have to be worried about Lilyan! That change places with you in case you change your mind."

"A fine wedding rehearsal with everybody late!" Tony said, grinning, shaking his hand. "Lilyan late, either. Nor is Karen needy, your best man. Where's everybody?"

Tony misinterpreted the anxiety in his voice. "Not worried, are you? You don't have to be worried about Lilyan! That change places with you in case you change your mind."

"Lilyan wasn't here. Pray that she won't come. Poor Lilyan, sweet and faithful!" She did not know what an empty, loveless marriage it would be. "Once we got to get yourself together, he told himself with firmness. You've got to get a hold on yourself. But everything seemed to be going to pieces. It was like a crazy dream. It was like the first rehearsal of a bad play in which no one knew his lines.

But scarcely had his cigarette been lighted when two taxis stopped simultaneously before the church. Bid Kennedy, who is in a hurry, always late, alighted from one, Lilyan from the other.

Tony tossed the cigarette on the sidewalk.

"Now we can get started! Let the wedding bells ring!"

Phillip straightened his back and relaxed the tightness of his mouth. Lilyan, walking beside Sid, looked lovely in a brown suit.

"She must never know." Phillip thought. "But never is a long, long time."

* * *

At twilight Karen stood on the hospital steps. She had spent the entire afternoon with Cathy, who seemed loath to let her go. His dark eyes seemed to twinkle when people said, "Why, doctor, I didn't know you had a daughter!" They had had tea in his office.

He kissed her warm cheek tenderly and watched her slim figure in a brown coat and green hat descend the steps and walk slowly down the shady street. He thought, "I know why her eyes wandered to the clock so often. I'd do anything in the world for her but I can't make Phillip love her. I can't stop his marriage."

But suddenly he remembered the night in Baltimore when Phillip hadn't been able to sit through his own play.

Her life was like a puzzle with pieces that would not fit, Karen thought, as she walked away from the hospital. Nothing she had ever experienced was comparable to the feelings of desolation and emptiness. "If only one bit me now, I wouldn't feel it. I'm numb. Oh, I can't be cheated of the only love I shall ever have!" People on the street were enemies. The sky was ugly.

* * *

On Fifth avenue she passed the church in which Phillip and Lilyan would be married tomorrow. But the church was in darkness. Obviously the rehearsal was over.

Mrs. Reid came out of her room, smiling. "Your packages came, dear. Karen! I opened them and put the things in your room. My, but that's a lovely suit To-

"What is she going to do about tomorrow?" Brenda repeated Karen's question. "Pooh! Lilyan's nuisance. I know that she and this young man are sincerely in love," Brenda continued. "But in England they said good-bye. She couldn't bear to hurt Phillip. She couldn't disappoint her sick father who had his heart set on her marriage to Phillip. Poor child, I wonder I found her crying!"

The young man, Walter Roxby, followed her in New York and between shopping and planning for her wedding, she'd been seeing him. She saw him only this morning for the last time. I told her what a foolish girl she was. That we went to see her father and told him. He was shocked, of course. But they've been very close since her mother died and Owen was even angry she had let herself suffer for his sake."

A new light had come to Karen's eyes. Her face . . . But what was she hoping for? If it were not Lilyan now, it would be some other girl later!

"They, they . . . they won't be married tomorrow?"

"I stayed and talked with Owen while Lilyan went to the church. She took Phillip into the clergyman's study and told him. He was marvelous about it, she said, when she came home.

"Phillip said, 'Anything you say my dear.' But please know that I was prepared to do everything in my power to make you happy'."

Brenda nodded her pale golden head. "He was just wonderful! I like that! But Phillip didn't care! I was there when Lilyan phoned him. Phillip said, 'I'm sorry I'll be late but I'm afraid I'm going to be married in a few days and go to Australia.'"

She laughed. "Lilyan wasn't crying then! Not a bit!"

But Karen was thinking of Phillip's jilted. He had loved her. She knew that this must be hurting him deeply. "He isn't showing how much he's hurt. He's being a good sport about it. No one will ever know how much it hurts him."

"Is that all Phillip said. Brenda? Or was there more?"

"Why should Lilyan cry?" Karen asked. "Why should any one cry who is going to marry Phillip tomorrow?"

Brenda took a deep breath.

"She was sitting in her pretty bedroom and her mother was packing the loveliest trousseau I've ever seen. And Lilyan was sobbing quietly. Her father was to be the next room. She didn't want him to know. As usual I had walked in without knocking and I made her tell me why she was unhappy on the day before her wedding."

Coming closer to Karen, she sat on the wide bed with its pale blue satin scarf. "You're excited so I'm nearly out of breath!" She smiled. "Karen, Lilyan was crying because she loves Phillip and another man!"

Her eyes wide and luminous suddenly, Karen cried, "In love with another man!"

"Yes. A neighbor of hers when she and her father had the house in England. They met when she was out walking one day and met secretly after that whenever she could leave Owen. But she didn't tell Owen.

"But now you aren't the only one who has been through a difficult time. Lilyan has been miserable. Here in New York before she left, she was very happy about Phillip. Then away from him on distance clears the head like nothing else — she began to wonder and to feel unworthy of him. She began to be afraid that she was not the person to be the wife of a playwright. She's a simple, childlike person. Being the wife of a famous man began to frighten her. She knows nothing and cares nothing about the stage."

Her voice breathless now, she asked, "What is she going to do about tomorrow?"

Brenda smiled. "I'm coming to that."

MONKEYING WITH THE MISSING LINK

Britain's Medieval Tipple, Mead, Will Soon be Back on Market

By MICHAEL O'MARA

Canadian Press Staff Writer

Gulval, Cornwall, England, April 2 (CP)—Mead is "the drink of the gods and the liquor of the noble"—it says so right on the bottle.

Britain's medieval tipple, that filled many a wassail-bowl and delighted many a gallant gullet when Knights were bold and nights were noisy, will soon be back on the market.

Most of the fabulous brew—being manufactured here commercially for the first time in centuries—will go to win dollars in North America. Including heavy United Kingdom taxes, it will sell here for about $3 a bottle and probably cheaper in Canada and the United States.

Mead, as every encyclopaedia-lover knows, is made of fermented honey. It comes in about 37 varieties, from potent to just-about-lethal.

The standard mead is roughly comparable to strong hock or Moselle; and for sherry-types I mead to imperial tokay, cyser—which has apple juice blended with the honey—to sherry; pyment to Madeira; Melomel is suitable for mixing with gin to form a liquer.

An evening that starts out with a few rounds of sack methegiln —the mead equivalent to vermouth—and closes with a slug or two of pyment is pronounced — by those who have tried it—ardunna but enjoyable.

Mead should be served chilled, say the experts. And drunk gingerly to start with, suggested the Times of London in an editorial which greeted the news that a licence had been granted for its sale.

But, said the newspaper, under the caption 'another little drink':

"The only dash of poison in the mazer cup is, alas! That so much of these honeyed drinks must go down the wide throat of the export trade."

but I think he does. The belief gets stronger the more I think of it. Why can't we? You'll have to hurry. He's going to leave tonight. He thinks it will be less embarrassing for all concerned if he leaves town. He isn't running out. He's bowing out gracefully."

Karen felt that she could not move. In ten minutes, if she hurried, she could be with him.

But what would she say to him! She could not say simply, "Phillip I love you. Do you or do you not love me?"

Brenda laughed. "Don't stand there, darling, Hurry! Suppose you miss him! And don't forget, no matter what happens, that I'll eight - thirty tonight you're not Karen Mallare. You're the girl in Phillip's play."

She went to her and put her small hand under her chin and tilted her forehead. "All the way to him pray that I'm right. You love him so much."

Running through the living room, she knocked over a vase of flowers. Mrs. Reid thrust her grey head out. "Karen, what's wrong? Good gracious, what's wrong?"

History Books Skip Lightly Over Size of Queen Victoria's Shoes

By WILLIAM ROSS

Canadian Press Staff Writer

Nottingham England, April 2 (CP)—History books mention that garments worn by Queen Victoria at her wedding, almost 100 years ago, were entirely of British manufacture. But they skip lightly over the size of the pink-clad bride's feet.

These, as visitors to the Nottingham museum soon will see, had size 3½ shoes when in 1840, Later in life they added yet another inch.

The doughty Queen's wedding dress and shoes parted company in 1841, a year after the wedding. The dress now is in the London museum and, until recently, the shoes were owned by Mrs. Robin Gray of London.

Rumor, both then and since, had it that the Queen had dainty foot, but a letter Mrs. Gray has with the certifying documents gives this the lie.

Written May 27, 1841, by "Augusta W.," not further indentified, it reads:

"A thousand thanks, my dear sir, for sending me the pretty shoes of the Queen. After what I had heard so frequently that Her Majesty had the prettiest foot in the Kingdom I should certainly have expected to find a tinier shoe and am quite charm with me that they are no Cinderella's slippers."

Mrs. Gray advertised in the London Times inviting offers for the shoes and though many "tempting" ones arrived from the United States she was most moved by one from T. Osborne Robinson, scenic artist at Northampton's Repertory Theatre and Collector of Historic Relics.

She accepted his suggestion that the shoes really belonged in the Northampton Museum of Footwear and is taking them over with the stockings—to the museum.

But Karen did not stop.

In the hall she kept her finger on the elevator button and the elevator boy, when finally he came, glared angrily at her. In the apartment house to-day she collided with a dignified old lady and a dog on a leash and overturned over the leash. Stammering apologies, she did not know whether to laugh or cry.

The doorman asked, "Taxi?" he was. "All the way to him I'll pray you're right!"

Running through the living room, she knocked over a vase of flowers. Mrs. Reid thrust her grey head out. "Karen, what's wrong? Good gracious, what's wrong?"

fic light was red on Broadway that night in the rain. Phillip. That night everything began. My life. My love. I've loved you ever since. Madly, as Brenda said once. What shall I say to you when I get there? I've got to keep you from going. But how? You'll think I've lost my mind when I rush in!

HEAVY SESSION BUILDING UP FOR U. N. ASSEMBLY

60-Country Forum Will Convene in New York on Tuesday

New York, April 4 (CP)— The carry-over session of the United Nations General Assembly which opens tomorrow is shaping up as a full-fledged meeting of the 58-Country forum.

Originally scheduled to deal only with items left unfinished at the recent Paris Assembly, it now promises to have on its agenda several new and controversial items.

1. Bolivia requested the Assembly to take up the case of the imprisoned Archbishop Josef Mindszenty, Catholic Primate, Joseph Cardinal Mindszenty.

2. Australia said it would seek a special airing of the case of 15 Bulgarian Protestant clergymen imprisoned by that Communist government.

3. India and Australia demanded that the Indonesian case, now before the 11-country security council, also be put on the Assembly agenda.

It also was believed possible that during the session will be a clash between Count Folke Bernadotte, United Nations Mediator in Palestine and Moshe Shertok, Israeli Foreign Minister, over the Israeli-Arab armistice agreements.

Trygve Lie's request for a U.N. guard to protect U.N. commissions and offices, and the work of the Geneva conference on Freedom of Information.

Another item up for consideration is the final vote on Israel's application for membership in the world organization. The new Jewish state already has enough supporters to give them the necessary two-thirds vote in the Assembly. If so Israel will become the 59th member of the U.N.

President of the Assembly, Dr. Herbert V. Evatt of Australia plans to make another strong appeal for big power co-operation when he opens the second part of the Paris meeting.

"I am very convinced that over," Evatt said on arrival, "that the United Nations is the primary organ which can help in achieving peace for the world. There can be no substitute for it."

Wooden-Legged Cow is High Producer

Union, Ia., April 4 — (AP) — A cow with a wooden leg is one of the highest producers in the 1,000-cow Holstein Swiss herd of Howard Martin near here.

The wooden leg was the outgrowth of a fall in which the cow, Crip, suffered a broken leg almost two years ago.

Because Crip appeared one of the best blood lines in the herd, Martin decided to save her unborn calf. When veterinarians had to amputate her right rear leg at the hock, Martin fashioned an artificial leg for Crip.

She gave birth to a bull calf two months later and became a high producer. She goes to pasture with the other cows and grazes in cornfields in the fall.

Washington, April 4 (AP)— President Truman, rejecting Russia's charges that the United Country is "aggressive," today hailed the historic pact as "a shield against aggression and the fear of aggression."

In a speech prepared for the alliance signing ceremony, Truman asserted the people of the west are determined during the sickening blow of unprovoked aggression shall not fall upon the world again.

In taking steps to prevent aggression against "our own people," the President said, "we have no intention of threatening any others. To suggest the contrary is to slander our institutions and defame our ideals and our aspirations."

Cab Drivers Make Offer To Settle Strike

New York, April 4 — (AP) — Mayor William O'Dwyer said today a striking cab drivers' union has offered a plan for settling a citywide taxi-cab strike.

It was the first real move in the dispute by either party toward a settlement.

Meanwhile, cabs took to the streets in increasing numbers today and violence waned.

An accident was reported said. "The strike is broken as far as we are concerned."

O'Dwyer met secretly with officials of the striking union Saturday. A spokesman said "progress" was made. Participating in the meeting, he said, was Michael brother of John L. Lewis and director of organization for the United Mine Workers (Ind.). The Cab Drivers' Union is an affiliate of the U. M. W.

The companies' spokesman, Harold Fitzsimmons, added, "I expect normal operations tomorrow."

Many Left-Over Items

The left-over items from the Paris meeting include: The treatment of Indians in South Africa; questions on the disposal of the former Italian colonies, and the question of Franco Spain. Two other carry-overs are: Secretary-General Trygve Lie's request for a U.N. guard to protect U.N. commissions and offices, and the work of the Geneva conference on Freedom of Information.

Another item up for consideration is the final vote on Israel's application for membership in the world organization. The new Jewish state already has enough supporters to give them the necessary two-third vote in the Assembly. If so Israel will become the 59th member of the U.N.

President of the Assembly, Dr. Herbert V. Evatt of Australia plans to make another strong appeal for big power co-operation when he opens the second part of the Paris meeting.

Results of Polar Flight May Throw Light on Western Grain Disease

Montreal, April 4 (CP)—After a flight over the North Pole, three McGill University professors returned here during the week-end with data that may throw light on the origin of some of the plant diseases plaguing western Canada's wheat fields.

The scientists headed by Dr. Nicholas Polunin, 39-year-old British-born botanist, set out 17 days ago to capture spores and pollen grains in the frigid polar air.

Their object was to see what forms of life are floating in the air at the top of the world and to find out where they come from. During the next few months they will study the samples collected.

If any organisms have been captured they may include wheat stem-rust spores, such as Dr. Polunin collected on a similar flight two years ago. These were later identified at the Dominion Rust Research Laboratory in Winnipeg as spores of the disease which has done an estimated $200,000,000 damage in Canadian wheat fields in a single year.

Dr. Polunin, who has been making Arctic expeditions since he was 19, emphasized, however, that the study belonged in the realm of pure science. It was intended not so much to combat enemies of Canada's bread basket but to add to the total of human

FORMAL PEACE TALKS EXPECTED TO OPEN SHORTLY

Chinese Communists Ready For Cease-Fire

Nanking, April 4 — (AP) — Semi-official sources today said Chinese communists had agreed in principle to arrange a cease-fire in China's Civil War.

Details of the order were reported under negotiation by communist - held Peiping.

The sources, reliable in the past, said an agreement was reached upon the government request during the preliminary discussions to peace talks.

Early results of the Peiping peace negotiations were brought to Nanking yesterday by Rusing Chi-Han, government liaison officer in Peiping. Rusing said peace delegates had been treated cordially by the Reds since their arrival in the communist capital.

Acting president Li Tsung-jen told about 300 National Assembly delegates today that he was confident of the ultimate success of the peace talks.

During the day go government leaders warned that any communist attempt to cross the Yangtze River would result in immediate withdrawal of the Peiping peace delegate.

Medical Research Near Cure For Arteriosclerosis

Los Angeles, April 4 (AP)— Medical researchers are on the verge of discovering a cure for hardening of the arteries—cause of red North America's No. 1 cause of death.

Dr. Lester Morrison, who heads a research staff at General Hospital here, said at a two - day conference yesterday that a new treatment for arteriosclerosis has been used successfully on 100 patients. Experiments were conducted for two years before results.

Two Cars CPR Freight Jump Switch Rail

North Bay, April 4. (CP) Two cars of a Canadian Pacific freight train derailed when jumped the rails between switches at Pagot, 20 miles south of Sidney, early this morning, causing a delay to two westbound passenger trains.

Police here said the engineering the train were derailed at 2.30 o'clock this morning. No damage was done to the track or the equipment. Passenger train No. 3 bound for Vancouver and No. 17 heading for Sault Ste. Marie were delayed an hour by the derailment.

Complaints Against Officers Forwarded to Headquarters, Says Inspector Page at Probe

Inspector W. A. Page head of the Ontario Provincial Police Belleville district, testified today he had never made a personal investigation of complaints Constable J. E. Keays made against two provincial officers in the district in 1948.

He said he forwarded the complaints against Corporal Sergt. Irvine and Constable C. R. Purdy to Provincial police headquarters in Toronto because they were instigated by two senior police inspectors.

Constable Keays had accused Corporal Irvine and Constable Purdy of falsifying police records and perjury in connection with the trial of Ledley Woods for traffic infractions in 1947.

The accusations are part of allegations of fraud, perjury and maladministration of justice levelled by Crown Attorney R. C. Donnan of Belleville, the charges are being investigated by Justice Kellock Inspector Mackay sitting as a Royal Commissioner.

The officers involved are commissioner W. H. Stringer of the Provincial Police, Deputy Minister Inspector T. W. Cousens, Sergeant J. A. Stringer, Corporal Irvine, Constable Purdy and Constable J. B. Driscoll.

He said the Crown Attorney and in his opinion the evidence convicted Woods of dangerous driving and causing bodily harm to drunk driving—appeared satisfied with the handling of the Woods case. The complaints already had been investigated once and he made no further investigation, the inspector said.

Says Keays Failed to Assist

"There is evidence that Constable Keays was in the office for three hours every day yet Constable Purdy had to go at it by approach him," Constable Keays said.

The commissioner asked if it was the duty of the junior officer to oversee the junior officer or if the senior officer should request assistance from the senior.

"It is the duty of both," the inspector said.

"Isn't that putting a heavy burden on a junior officer?" Commissioner asked the commissioner.

"But you are a senior official," Mr. Justice Kellock said. He said his impression was that it would be the duty of the junior officer to approach a senior officer if he was in difficulty.

He asked Constable Keays if Constable Purdy's actions might not be the result of "gross inexperience without the slightest intention of wrong doing."

Constable Keays replied that none of the previous investigations into the case had queried Purdy's actions. He said an alleged fatal report to safety expert that you were able to carry on and then I would give instructions," he said.

Keays asked if it would not have been more fair if the inspector, knowing Keays' emotional state, had interviewed him, that Keays take it easy for awhile.

"If it was a mental condition that I had not think it would have been the proper thing to do," stated Inspector Page. "Under the circumstances I do not feel I caused you any hardship."

The Inspector was asked if he did not think Keays was justified in his complaints in view of the fact his integrity as a police officer was questioned.

The Inspector said he had sufficient information to warrant physical condition to advise that be kept at headquarters without taking part in investigations.

He added that his opinion was not based on Keays' examination alone but also because of requests that he not be used in investigations.

Found Keays Energetic

He paid tribute to Keays stating he had been energetic, had instituted a car chase system.

"You have done good work but unfortunately you spoiled a lot of your good work by not putting in anything in which you submitted evidence," the Inspector said.

In the case of power, military experts can only guess. They figure that the United States would have about the same for the western powers. They believe that the Atlantic Powers probably could muster more long-range bombers

1949 Construction So Far Leads 1948's Record Pace

By FORBES RHUDE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

So far this year, Canada has been surpassing last year's record pace in construction.

However, the next three months will tell whether this will keep up.

Last year started off at a relatively moderate pace and then shot up sharply for April, May and June—months may decide in large measure how busy the rest of the year will be.

The question now is whether this year will have the same rapid climb.

$203,706,000 in Three Months

MacLean Building Reports, Ltd., show total construction contracts for the first three months at $203,700,000 up $75,200,000 from last year; and March contracts at $67,586,300, up $16,238,000 over March last year, while value of contracts let up this March over March a year ago, and March contracts is down; 2,947 against 4,116.

Last year's April contracts were $80,716,600, May's $136,915,500, and June's $133,820,900; so that the comparisons are not always a hot pace to equal.

Residential is the expansion of Canada's production facilities accounted for March contracts being ahead of last year; with housing and commercial construction down for the first time in four months.

Residential $18,896,900 ($20,488,100); business $20,830,900 ($22,022,300) industrial $17,115,400 ($1,805,400); engineering $9,755,000 ($7,235,900).

By areas:

Maritimes $3,714,000 ($3,133,-300); Quebec $31,809,200 ($20,-912,200); Ontario $19,678,900 ($16,796,200); Western $12,386,-200 ($7,618,700).

Thus Quebec had the highest March contracts, Canada, Ontario counting for nearly half of it; a $19,000,000 oil refinery expansion by Shell Oil of Canada, Ltd., near Montreal. Other March contracts included:

March Contracts

Water intake, $3,080,300, at head of Lachine Rapids, for Montreal; 40 apartment buildings $2,700,000, at Eastview near Ottawa; warehouse, office and garage for Canadian Westinghouse Co., Ltd., $1,500,000, at Hamilton; factory and warehouse $1,135,000, one at Hamilton; Lancaster hospital and power plant building, alterations and addition, $1,780,000, at Saint John, N.B.

ADVISED TO READ PAPERS'

Brantford, April 4 — (CP) — Granting citizenship papers today to ten men and one woman, Judge D. J. Cowan in part advised: — "Read your daily newspapers, not only because they will make you familiar with the language but also because you will learn what is taking place in the country. You have passed school age, and the daily newspaper is your best means of education."

332,439,900 IN POPULATIONS UNDER TREATY

Washington, April 4 — (AP) — The North Atlantic Treaty unites 12 western countries whose total population amounts to 332,439,900 persons.

Russia and its six Eastern European satellites, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria and Albania have a population that totals 274,739,109.

Measured in manpower, the strength of the North Atlantic Treaty countries and the "iron curtain" bloc is estimated to be about the same with about 5,000,000 men each.

Most of the military manpower in the Atlantic pact group is centred in the armed forces of the United States, Britain and France. Those three countries account for about 3,113,000 of the total.

Russia Big Power in Red Group

Russia is the big military power in the Soviet group with an estimated 4,000,000 men in the armed services. The satellite countries add about 1,121,000 to that figure.

The big navies of the United States and Britain, plus naval forces of the other allies, would be the strongest deterrent to aggression at sea.

In the air power, military experts can only guess. They figure that the United States would have about the same for the western powers. They believe that the Atlantic Powers probably could muster more long-range bombers

London Dockers Boycott Picketed Canadian Vessel

London, April 4 (CP)— Stevedores and dockers today began to boycott of the chartered Canadian freighter Fort Steele.

A union spokesman said the boycott would probably extend to Canadian Pacific vessels also involved in the dispute with the Canadian Seamen's Union.

The 9,000 ton Beaverbrae, owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway, is the fourth Canadian ship to be tied up in the United Kingdom ports. Others are 25 ships of the C.S.U. strike during the week-end.

The other Canadian ships being boycotted are the 7,000 ton Boyston Grange and the 7,000 ton Scotboard Ranger at Liverpool and the 7,000 ton Canadian Miner at Avonmouth. The dock labor board said unloading has been halted on the Seaboard Ranger but that it had no information regarding the other two.

Jack Pope, United Kingdom representative of the C.S.U. said the dockers and stevedores decided to support the strike "to a per cent" and that any attempts by Shell Oil or labor would bring all London steamships to a halt.

A member of the strike committee of the C.S.U. said the pute would spread when the Canadian freighter Chilliwack docks there.

DRY DISTRICT TO VOTE

Kincardine, April 4 (CP)—This Bruce County community, without a licensed beer parlor for 31 years, will vote June 8 on whether it wishes a government liquor store. Voters will also be asked if they wish a brewers' warehouse and beer and wonen's beverage rooms.

One of Most Formidable Alliances In History is N. Atlantic Pact

Washington, April 4. (AP)— Countries signing the North Atlantic pact today are joining what is considered one of the most formidable alliances in history.

However, there's no mention of military might in the preamble of the treaty text and the United States Senate has postponed also away from such line-ups of the past. Nevertheless the United States

By accepted international law and usage, however, an alliance is say league between independent states, defined by treaty for the purpose of combined action, defensive or offensive or both. Others famous in history include:

1814— Quadruple or Grand Alliance of Austria, Prussia, Russia and Prussia. It was formed at the overthrow of Napoleon and curbing the expansion of France.

1882—Triple Alliance of Germany, Austria and Italy, originally formed to preserve European peace.

The so-called "Holy Alliance" of 1815 was largely a declaration of moral principle. It was signed by the rulers of Russia, Prussia and Austria and later by all the European powers but Britain.

These were peacetime leagues. War brought others, the most powerful being the United Nations of the Second World War which destroyed the Axis.

12 Non-Communist Countries Join In Signing Pact

Washington Will be Scene And Ceremony Broadcast

Washington, April 4 (CP) — Twelve non-Communist western countries, with a total population of some 332,000,000, join today in signing a historic document—the North Atlantic security treaty—to protect themselves against aggression.

This is the next to last step in pledging a one-for-all and all-for-one 20-year defence against any attacker—a warning clearly intended for Communist Russia which has denounced the treaty as "aggressive."

The signing ceremony was set for 3 p.m. EST in the United States government's departmental auditorium a few blocks from the White House.

Most of the foreign ministers and secretaries who gathered here last week to put their names on the pact were listed to speak, about five minutes each, before the actual signing got under way at 4:30 p.m.

The ceremony will be broadcast globally by the largest concentration of shortwave radio facilities ever assembled for a single program. It will be carried to all parts of the world including the iron curtain countries. Orders of finals will be used.

Order of Signing

This is the order in which the representatives of the 12 countries will sign the pact:

Paul-Henri Spaak, Belgium; L. B. Pearson, Canada; Gustav Rasmussen, Denmark; Robert Schuman, France; Bjarni Benediktsson, Iceland; Count Carlo Sforza, Italy; Joseph Bech, Luxembourg; Dirk U. Stikker, The Netherlands; Halvard M. Lange, Norway; Ernest Bevin, Britain; Dean Acheson, the United States.

Acheson, American Secretary of State, had the task of formally welcoming the dignitaries. President Truman was scheduled to wind up the speech-making with the day's chief address, lasting about 15 minutes.

Slumps in Dock His Arm Gashed, Piece Glass Found

Hamilton, April 4. (CP)—Suddenly slumping to the floor as he sat in his office early this morning, 34-year-old man, Joseph Lora, 34 Sterling St., manslaughter charge was found to have gashed his arm on a piece of glass in a broken window pane in the floor just above his head.

Lora and Mervin Breaton, 29, of Guelph, were arrested a week ago Sunday night in connection with an accident at Waterdown in which Mrs. Ethel Hurley Murray, chan of Waterdown, sustained fatal injuries.

Lora was rushed to hospital, where 15 stitches were required to close four gashes on his wrist. It was stated that he lost very little blood and would be returned to the city jail to await trial on April 12. Breaton, also charged one of manslaughter, car theft, possessing a loaded revolver.

Burglary Wave Under Investigation

Peterborough, April 4 (CP)— Provincial police are investigating a series of summer cottage burglaries which police reported had occurred in the Pigeon and Buckhorn Lake areas some time during the past week.

It was reported that in at least one case goods to the value of $500 were taken and in another case a canoe was badly damaged by the vandals. It is believed that about 15 camps belonging to United States and Peterborough people were the scene of breakins.

PALESTINE WAR VIRTUALLY ENDED BY ARMISTICE

Trans-Jordan Signs Pact Valid for One Year and Renewable

Rhodes, April 4 — (AP) — Trans-Jordan has signed an armistice with Israel, virtually ending the Palestine war.

The agreement — valid for one year and renewable — was the third concluded by Israel with an Arab state. Egypt signed an armistice Feb. 24, Lebanon March 23.

Armistice talks on both sides resulted in completion of the agreement at an earlier date than was anticipated when the talks began more than a month ago.

It was disclosed after Sunday night's signing that Trans-Jordan was empowered by Iraq and by Israelis in behalf of Iraq and will take over Iraq-held armistice lines in Northern Palestine.

Only Egypt, Israel and Syria as an active combatant with whom the United Nations has not completed

In Damascus FL-Col. Fawzi Selo, chief of the Syrian delegation to the armistice negotiations with Israel, said armistice talks with the Israelis also probably will begin Wednesday.

Can Maintain Forces

ON WHOLE MARCH COMPARATIVELY WARM

Just why farmers' fields are rapidly drying up is explained in the March weather report which shows a total precipitation of only 2.30 inches as compared with 4.36 inches over the month.

Rainfall during the past month was but 1.16 inches while last year the rainfall was 3.23 inches with 11.2 inches of snow.

On the whole March was a comparatively warm month the high temperature being 60 degrees while not once did the thermometer fall below the zero mark. In fact the lowest was three degrees. One year ago the high was 60 and the low 20 below.

Degree days for the month totalled 1161 as compared with 1153 for March 1948. Or a considerable saving in the coal bill.

Chamber Starts New Series of Radio Dramas

Mr. F. E. Burrows, Secretary of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce, announced today a new series of radio dramas titled "Canadian Heritage" would be launched next Sunday evening. Police later recovered the car undamaged and billed estimated by the amount of gasoline gone from the tank that it had been driven 60 miles.

The broadcasts are designed to sell Canada to Canadians", he said. "Each program will contain facts about the extraordinary progress this country has made, and will go to indicate the vast opportunity for still greater advancement. Largely in positive vein, the programs will nevertheless dispel many misconceptions about business operation and profits."

Mr. Burrows said that Canadians are often accused of too much modesty, and of failing to promote an understanding of the opportunities which exist in this young country. Americans, on the other hand, are great salesmen for their own eminently successful way of life. "Canadian Heritage", he said "is an effort on the part of citizens of this city to show pride in Canada and Canadian institutions. As a free-enterprise nation we're envied the world with our productiveness, and it seems time we talked about it."

Water Turned On In Parkwood Heights Area

After several months of delay during which time services were not available, water in the Parkwood Heights area south of Victoria Ave., was turned on over the weekend, it was reported today by Public Utilities Commission officials.

At the present time 44 of the Parkwood Heights houses constructed by the Canada Construction Company are occupied and other home owners are expected to take up residence shortly.

For the past several weeks roadways in the area have been in a quagmire due to the spring thaw but the streets are now drying nicely and in another week all streets are expected to be graded. A power grader is presently working in the area.

First families in the veterans' homes Area in Churchill Heights will occupy their new homes by April 15th, it was stated today by Mayor D. L. Hovey and by the end of the month approximately 50 of the houses constructed by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will be allocated.

The balance of the 103 houses will then be allocated as soon as possible after streets are graded and water and sewer services are available.

POLICE BLOTTER

A slight bus-motor car accident and the usual number of inebriates disturbed but slightly even tenor of the city's way over the weekend. Slight damage was done to a privately-owned motor car Saturday evening when it was pulled out from its parking place near Schryver's drug store into the path of a city bus. Damage to the car's fender was estimated at $40.

Forty Hours Of Devotion At St. Michael's

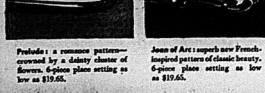
The Devotion of the Forty Hours began in the Church of St. Michael the Archangel on Sunday morning at 10.30 with the Pontifical High Mass celebrated by Rt. Rev. J. F. Nicholson, V.G., assisted by Rev. C. E. Baker as Deacon and Rev. J. A. Carley as Sub-Deacon. Following the Mass a Procession of the Blessed Sacrament was held in which the various parish societies with their banners took part. The Knights of Columbus acted as guard of honor.

Mass with the proper of Passion Sunday was chanted by the children of St. Michael's Academy under the direction of Sister Mary Polycarp, O.S.B. On Sunday evening at 7.30 Solemn Benediction was given by Rev. J. Clancy, P.P. of Picton, assisted by Fit. Lieutenant Hawley of Trenton and Rev. J. O'Hearn, P.P., of Stirling.

An excellent sermon on the Sacrament of Pennance was delivered previous to Benediction by Rev. J. O'Hearn. Other clergy who assisted were: Monsignor Nicholson, Rev. A. O'Donnell of Trenton, Rev. C. E. Baker and Rev. J. A. Carley. The choir of St. Michael's high school under the direction of Sister Mary Lenore provided the music for the service on Sunday evening. Sister Mary Bibiana was at the organ.

Charges 'Conspiracy' To Block Adoption Vitamin E Treatment

Toronto, April 4 (CP)—Dr. Evan Shute of London, Ont., today wrote Health Minister Kelly charging that the Ontario Health Department has "established a heart disease investigation clinic at the University of Toronto, was part of a "well-organized conspiracy" to block adoption of vitamin E treatment by the medical profession.



The letter from Dr. Shute, founder of the Shute Foundation for Medical Research, followed the Health Minister's announcement that the clinic would be established "to investigate all claims for heart disease treatment."

German Engineer Says Bombs Had Been Sabotaged

Berlin, April 4 (AP)—A German demolition engineer says he has evidence that bombs dropped on his home town by United States planes during the war failed to explode because they had been sabotaged in German factories.

The engineer Werner Stephan is civilian chief of the Berlin bomb squad. He said Sunday he has found 125 American duds near which showed evidence of having been sabotaged and that his men have found many more.

P.A. System Used To Address Bata Employees

Frankford — Mr. Thomas Bata, owner of the Bata Shoe Company, addressed his employees over the public address system at the Batawa factory of Bata Limited, it has spoke in reference to an article which appeared recently in McLean's Magazine. It took exception to several statements in the article, as they tended to make him appear as a man who is very extravagant when personal spending is concerned. The article spoke of the rugs in his home being purchased from India. Mr. Bata said that the rugs had been bought in a store in Trenton and anyone who had been in his house at any time could see the fact that his home, while comfortably furnished, was not elaborate. Mr. Bata objected particularly to remarks made in connection with his wedding. The article stated that about twelve hundred guests were present for the wedding. "This," Mr. Bata asserted, "is absolutely false." The magazine also stated that Mr. Bata was given a diamond on the night of the wedding. He said that this was not true. He had lost his watch and had to straighten out the loss of the watch of Mrs. Bata's valuable jewelry. Mr. Bata stated that his wife had no valuable jewelry. Mr. Bata further denied that there any connection with the Bata gas wells in Saskatchewan.

The Bata Shoe Company is at present negotiating a new agreement with the labor union and the union executive is in receipt of a considerable damage to the company if employees did not know the true facts.

Notes Handed Denmark, Norway By Soviet Union

Copenhagen, April 4 (Reuters) —The Soviet Union early today handed notes on the Atlantic pact to Denmark and Norway, as the foreign ministers of two countries planned to sign the pact in Washington.

The Soviet Minister in Copenhagen at 2:30 a.m. handed the Danish foreign ministry a protest against the pact similar to that sent to the seven original supporte of the pact last week.

The note to Norway was also delivered in the early hours.

A Danish official spokesman said the note was "mere routine" but the time of delivery was "most unusual."

The protest delivered to the original seven Atlantic Pact powers last week charged that the pact was "aggressive" and "directed against the Soviet Union."

Moscow (AP)— Pravda today says the answer by the North Atlantic treaty countries to Russia's protest against the pact is evasive and dodges the issues created by the Soviet note.

The official Communist party newspaper also criticizes the pact in a lengthy international review entitled "Wall Street" for the "quickened reorganization and rearmament of western Europe."

Riff Chieftain Against Pact

Cairo, April 4 (AP)—Abd El Krim, Riff chieftain who gave the French and Spaniards a bad time of it in the 1920s, has come out against the Atlantic pact.

The old warrior has sent notes to Foreign Secretary Bevin of Britain, State Secretary Dean Acheson of the United States and Trygve Lie, United Nations Secretary-General, protesting "on behalf of the North African people" against Algiers' participation in the Atlantic alliance.

Speaking as president of the North African Liberation Committee, Abd El Krim declared the people of Algiers and North Africa "will not co-operate under any circumstances as long as their national interest are ignored and aspiration for complete freedom denied."

Two 14-Year-Old Boys are Arrested For Drunkenness

Toronto, April 4 (CP)—Two 14-year-old boys—the youngest any police officer could remember—were among 79 persons arrested for drunkenness during the weekend, police said. The two could not stand and both were ill, police added.

Thumbnail Sketch Of Ministers Signing Pact

Washington, April 4 (AP)— Here is a thumbnail sketch of the 12 foreign ministers and secretaries in the order in which they will sign the North Atlantic security treaty today:

1. Paul-Henri Spaak, Belgium—Robust, 50-year-old Belgian political leader who has been his country's Premier. Recognized as one of the outstanding statesmen of Europe. He has been in government service since 1932. In 1946 he was chosen President of the first United Nations General Assembly.

2. L. B. Pearson, Canada—Skilled international negotiator who served as Canadian Ambassador to the United States from 1945 to 1946. "Mike" as he is often called by friends, was appointed Canadian Minister to External Affairs in September, 1948. He is 51.

3. Gustav Rasmussen, Denmark —One of the two bachelors of the group. He is 54 years old. He has been in Danish foreign service since 1947.

4. Robert Schuman, France — The 62-year-old French politician is the second bachelor of the group. He is renowned more for his knowledge of finance than for foreign affairs. He has been re-elected to political posts since 1919. He served as French Premier from 1947 until July, 1948, since then he has been Foreign Minister.

5. Bjarni Benediktsson, Iceland—41 year-old "baby" of the group. He was elected to the Icelandic parliament for the first time in 1942. He has served as Iceland's Minister of Justice.

6. Count Carlo Sforza, Italy — Van-Dyke-bearded, 73-year-old veteran Italian political leader. He gave up job as Ambassador to France to go into exile in 1926. He returned to Italy in 1943 and took job of Minister Without Portfolio in the first Badoglio cabinet. He became Minister of Foreign Affairs in the third De Gasperi cabinet.

7. Josef Bech, Luxembourg—He is 62. In politics since 1914. He has been Luxembourg's Foreign Minister for 23 years.

8. Dirk U. Stikker, The Netherlands—Was appointed Foreign Affairs Minister last Aug. 6. His big problem at home is to solve difficulties with Indonesia.

9. Halvard M. Lange, Norway — 47-year-old former Norwegian professor and teacher. He became chief of the Norwegian refugee office in 1940. From 1943 until the end of the war he was a prisoner of the Germans in the notorious Sachsenhausen concentration camp. He was appointed Foreign Affairs Minister Feb. 2, 1946.

10. Jose Caeiro Da Matta, Portugal — 66-year-old law professor who served as Foreign Foreign Minister as far back as 1933. He was reappointed Portuguese Foreign Minister in 1947.

11. Ernest Bevin, United Kingdom — A tough, blunt-spoken Socialist, he was a labor organizer and trade union leader of the Dockworkers' Union for many years. From 1922 to 1940 he was secretary-general of the Transport and General Workers Union. Now 68 years old he has been British Foreign Secretary since 1945.

12. Dean Acheson, United States, 55-year-old lawyer who has been a top official of the State Department off-and-on for the last seven years. He is known for his quick wit and speedy answers and an ability to summarize complicated situations in a few sentences. He recently was chosen one of the 10 best dressed men in the United States.

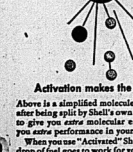
Rabbi on Pilgrimage

Toronto, April 4 (CP)—Rabbi Reuben Slonim of the Great Synagogue, will be sent on a pilgrimage by his congregation, it was announced Sunday night. It is the first time in either Canada or the United States a Rabbi has been sent on a pilgrimage of this kind, the Rabbi said.

"I intend to survey the synagogues in Israel and see what conditions of religious life are like there," he said. "I hope this will encourage other congregations to send their Rabbis, too, to encourage the spirit of Israel."

Drug Thieves Rob Chemical Co.

London, Ont., April 4 — (CP) — Drug thieves early today ransacked the three storey National Drug and Chemical Company plant on downtown York Street, escaping with an estimated "several thousand dollars" in cash and merchandise.



Manager C. S. Markell said "the safe was blown and almost every lock in the place smashed."

The breaking was discovered by a patrolling policeman and detectives were immediately called to the scene. "It must have been a gang," said Mr. Markell. "They combed the place and did considerable damage on every floor. We haven't been able to ascertain the loss but so far our cashiers show more than $500 in cash missing. The amount of merchandise would be worth at least several thousand dollars on the black market.

Last July the same plant, mainly a drug warehouse, was entered and several hundred dollars in cash and merchandise was stolen. Detectives declined to comment on the breaks, stating they were only starting their investigation. It was believed the thieves entered by the roof.

SWIFTNESS OF THIS AGE

How fast this age is moving is shown in an item in the New York Times telling of the Swoose — the last Flying Fortress bomber of pre-World War II vintage — in its last flight on its way to take its place in the Chicago branch of the Smithsonian Institution's National Air Museum. It was escorted by B-26 bombers. Swoose was built in October 1941 and became famous during the earliest and most trying days for her Philippine exploits. She was soon the only plane of her original squadron flying. She flew out to the Philippines a month before Japan's sneak raid on Pearl Harbor.

While the lifetime of use of many modern inventions is brief it is a unique and happy fact that the original combat pilot of Swoose, Col. Frank Kurtz and five other members of her original crew were aboard when she landed from her last flight on the way to the place in the museum.

MR. CHURCHILL'S BOSTON SPEECH

Winston Churchill in his speech at Boston was still the master of the spoken word, clearly and vehemently expressed. "The whole prospect and outlook of mankind grew immeasurably larger and the multiplication of ideas grew at an incredible rate "in the first part of the twentieth century," he said. But "this vast expansion was unhappily not accompanied by any noticeable advance in the stature of man, either in his mental faculties or his moral character. His brain got no better but it buzzed more. The scale of events assumed gigantic proportions while he remained about the same size.

"By comparison therefore he became much smaller.

The need was to discipline an array of gigantic and turbulant facts.

"To this task we have so far proved unequal. Science bestowed immense new powers on man and at the same time created conditions which were entirely beyond his comprehension and still more beyond his control."

His view is that if the League of Nations had been sustained and used "it would have saved us all." Yet there still remains a key of deliverance such as the United Nations but this body "has been so far disheartened by the antagonism of Soviet Russia and by the fundamental schism between communism and the rest of mankind."

The British statesman however declared "we must not despair. We must persevere and if the gulf continues to widen we must make sure that the cause of freedom is defended by all the resources of combined forethought and superior science. Here lies the hope of averting a third world struggle and a sure means of coming through without being enslaved or destroyed."

There was warning in his message. He stated that "it is certain that Europe would have been communized and London under bombardment some time ago but for the deterrent of the atomic bomb in the hands of the United States. But "was is not inevitable," he asserted. "We seek nothing from Russia but good will and fair play."

The cause of Russia's hostility to the west united the free world against the Russians is "because they fear the friendship of the West more than its hostility." There were in the Kremlin thirteen men holding millions under their sway and aiming at world rule. He declared that "self-reservation, not for Russia but for themselves lies at the root and is the explanation of their sinister and malignant policy."

Of the Russian regime he asserted, "we are confronted with something quite as wicked but in some ways more formidable than Hitler . . . They have an anti-God religion, behind this stands the strongest army in the world" with a government holding imperialistic designs of expansion.

Mr. Churchill closed on a note of optimism and hope and confidence. "United we stand secure," he said and called for unity in charge of destiny, mission, "fearing God and nothing else." As for time he said that "often something happens to turn or mitigate the course of events." There are many favorable processes on foot and under the impact of communism the free nations are being welded into a unity never possible but for the harsh external pressure to which they had been subjected.

OFF THE RECORD

By Ed Reed

"I suppose in your usual hasty manner you'll start assuming things!"

THE PACKSACK

OF GREGORY CLARK

Recently I had a feed of fried scallops that didn't taste like scallops. And when I kicked up a fuss, and asked to see the raw article, the chef admitted that the succulent little chunks of sea food were not actually scallops; they were slices of the middle of a sea fish called the skate. With a round punch, just the size of a scallop, the fish man had produced good imitations from the flesh of the skate the way a house wife punches tea biscuits out of dough.

At another restaurant, I ordered grilled pickerel, and when a very waxy sea fish was set before me, the manager explained that it was a Pacific coast pickerel. There is a little confusion over pickerel already without the Pacific flowing into it. There is only one pickerel, and it is a member of the pike family found, in three subspecies, from Maine to Florida and in the Gulf states and lower Mississippi watershed.

But all over central Canada, the pike-perch, dore, or wall-eye is also called pickerel. A very dainty fish to eat.

These tricks of the trade of marketing and serving fish do not help to make Canadians eastern Canadians ought to be very hearty fishe-eaters. Three of their boundaries are ocean. The fourth boundary is almost conself constituted by the Great Lakes, with a diagonal string — Lake of the Woods, Winnipeg, Reindeer, Athabasca, Great Slave and Great Bear — all abounding in fish, from one right across the nation.

Many people do not like the odor of fish cooking. Personally, it draws me like a magnet and causes me to freeze in my tracks even in the most thoroughfare. Modern cookery, with its pressure cookers, ventilators, flues, tries to filter or eliminate the sense of smell from the joy of eating. But fish will out.

WEAPONS OF THE SPIRIT

One of the best examples in all history of the superiority of spiritual weapons to material is to be seen in the career of William Penn.

This young Englishman of distinguished birth early associated himself with the Society of Friends. His father sent him to Paris, believing that amid the gay life there, young William would forget the strange religious doctrines he had formerly held. But Penn returned ready to take up his former religious habits. After further imprisonment he applied to the King of England for a grant of land in America, since the king owed the Penn family a considerable amount of money, he was glad to accept Penn's proposal and pay off the debt in this way.

Penn regarded the Indians as the rightful owners of the land he had received from the king. Accordingly, he bought the land from them and made a solemn treaty which, as someone has said, "was never sworn to and never broken." No Quaker ever injured an Indian and Indians were killed a Quaker. What all the might of British arms could not do, Penn did by a simple process of friendship.

Penn paid into operation the Golden Rule and proved St. Paul's declaration that "love never faileth."

TODAY'S TALK

BY GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

UPLIFT COMPANIONS

Seek the companionship of him who is able to give you an upward lift. There is a tendency on the part of those who look upon themselves as unfortunate to seek out those in a like condition, that there may be a blending of misfortune. The result? A worse condition for each individual is to be seen.

We should constantly search for those who give us an uplift, who will help us to wipe out the memory of our mistakes and blunders. We all need the companionship of those who are braver than ourselves.

In this game of ours we must hunt for those to play with us who are better players than we are — that we, too, may improve and become better. Fellow brooders in misfortune give no exercise to their climbing legs that they may rise above their state of gloom. Tie to the cheerful companion and you, too, will become cheerful.

In my father's library were several books by Samuel Smiles (a good name for a man), who wrote inspirational books that had a wide circulation. He was an English writer. His books so stimulated me that I collected other books of like nature, and from them to a wider variety of books —and never have I ceased to read and be uplifted by the best writers of all time. No one can read the books of Robert Louis Stevenson without feeling himself up in the world.

Your daily lives we need these uplift companions to help keep us alive, hopeful, and full of cheer. If life appears too easy, we unconsciously begin to slide down and lose interest, whereas this interest should forever be on the up and up! The chap, in the schoolbook story, who climbed to carve his name highest upon the natural bridge of Virginia, did not look down.

Readers of these daily talks must have noticed that I am constantly quoting from writers and thinkers who have inspired me. They, in turn, were inspired as well by others. That is the way it works. The late Bob Davis took the world as his local story; thus everything that he wrote was interesting and helpful. He talked only with those who gave something to him that he might give to others.

Companion with your betters and you will become better. You see more, and you will have learned more, from the top rung of the ladder.

ONE MINUTE NEWS ABOUT JOHNS-MANVILLE

LEAKS MAY PUT EFFORTS TO RUIN

Spring is here and plans for re-decorating are uppermost in the homeowner's mind. But before you start painting or decorating, make sure your roof is completely free from leaks that can put all your efforts to ruin.

The best way to prevent these destructive leaks is to have an expert like your Johns Manville dealer check your roof for weak spots. If he advises it, you can ask him about J-M Asphalt Shingles. They're colorful, rugged, fire and long-lasting. For extra fire protection, choose J-M Flexzione shingles — the asphalt shingles that are made on a base of linen fireproof asbestos felt.

Mackenzie's Column:

Russia Would Not Wish to Join Pact Under Conditions

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press News Analyst)

"If Russia doesn't like being out of the Atlantic pact, why doesn't she join it?"

A student of foreign affairs wants me to give him an answer to that—a good question to ask but not an easy one to answer.

I think we must start from the premise that the pact is created specifically for defense against any communist aggression in Europe. In that sense the alliance may be said to be directed against the Soviet Union," since the world revolution and the spread of communism is controlled from Russia.

This being the case I think we are safe in assuming that neither would Russia be welcomed in the pact nor would she herself wish to join under conditions as they exist at this writing.

Four West

Britain's Winston Churchill made a statement apropos of this question in his Boston speech last week. He said we in the free nations have "deliberately acted so as to keep Russia out and alienate them," and then answered his own query thus:

"It is precisely they fear the friendship of the west more than the hostility. They cannot afford to allow free and friendly intercourse to take place in their position. Some western statesmen like Mr. Bevin, Foreign Minister of Britain are said to incline to the opinion that if Russia could become effective, Moscow may decide Russia's expansion — a process which has been going on for centuries — has gone far enough."

Of course a truce isn't a peace treaty. It would just be a pause in an indefinite struggle which will continue until it either wins out or blows up. Still, a truce lasts that part of it is better than nothing, any sort of easement would be for the good of all and times moves fast.

The signing of an Atlantic pact may bring counter-action by Moscow. Informed diplomats in Europe believe that the Soviet Union is likely to consider the Atlantic pact a breach of Russo-Soviet mutual aid treaties with Britain and France.

However, the situation may be crystallizing in such manner that Russia is heading by the statement might at least result in some easement in the cold war.

PROBATE APPLICATION IN WILL OF LATE W. CAWAN

Toronto, April 4 — (CP) — Application is being made for probate of the will of William Cawan, former director of the Bank of Commerce and of Cawan, Cruickshank, who left an estate of $1,233,000. The application is being made on behalf of his widow.

Undisclosed sums are provided in the will for Trinity College of the University of Toronto and St. George's Anglican Church, Oshawa. Mr. Cowan died Jan. 26 in California.

NON-COMMUNISTS

The treaty covers the home territory of the 15 member countries, their islands, aircraft and ships in the North Atlantic areas, and their occupation forces in Europe. An armed attack on one or more of these would set the defence machinery of all the members in motion, but each country would decide for itself whether it would use armed force.

If an attack occurred "on some friendly country" outside the North Atlantic area, or on the territory of one of the treaty powers outside the area, the three members would only be committed to "consult together."

Collective Self-Help

Other provisions of the treaty call for "collective self-help and mutual aid," for support of the United Nations and for creation of defence machinery to put real collective power into the alliance. Two new agencies are specified—a council, able to meet promptly at any time, and a defence committee, probably to serve as a sort of military staff to the council.

The pact becomes effective as soon as it is ratified by Canada, Belgium, France, The Netherlands, Britain and the United States. Those are the seven countries which negotiated the pact in conferences which began here last July and continued into mid-March.

The seven countries subsequently invited Norway, Denmark, Iceland, Portugal and Italy to join in signing and they accepted.

Only three countries holding strategic positions in the North Atlantic area are out of the picture. They are Spain, which declined to have any part in an alliance with Britain; Spain, with which the other Iberian States are not on good terms; and Sweden, which chose to remain neutral.

Russia began attacking the treaty before its provisions were officially known. In January the Foreign Office at Moscow issued a "White Paper" denouncing the whole project as an aggressive arrangement directed against the Soviet Union and as a violation of the United Nations charter. Last week the Russians renewed their protest, which was promptly rebuffed.

Tomorrow the 12 foreign ministers are expected to go to New York but the opening of the Security Council session probably is a week away.

Another problem, perhaps, but after all, you are getting free glasses, aren't you?

"Then they will send you an order," the optician replied, which you will take to your optician, who will then contact me and I will send your prescription to him."

PALESTINE WAR

InAqaba, a high authority said Israel will be allowed considerably more forces than will the Arab Legion, because of the presence of British forces at the Red Sea port.

An informant said if British troops withdrew from Aqaba, the Trans-Jordan port, the Israelis then would lower their strength to equal the Arab Legions in that area.

The agreement sets an armistice line based on the truce line of Nov. 30, 1948. This leaves the Arabs in control of the Jenin-Tulkarm triangle in the middle central Palestine. There the Arab Legion will withdraw Israeli troops in three stages within 15 weeks.

In Damascus Brig. Husni Zayim who took over the Syrian government in Wednesday's coup, outlined in a broadcast Sunday night a domestic program including land distribution, the distribution of wealth and revision of land distribution laws.

Zayim's foreign policy will consist in promoting Syria's position internationally by upholding the wise policy set by our old scholar, Faris el Houry, whom we love and respect."

El Houry is president of the House of Representatives and heads Syria's delegation to the United Nations.

Address Dr. William Brady, care of this newspaper.)

YOU WAIT IN LINE OR ELSE

I felt all summer I needed new glasses, so at length I decided to get them. Then I found I must first see my doctor. That meant going to his surgery, which is open only certain evenings at 6 to 6:30, waiting your turn to see him in a cold bare passage with a wooden bench to sit on.

Question: Is this necessary in dentistry?

No, it is government paternity. But let us listen to the patient's story).

Then all he does is to sign a little sheet of flimsy paper saying he has examined my eyes and found one was in need of glasses; but he did not trouble even to look at my eyes, so the paper is a lie.

(Oh, come, come now, what do you expect for a dollar? With forty-seven other patients waiting to see the doctor would it be fair for him to take time to examine your eyes — and have to tell the other patients to try again tomorrow or next week?)

Then I had to take it to an optician, who said: "Which of the two specialists would you choose which would be the best one for your eyes?" "Oh, no, we only carry out the doctor's prescription. That is why you must get it."

Vitamin D For Myopia

Twelve year old son has myopia and is inherited. My husband and I have perfect eyesight and our 16-year-old daughter has not. Is there any vitamin or other remedy which would prevent his eyesight from getting worse? (Mrs. W. G.)

Answer—I'd supplement the boy's diet with an optimal daily ration of vitamin D and calcium in autumn and winter, and see that he leads outdoor life and gets plenty of exercise. I related skin to sunlight or diffuse daylight every day in spring and summer.

As described by A. S. Knapp, New York, in American Journal of Ophthalmology, Feb. 24 and by H. H. Husted, Indianapolis Optometric Weekly, Feb. 26.)

Shadowy Subject

In your column recently appeared the expression "May your shadow never grow less." Can you tell me what is the origin of the expression? I have searched for years but have never found it. (E. M. C.)

Answer—I'm sorry I have no idea. In Ireland, I betcha.

Looking Ahead in Ottawa:

Political Leaders to Make Tours During Easter Recess

(By The Ottawa Staff of The Canadian Press)

Ottawa, April 4 (CP) — Canada's political war of nerves will be carried both east and west during the Easter holiday period. Prime Minister St. Laurent is scheduled to head into the west for a two weeks' junket, which some people thinly suspect might be the real election campaign.

George Drew, Progressive Conservative leader, is booked to go to Newfoundland to launch a campaign for wooing of the new province that will elect seven members to the new parliament. He also may visit the Maritimes and west, travelling by air.

Mr. St. Laurent is slated to leave Ottawa April 8 and more than a dozen newspaper men will accompany him on a trip that will take him first to Edmonton and Vancouver and then to Victoria, Calgary, Regina, Saskatoon, Brandon, Winnipeg and Fort William.

Mr. Drew is expected to make several speeches in Newfoundland in an effort to swing that province into his party's camp. He also will probably have reporters along to cover his efforts.

There are those who still persist that the government may pull a snap election shortly and that parliament will be dissolved before it is due to return from the Easter recess.

If so, it is conceivable that Mr. St. Laurent might use his western tour as the medium for both the announcement and campaigning.

Finance Minister Abbott told the Commons last week that he felt the government could finance the Civil Service at least on Governor-General's warrants if the House was dissolved before the estimates were approved.

Royal Commission

Public hearings of the Royal Commission on Transportation, according to present plans, are due to open about mid-May.

The commission has been set up since December, but several factors have combined to delay its public debut.

A reason for the delay has been difficulty in recruiting staff, reported to be due in part to salaries regarded by prospective aides as somewhat skimpy for the expert type of help called for. Also preliminary background material has to be assembled. Another reason for delay has been that Canada's contingent of legal, freight-rate experts have been engaged in other rate cases, the latest of which is just due to conclude before the Board of Transport Commissioners Tuesday.

Best information now on the time the commission inquiry will take is something over a year. Staff is being retained on an "at-least-a-year" basis.

Duke of Windsor Arrives in London

London, April 4 — (AP) — The Duke of Windsor, haggard after crossing the English Channel during a gale, arrived in London today to visit his 81-year-old mother, Queen Mary, and presumably, his ailing brother, the King.

The Duchess of Windsor was not with him. He told reporters at Victoria Station that he expected her to follow him here from their Paris home this weekend.

The Duke said he expects to stay at Queen Mary's home, Marlborough House, until Thursday, then go to Edzam Lodge at Sunningdale, Surrey, for about a week.

Edzam Lodge, southwest of London, is the swank country residence of the Earl of Dudley, banker and industrial magnate.

West Would be Pleased to Give Hand of Fellowship to Russians But You Cant Get Near 'em

—CHURCHILL

New York, April 4 (CP) — Winston Churchill said Saturday that the western world would be "very glad to stretch out the right hand of friendship to the Russian people — but you can't get near 'em."

"It would make a great deal of difference if they opened their borders in the same way as other countries.

"It is extraordinary to have over there this Communist paradise afraid to open the doors for fear all the cherubs would fly out—at least those that have wings."

An ebullient Churchill dressed in a steel-grey pin-striped siren suit and a loose-collared flannel sport shirt, met reporters in a Queen Mary lounge just before he sailed for home.

Comments

These were some of his comments:

Fear of war in western Europe —"All of the countries on the continent have cause for anxiety."

A Transatlantic Federation of Democracies — "I think any talk of that most premature."

Russian attacks on the Atlantic Pact — "Uh . . it is about in a line with all the other charges they have been making over the radio every day for the last three years.

Advisability of a Pacific Pact —"I think it ought to be looked into most thoroughly but we must be careful not to spread our resources too thinly."

Reports Russian might abrogate the Anglo-Russian friendship pact of 1941—"It is not important one way or the other. They don't seem to have been worrying much about it and we have had to take their view."

BLIZZARD BOUND—Lost in the Northwest Territories for 18 days in a howling sub-arctic blizzard, R.C.M.P. Cpl. Van Rolstone was rescued March 31 after being sighted by a search plane. His guide, Special Constable George Powder, was flown out the following day. Both were little the worse for their experiences although nine of their 12 dogs starved to death. (CP Photo)

A large International Police Force—"It doesn't look like something which will take shape immediately. The Russians might be a little backward in coming forward."

Russia claims he is their No. 1 enemy—"I am no enemy of the Russian people but I do not mind being called anti-Kremlin. Any rank they give me in this hierarchy I shall gladly accept.

The Marshall Plan—"We are very grateful for all that American does but we want to be free of it for the sake of our common relations."

When reporters kept firing questions at him Churchill said he had better stop or he would be accused of having "an anti-Russian tinge."

Russian People Misled

"It is our dear wish to be friends with the great Russian people but it has been a great grief for the British and American people to find this great people — the valiant Soviet soldiers who fought so bravely in the war—misled into this position their government has put them in at this time."

Canada and U.S. Exchange Officers on Mutual Defence

Washington, April 4 (AP)—The armed forces of Canada and the United States are exchanging officers to work on the mutual defence problems of the two countries, the national military establishment said today.

The signatures of the two countries on the North Atlantic treaty, joining them with 12 other countries in a defensive alliance against aggression, actually will be a reaffirmation of a nine-year-old defensive agreement between Canada and the United States. The two countries set up a joint defence board in 1940, and have carried on the co-operative agreement since.

In answer to a question, the national military establishment said today that "selected individual officers of the army, navy and air force (are) presently in Canada for the purpose of increasing familiarity with defence establishments, and arrangements in that country pursuant to the joint United States-Canada mutual defence agreement."

Most of the officers are army or air force colonels and lieutenant-colonels or navy captains and commanders.

This group of officers, most of whom work at military headquarters in Ottawa or Washington, apparently are in addition to other "technical groups." These groups, of both officers and men, are working in the field on such projects as testing of equipment, weather stations and radar installations high up along the rim of the North American continent.

Ford Reduces Motor Car Prices On All Lines

Detroit, April 4 (AP) — The Ford Motor Company in the United States fell in line Sunday with a downward price trend in the auto industry and announced reductions from $12 to $130 on Ford, Lincoln and Mercury cars.

The reductions, attributed to "increased availability of materials and the small decrease in prices of some materials," are effective today.

Ford car list prices are dropped from $12 to $30; Mercurys from $80 to $120 and all Lincoln Cosmopolitan models are reduced $100.

Certain truck models are reduced $10 to $40.

Ford's price cut is the fourth in the United States automobile industry in less than six weeks and leaves only Chrysler Corporation of the "big three" without any recent price reductions.

General Motors, other member of the "big three," announced in February reductions of $10 to $40 on its cars and cuts in truck prices ranging to $150.

In Windsor, Ford Motor Company of Canada had no comment immediately. It was indicated that a statement might be issued today.

Pres. Truman 13th Speaker At Pact Signing

Washington, April 4 — (AP) —President Truman will defy superstition by being the 13th speaker at the signing of the Atlantic Defence Alliance today.

The president was scheduled to speak last on the program after the 11 foreign ministers and State Secretary Dean Acheson made their brief addresses.

State Department officials who arranged the ceremony said they disregarded the 13 "jinx" in arranging the signing ceremonies.

MADOC JUNCTION

Madoc Jct. Enjoys Social Evening

Madoc Junction—The community social evening for March was held last Friday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Harlow.

The early part of the evening was spent in games for the younger members under the leadership of the Rev. H. Burgess.

Following this, a short program prepared by Miss Mary Chambers was enjoyed.

Readings were given by Mrs. Harlow, Carl Reid and Miss Mary Chambers. The scripture lesson was read by Mrs. Hugh McMullen, after which Rev. H. Burgess gave a short talk.

Mimsy and Sandy Stapley and Grace Clarke, sang a duet. Miss Chambers put on a "sing" contest. Refreshments and a social half hour were then enjoyed

ADVICE to the LOVELORN

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

LETTERS and ANSWERS

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Up until recently my husband was a very heavy drinker but has now stopped drinking.

But ever since, he has been a very changed man. He never is home at night, doesn't talk to me any more. He goes out with people tell me he is going around with a blonde. He never shows any love or consideration for me any more. Just last night I reproached him with this, which led to an awful argument. Do you think I was unjust to voicing the matter up?

"B.S.T.F."

Dear "B.S.T.F.":

It is possible that your husband is going through a period of emotional disturbance and readjustment as a result of giving up his drinking. If this would not be too surprising, but it is of course very distressing to you. The best perhaps you might get some suggestions about the best way to handle this whole thing if you would consult one of the Alcoholics Anonymous groups in your vicinity. You can find out who to get in touch by writing to the Alcoholic Foundation, 415 Lexington Avenue, New York City. Tell them your problem in the letter, and if you could be given the name of someone near you with whom you could discuss your problem so that they could tell you how you could be of most help to your husband at this time.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am an 18-year old girl in my senior year of high school. A recent school affair I met a boy who is five years older than I am and have seen him several times since then. The other night he drove me home from a local dance and we arrived at my home before 12. Instead of going right in, as I usually do, we sat in the car and talked awhile. The time just flew by, and before I realized it, it was after one o'clock. At that time my mother came out of the house and created a scene. This was very embarrassing to me as she told my fellow never to come near my home again. Being mannered he didn't talk back to my mother but just took off.

Now I enjoy this boy's company very much, and do not want to lose his friendship but he will not continue, to see me unless my mother consents to it. She is a very domineering and stubborn person who hardly ever listens to reason. How can I go about seeing my friend and reconcile my mother to the fact?

"Jo-Ann"

Dear "Jo-Ann":

I am always very distressed when I hear of a mother showing such a lack of understanding. I know it is very hard to change the kind of attitude she is showing towards you and your friends.

Does your father have a different attitude and could he get your mother to see the thing more reasonably?

Do you feel your father would be willing to, you know, I think the best plan is to enlist the services of the young man himself and see if he can't win your mother. There are few women who can stay hard-hearted when even a man much younger than themselves pays them a little attention. If this chap were to send your mother some flowers, or come to the house with a box of candy for her and make himself very agreeable and charming to her, he could probably create an opportunity to ask if he might take you out and she would hardly have the heart to refuse him. I suggest he tell her quite frankly he was sorry he kept you out late the other night and assure her that he would have you home and in the house at any hour she specified the next time.

Have Good Beauty Equipment

Your beauty equipment might well include this handy little set which contains matching lipstick and nail polish in a variety of shades.

By HELEN FOLLETT

All women are workers in the cause of pulchritude and every worker is entitled to have good tools, the best than can be bought. Get yourself a make up box, if you don't happen to have one, so your complexion props will be together and handy. No searching for this or that in the drawer of the toilet table. Have your powder in a firmly constructed box or a plastic one, as it were. Still a rouge compact of metal will be found more satisfactory than one of cardboard.

You should have several lipsticks of different colors because the good old stand-by may put up a color fight against the frock or hat you wear. You can buy mascara that has a little brush in the box, so that little thing won't go straying around. Perhaps you will invest in an eyelash curler. Of course, you'll have to have tweezers to pluck wayward furnaces that wander from the confines of your forehead admirers. If you indulge in eye shadows they will join the cosmetic family. Quite a collection, eh? It would be terrible if one had to start from scratch, buy all these items.

Manicure Tools

Manicuring instruments and cosmetics should have a box of their own. You will need a pair of curved, needle point scissors to snip off hangnails, a long, thin, flexible file, some bevaling files of emery board, orange wood sticks, nail-white pencil, cuticle cream, polish and polish remover.

Perfumes and toilet waters should be kept in a dark place: they will be less likely to evaporate. See that they are tightly stoppered. You will find an atomizer convenient. The cutest little tricks of this kind can be found on cosmetic counters.

Almost necessary is an apron-like affair to throw over your frock while combing your hair. A couple of hairs on the shoulders or collar types a girl as being anything but dainty and fastidious. What a slip-over dress can do to a coiffure is pretty dreadful.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON,
MAKE-UP JARS DISPENSE GLAMOR

Because of the belief that ugly ducklings can be presto-changed into swans and that swans can be made even fairer, a great industry has developed. Where, once upon a time, there were a few "hair dressing parlors," in large cities, now there are hundreds of beauty shops, where cosmetics and pulchritude services the sisters in Uncle Sam's domain spend many millions of dollars each year. And they believe they are getting their money's worth.

Glory crowns are trimmed and shampooed, waved and styled. Complexions receive freshening, toning treatments; hands are molded and creamed; fingernails are groomed and veneered. If you have the time, you go through the good looks hopper, came out feeling like singing and dancing. Best of all, you have had relaxation, away from the telephone, away from everything. The beautyorium is a grand institution.

If you would see an interesting scene, take yourself to a make-up bar. Nearly all large department stores have them. There are dainty dressing tables, before which the suppliicants for better appearance sit, all wrapped up in flowered fabrics as the paint and the calcimine will not spot their frocks. Young, old, middle-aged! All seeking improved faces.

In silver bowls, powder is mixed to order by trained attendants who know all the beauty tricks and their scene. In glass containers are all imaginable shades — ochres, pinks, blues, rose, orchid, apricot, some of the old-time delicate flesh tints. Green, too!

Illustrated by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Very carefully certain tints are blended. These results are tested again and again on the customer's complexion. They are darkened, lightened or given a deeper glow — according to requirements.

This is a far better method than standing at a cosmetic counter, sampler in hand-based selection. Or picking out a certain product because the woman next door uses it and looks so freshly lovely. The truth is that few women really know the color of their skins.

Quite as important as a happy choice of powder is deciding upon the color of rouge and lipstick. It is only by trying them out that one can tell which shade is flattering. If it is not flattering it falls.

The mode now calls for natural effects in make-up. To acquire them, the slap-dash method of yore just won't do. There must be restraint; the beauty props must be applied intelligently. How nice to have one's problems solved by one who is skilled in the art of facial scenery. For these attentions there is no charge. One has only to buy the items of the make-up box. Fair enough!

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

SPECIAL WEDDING PROBLEMS.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please help me with some information concerning my forthcoming marriage? I have been married once, and have been divorced for five years. I am twenty-six years old, and have a son seven years old. Since my divorce I have become converted to a religion which does not recognize my previous marriage or my divorce. In this religion, they would much prefer that a marriage ceremony be performed inside the church; that is, at the altar.

(1) Do you think this would be the proper thing to do as regards social convention also?

(2) If so, what kind of dress do you think the wedding party (bride and groom, maid of honor and best man) should wear? My sister feels that it would be proper for me to be married in long gown (not white, but perhaps a pastel shade) if I were married in the church. I certainly would not wish to have any comments arise over this occasion, which might happen if I were married in a gown and this were not the correct thing to do. What do you think about this?

(3) Are formal invitations in order? If not, what type of invitations? I would be inviting people who had attended my first marriage (to whom I would not expect to send gifts), and also people (friends and relatives of the groom and newly-acquired friends of my own) who had not attended my first marriage. Would this require different types of invitations?

(4) Would a reception be correct?

(5) Do you think my 7-year-old son should have any part in this wedding?

(1) You will, of course, follow most punctiously the guidance and direction of the authorities of the religion to which you have been converted. I believe these suggestions will be on the side of simplicity. And you would definitely show the best taste if you make all plans to have a simple wedding as far as the social procedure is concerned also. (2) I suggest that you and your maid of honor wear simple day-time, street-length dresses or suits, hats; corsages if you wish; the groom and best man to wear business uits. (3) Formal invitations would not be appropriate. Your invitations may be given verbally, or by telephone, or by notes. (4) Yes —but a small, informal reception would be in best taste. (5) My point of view is that it just isn't good taste to have a child whose father is living set as an attendant at the marriage of his mother to another man.

Linen Monograms After Marriage

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I was married a year and a half ago, and had such a supply of household linens as shower and wedding presents that I have just now realized that I must replenish some linens. When I have these new linens monogrammed, what initials should I use? (My pre-marriage ones were monogrammed, most of them, with my maiden initials). My husband thinks that now the initial of his first name should be in the monogram. —H.S.

After marriage, the three initials that should be used in the monogram are: initial of your first name, maiden surname, marriage name. For example: HSL8 for Helen Lane Smith. It is proper, if you and your husband wish, to have his towels marked with his initials: APF, for Arthur Paul Smith.

Edwardian Styles For Men Prevalent This Season

By MICHAEL O'HARA
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, April 4 (CP) — Gather round, men, and let's talk about Spring fashions.

If you have any money left to spend on clothes after the little woman has reorganized her wardrobe and your budget this Easter, and you want the hot white per from Savile row, here it is: Everything's Edwardian this year.

The result is a greater showiness in men's wear and a trend toward sportiness in lounge suits. Innovations originally used in sports and hacking jackets are finding their way into business suits.

Shoulders follow a wide, natural, drooping line and two-button fastenings are the rule for single-breasted jackets. A single button fastens double-breasted models.

Socks and ties are brighter — although ties probably never will hit the multi-colored extremes they have reached along New York's Fifth Avenue and points west — and waistcoats are rapidly getting out of this world.

For some seasons bright red and gaudy yellow waistcoats (pronounce "weskits" in the sartorial circles) have been acceptable but this Spring's models are even more imaginative.

Rolled lapels feature some waistcoats, others have six pockets instead of four, and materials ranging from weedy tweed to glossy watered silk have been seen around the west end.

Clothes are off the ration in Britain now and, although there has been no initial buying rush, haberdashers are hopeful that a favorable budget day April 6 will help.

Meanwhile efforts continue to export British style-consciousness along with British textiles and Savile Row thinks they are succeeding.

"We prophesy that the U.S. will soon be returning to their prewar position in the clothing world where they followed mainly the styles that emanated from London," says a spokesman.

ACCURACY ASSURED

The fine reputation American Optical Company Canada Limited enjoys for manufacturing superior quality ophthalmic lenses was gained — and is maintained —only through an unceasing insistence on accuracy.

Here in Belleville precision lens measuring instruments, as shown above, are used to assure the accuracy of our lenses at numerous points in their production. This instrument, called the Lensometer, gives the exact effective power of any ophthalmic lens, insures that finished lenses leaving Belleville will meet professional requirements.

The Lensometer, however, is no better than the person who uses it — requiring a sharp eye . . . and an experienced eye . . . to measure accurately minute variations in lens power. By its use skilled AO people insure lens accuracy. Thus they serve professional men who provide for their patients the comfort and visual skill so vital in a world in which good eyesight is needed as never before.

Montreal, April 4.. (CP)—Bob Fillion stewed up a top-bill triumph Saturday night, Montreal Canadiens today were on their way to Detroit for the climax of one of the tightest Stanley Cup semi-final series in years.

The Canadiens evened the game-count at three apiece Saturday when they whipped the Wings 3-1. That left them with a slight psychological edge for the seventh and final game, on Tuesday night.

The victor will meet Toronto Leafs, who disposed of Boston Bruins four games to one in the other semi-final battle.

In Saturday night's encounter, opportunism paid off to the tune of three second period goals in three minutes and 15 seconds.

Bootie Howe, top scorer in the series to date, counted for Detroit at 12.56 while Montreal defence man Doug Harvey and Butch Bouchard were squirming in the penalty box.

Anybody can win tomorrow night. But no clues played so far, the teams have been as even as a pane of glass. Detroit has scored 14 goals to Montreal's 12 and Hall, defensive hockey, highlighted by great goal-tending performances, have marked each encounter.

The Detroit management announced Sunday night that Jim McFadden will replace Harry Lumley here. No changes were announced by Canadiens.

The Habitants were saddened Saturday night by the announcement that Elmer Lach, their great play-making centre and assistant captain, had decided to retire for good. He announced his retirement from hospital after it was learned that he had suffered recurrence of the jaw fracture he received last December.

Montreal Fans Present Car To Bill Durnan

(By The Canadian Press)

Elmer Lach, his head swathed in bandages, left his hospital bed Saturday night to deliver a shiny new car to Bill Durnan.

The injured centre of Montreal Canadiens, who announced his retirement from hockey Saturday, presented the silver chr out on Montreal Forum ice and presented it to Canadiens' goalie.

The car was a gift from Montreal sportsmen, in recognition of Durnan's outstanding value to his team.

Displaying superiority in every department, Calgary Buffaloes romped to a 5-1 victory over Moose Jaw Canucks Saturday night at Calgary to share their best-of-seven Western Canada junior semi-final series at one game each. The third game is slated for Calgary tonight.

Winnipeg Nationals Saturday night went two games out in the Western Canada senior hockey semi-final series by defeating Fort Frances Canadians 6-1 at Winnipeg. Third game of the best-of-seven series will be played at Winnipeg tonight.

At Nelson, B. C., Regina Capitals flashed two rapid-fire goals in overtime Saturday to defeat Trail Smoke Eaters 4-2 and take a 2-0 lead in their best-of-seven Western Canada senior hockey semi-final.

At Brantford, the St. Catharines Athletic team won the Ontario Basketball Association's Southern Intermediate A championship series Saturday night by tying the Brantford Y Grads, 48-48. St. Kitts won 42-39 at home in the previous game, taking the round 89-87. The winners will now meet the champions of northern Ontario, Sault Ste. Marie Algos. The series will be played on the home floor of the southern champions this season.

At Brantford, the Minden hockey club, a Haliburton county entry, downed the Brant county Tuff club 9-7 here Saturday night to take their Ontario Rural Hockey Association Intermediate A round in two straight games. They won the previous game in Lindsay 6-2. Minden will now advance into the next round in their quest for provincial honors.

Toronto Maple Leafs of the National Hockey League Saturday signed Jack Thaler of Walkerton, Ont., to a two-year contract. Thaler played with Glace Bay, N.S., in the Cape Breton League this season.

At Toronto, Windsor's Assumption College hoopsters gained a 67-65 overtime decision over Toronto Central Y.M.C.A. Saturday night in the first game of a best-of-three series for the Ontario Amateur Basketball Association title. Fred Thomas, Assumption's flashy Negro player, netted 25 points to lead the Purple Raiders.

Fred Martelli, former St. Louis Cardinals pitcher who was suspended for jumping to the Mexican League in 1946, has been signed by Sherbrooke's Provincial League baseball team, Roland Gladu, manager of the Sherbrooke club announced Saturday. The Provincial League is an outlaw circuit.

At Montreal Toronto Montgomerys swept to their second straight victory over Montreal Olympics 41-22, in the Eastern Canada Senior Girls' basketball final. The Maids, who brought the Canadian title to the east from Western Canada last year, won the first game 42-32 to take total points series 93-47.

At Hibbing Minn., the Spokane Wash. Flyers advanced to the finals of the Amateur Hockey Association of the United States playoffs Sunday night by beating New York Rovers 3-2 in the rubber game of the best-of-three series. The victory qualified Spokane to meet Windsor Spitfires in Toledo Wednesday night in the first of a best-of-seven series for the United States Senior open championships. Windsor qualified for the finals by whipping Toledo Mercurys.

Olympia ran away from five opponents Saturday to rack up an easy victory in the 10th running of the $20,000 added experimental handicap No. 1 at New York's Jamaica race track. The bay three year old colt, already one of the early favorites for Kentucky Derby honors, romped the six furlongs in 1:10 4-5 to win by eight lengths. Pocket Cadet, Mrs. Adal L. Rice's Derby hopeful, was second 4 1-2 lengths in front of King Ranch's Cursandero.

FIVE TO TOUR CANADA

Toronto, April 4 — (CP)—Two golfers from Australia and one from Gothenburg, Sweden, have joined ranks with three teams from the British Isles for exhibition tours in Canada this year. Sweden, Olympic soccer winners last year, will play Newcastle United at the Canadian National Exhibition grounds on June 18. The Israel team is tentatively scheduled to play in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE H. CARVEN, Sports Editor

With Stanley Cup fever at its height, the following notes pertaining to playoff games past and present should be timely. Ken Mackenzie, demon statistician of the National Hockey League released them and we've forwarded them on to youse guys and gals. After all a weekend rest won't come amiss so we're relying on "George" Mackenzie do the most of the column. Here they are:

Stanley Cup winners in 1947 and 1948, Toronto Maple Leafs are gunning for their third straight Stanley Cup victory, which, since the inception of the N.H.L., Toronto Maple Leafs and Montreal Canadiens have each won Lord Stanley's pewter five times. However, Canadiens also won it in 1916 in the old National Hockey Association. Boston Bruins, New York Rangers and Detroit Red Wings have each won the Cup three times...The trophy has been held by a United States team on 13 occasions...Boston, Rangers and Detroit three times each, Chicago Black Hawks twice and Seattle Metropolitans once. The Cup remained in American cities for six consecutive years, from 1936 through 1941. ...For the past five years, from 1936 through 1941. ...For the past five years, from 1936 through 1941. ...For the past five

By TED SMITH

New York, April 4 (AP)—Baseball is more than a game. It is a system almost a religion in the United States.

Not since the Black Sox scandal in 1919-20 has anything serious happened to disturb the serene and sacred flow of this intensely American sport.

But now there is confusion. The players are going through their parts, but they whisper to each other, "what does the Gardella case mean! Is there more money in it for me?"

And the club owners say privately, "what if the courts upset the reserve clause? How can we stay in business?"

The lawsuit started February 9 when two justices of the United States Courts of Appeals ruled that Danny Gardella could go ahead with his suit for $300,000 damages against organized baseball.

Gardella was a wartime outfielder for New York Giants. After a tiff in the spring of 1946, Danny went to Mexico City and played in the Pasquale Brothers' league, which is considered inferior from the United States viewpoint. No one in the Giant organization gave a hoot.

Along with some really big shots such as Max Lanier and Mickey Owen, who "jumped" to Mexico, Gardella was banned from organized baseball for five years by Commissioner A. B. Chandler.

After the decision of the Court of Appeals that surprised so many people, Lanier and Fred Martin sued organized baseball for $2,500,000, charging that they, too, had been deprived of a means of livelihood. But Gardella and his lawyer, Frederick Weintraub, started it all and as far as the law and the public is concerned Gardella's is the name that the case bears.

Baseball is frightened because Gardella's damage suit is aimed at the legality of the players' reserve clause, which baseball owners say is the rock foundation of the game. Under the rules this clause is in all baseball contracts.

The reserve clause is a promise to which every professional baseball player agrees when he signs any contract. It binds him to sign up again the following year. This goes on indefinitely. It permits him to be sold or traded without his permission (or without his receiving any part of the purchase price).

A club can terminate its contract with a player on written notice by paying 10 days' salary. The player has no such avenue of escape.

Clapper Starred With the Bruins For Twenty Years

Boston, April 4 — (CP) — In the fall of 1926 a gangling youth of 19, carrying the old suitcase, reported to Boston Tigers as a candidate for the Canadian - American Hockey League team.

The next season Aubrey Victor (Dit) Clapper became a member of Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League.

For 20 years Clapper, one of the nicest guys in the game, starred for the Bruins. He became a playing coach and then coach. Last Friday he signalled the end of his career in the big game when he announced his retirement at the age of 44.

Dit said he wanted "to devote more time to his sporting goods store in Peterborough and to his wife and two children."

When Dit came to Tigers he was a defenceman. The next year Art Ross shifted him to right wing where he remained until 1937 when he went back to the rearguard position.

During his 20 years of active participation, Clapper scored 228 goals, 246 assists for a total of 474 points, exclusive of playoffs. In his heavy scoring season of 1929-30 he notched 41 goals—two short of Cooney Weiland's record.

He is the only living active player to be named to Hockey's Hall of Fame at Kingston. He received the honor in 1947 after 20 years of service to Boston.

He retired from active play "for the last time" as a Bruin on Jan. 12, 1947 at Boston's most elaborate hockey ceremonies.

Gifts were Numerous

It was Dit Clapper Night and the gifts were numerous. The League presented him a $1,000 silver service. The fans chipped in for $2,000 worth of government bonds. The writers gave him a plaque.

After the game he was presented with his hockey jersey by the Bruins who announced "No. 5 now is retired."

Promptly after Dit was enrolled in the Hall of Fame and that's where his white, gold and black jersey went.

Dit always was a clean player but could (like cars of himself) and memorable among older fans were his jousts with Wally Kilrea, Rabbit McVeigh and Art Coulter.

His Achilles tendon was severed accidentally in Toronto in January of 1942. And after that injury his guards attached to the rear of the players' boots were strengthened and lengthened. Clapper's career seemed ended then but he returned to star during the war years.

Barrie Flyers Win Playoff In Four Straight

Schumacher, April 4 — (CP) — Fresh from 12 straight playoff victories, Barrie Flyers today awaited the start of the Eastern Canada junior hockey finals.

Flyers Saturday night won their second successive all-Ontario crown by defeating Provincial Combines 13-2 in the fourth game of their best-of-seven series. They won the first game 4-0, the second 11-2 and the third 4-1.

They now will meet either Inkerman Rockets or Montreal Royals for the Eastern Canada title. Royals lead the best-of-five series 2-0.

The Flyers have chalked up an impressive record since they started the playoffs. They disposed of the potent Windsor Spitfires in four straight games and then ousted Toronto Marlboros in four straight to win the Ontario Hockey Association championship.

Saturday night they looked just as good. Although the Combines, Northern Ontario Hockey Association champions, held them to a 2-2 tie in the first period, Flyers drove in three counters in the second period and then went on a scoring spree in the third to totally seven unanswered goals.

And it was a Schumacher-born Barrie forward who caused the most trouble. Real Chevrefils sniped four goals and was a tower of strength throughout.

Two more came from another Timmins product, Rick Hogg. Paul Meger also counted two. One each went to Sid McNabney, George Burdham, Gary Gordon, Don Ashbee and Hal Hopper. Porcupine scorers were Gord Warner and Pete Marson.

Flats flew late in the second period, involving all the players but the two netminders. When officials finally got the players separated, they gave Hogg and Hopper of Barrie and Meehan and Didone of Porcupine major penalties.

Toronto Marlies Defeat Sydney By 5-3 Score

Toronto, April 4 (CP) — The close-checking Toronto Marlboros today appeared to have the Indian sign on Sydney Millionaires. But can they keep it?

The Marlboros Saturday night battled out a 5-3 decision over the Millionaires in the final game of their best-of-seven series. They won the first game 4-0, the second 11-2 and the third 4-1.

It was William (Red) Johnson who lifted Joe Primeau's Marlboros to an improved performance over the best-of-five series opener when they were fortunate to split a 1-1 stalemate.

The 22-year-old redhead figured in all Toronto goals with an impressive display of skating and checking before the sell-out crowd of 15,264 fans at Maple Leaf Gardens. He scored two goals and set up Al Buchanan for a pair and Chuck Blair for another.

Cliff Roach, Johnny Arduser and Don (Red) McFee got one apiece for Millionaires.

Bestlast manoeuvres back of the Sydney blueline made the difference. The Marlboros showed their close-in prowess on the scoring lapses and counted on three of them.

But the wide-open game was decided only when Johnson broke a 3-3 tie with a goal for the Marlboros at 4.10 of the final period. He then helped set-up Buchanan for the clincher minutes later after Sydney missed several good chances.

Picture goal of the night came when McFee tied the count at 2-3 at 2.15 of the third period. The lanky right-winger was played with the Memorial cup-winning Winnipeg Monarchs in 1945, largest of the defensive aces and decked netminder Howie Harvey in spectacular fashion.

East York Wins Telegram Trophy In Basketball

Toronto, April 4 (CP)—Toronto's East York Collegiate Institute, champions of the Ontario Inter-collegiate Basketball Championship here Saturday night by defeating Lisgar Technical School 41-37 in a three-minute overtime period.

The team was presented with the Toronto Evening Telegram trophy which will be given annually to the winning team in the competition. This was the first year the trophy was presented.

Sidbury held the lead until the fourth quarter when East York tied the game, 32-32, took a one-point lead, lost it and finally tied it 35-35 by the end of regular-time.

The East York cagers then potted two field shots and two foul shots against Sudbury's single basket in the overtime period.

In the semi-finals Saturday afternoon, Sudbury eliminated Windsor Patterson, Collegiate 56-48 and East York eliminated Peterborough Collegiate and Vocational School 34-28.

Sudbury had to come from behind in the semi-final against Windsor, losing the first half ended 23-20 for the Border City team. They took the lead in the third quarter on a basket by shifty Marvin Zinn and with the aid of Zinn's five baskets and two foul shots in the second half stayed ahead until the end of the game.

In the second semi-final, East York had little trouble with Peterborough. At half time East York was four points up with a 15-11 score and their last half increased their lead by six points.

Played at Fast Pace

The championship game was played at a fast pace, especially in the last half when East York made a desperate and successful attempt to tie the game and in the overtime period when they outscored the Sudbury squad 6-1.

The going was so hot in overtime play that Sudbury's Jack Duncan passed out on the bench from exhaustion.

Zinn sank three shots in the first quarter to help Sudbury take a six-point lead with the quarter ending 9-3. By half time the Sudbury team led 22-13, but in the third quarter, East York's Tom White potted three baskets and Harold Andrews and Monty Montgomery sank one apiece to cut Sudbury's lead 29-27.

Three good foul shots gave Sudbury a wider lead again in the fourth quarter but East York drew to within one basket and two foul shots and Neil Brown tied he 35-35 with a foul shot. Andrews put the Yorkers one point up with a foul shot but Sudbury tied it 37-37 with a foul shot. And Walter Koretz, and Jack Duncan potted a point to put Sudbury two up. Two foul shots by Andrews and Probert tied the game for East York with only seconds remaining.

Tom White, East York's captain, scored first in the overtime period on a foul shot and Brown sank a basket to put them three up. Wayne Sadie put Sudbury back on its feet with a basket but a foul shot and a basket by Gerry Probert put the game in the bag for East York.

Americans Asked To Clean Back Yard In Boxing

London, Ont., April 4 — (CP) — Members of the Ontario Amateur Boxing Association, meeting here Saturday, suggested that the American Amateur Athletic Union should be better advised to clean its own house before starting in Ontario. The Association announced it would fight any move by the A. A. U. to control amateur boxing in Ontario.

The ban by the American group which prevents Ontario fighters from appearing on cards there and also prevents American punchers from performing in Ontario, came under direct fire.

Daniel Ferris of the American A. A. U. ordered the ban because boxers in Ontario generally and Toronto particularly, were being paid off in cash.

During the debate on the subject, Jimmy Rocco and "Cap" Teat of Niagara Falls, Ont., and Bill Swinburne of Windsor said that when their fighters displayed their wares in such American cities as Niagara Falls, N. Y., Buffalo, Detroit, Flint, and Port Huron, they were paid the same way as boxers are paid here."

It was decided to send a letter to Ferris suggesting that he clean up his own yard.

Jack "Deacon" Allen, president of the Ontario Amateur Boxing Association, said that the American A. A. U. officials imposed and lifted the suspension any time it suited their own purposes.

"Their suspension is still in force," the veteran boxing man from Toronto said, "but a few days ago an Ontario amateur from Sault Ste. Marie fought in a New York Golden Gloves tournament. In addition, the card two weeks there will be American amateurs participating in a Soo card."

The meeting voted in favor of using a 10 ounce glove to replace the eight ounces currently in use and supported the Ontario Athletic Commission ruling concerning the compulsory eight count for knockdowns in amateur boxing bouts.

One of the highlights of the session was the presentation of a cheque for $500 from the Toronto Newsboys' Association via Vic Bagnato of the Toronto Diamond A. C.

Americans Asked St. Louis Flyers Even Series With Providence Reds

(By The Canadian Press)

St. Louis Flyers have relied on an old jinx to stay in the American Hockey League playoffs, but another jinx may knock them out just as quickly.

The Flyers squared their best-of-seven series with Providence Sunday night at three games apiece with a 2-1 victory over the Reds in St. Louis.

The Reds, who had gone winless on St. Louis ice this season, were unable to break the spell.

The deciding game of the hotly-contested series will be played in Providence Tuesday. And St. Louis, oddly enough, has yet to win there this season.

A record crowd of 12,331 cheered as the Flyers jumped to an early lead and outfought and outskated the Reds throughout.

The St. Louis tallies were distributed evenly, one coming in each session. Vic Grisz scored the first. Hec Poeny the second and Red Doran the third.

The Flyers played one of their best-defensive games of the year. The vaunted Providence attack was choked completely except for a long screen shot by defenseman Danny Summers in the third period.

The Movie Column

By BOB THOMAS

New York, April 4 (CP) — Montgomery Clift is doing all right for a boy who never had a burning desire to be an actor. Even at $250,000 a picture, he's the most sought-after star in the movie business.

How did he happen do become an actor? "Purely by chance. I never had any burning ambition to become a great actor. I just started when I was a kid of 13. I happened to get a stage part through a personal connection.

He seemed to be fairly happy about his new-found fame. The fans don't give him much trouble, except around his Manhattan apartment.

At present, he doesn't plan to return to pictures until August, when he'll probably do "An American Tragedy" under George Stevens' direction. He'll also play "Naked and the Dead," is still being written by Lillian Hellman and has been postponed until the next Broadway season. Like all other things, he'll do it if he likes the script.

Why does he prefer to live in New York? "I like California, but the climate isn't conducive to work. I'd much rather play tennis or go to the beach than be working when I'm out there."

Clift has succeeded Van Johnson, Frank Sinatra and Gregory Peck as the country's No. 1 sensation. It's likely he'll be palpitating fathers for quite a long time to come. I asked him when he would settle down and get married.

"Not until I'm very, very old," he replied.

Three Playoff Games Scheduled

St. Catharines, April 4 — (CP) — Three playoff games in the Ontario Hockey Association are scheduled for the local arena this week with St. Catharines Tuesday in the third game of a best-of-five series with the O. H. A. juvenile title. The Lions lead the series 2-0.

In a Thursday night double bill, the undefeated Toronto Marlboros and Guelphs meet St. Catharines Maroons in the second game of a best-of-five series for the Association's Midget title. Marlboros took the first game 5-0.

The other Thursday night game matches Barrie and St. Catharines Maroons in the final game of a two-game, total point series for the O. M. H. A. bantam championship, with Barrie holding a six-goal lead.

In Manhattan:

Several Stage Attractions Qualify For Best Play of Season Awards

By PAT USSHER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, April 2 — (CP) — The time is approaching for the Midget title. Marlboros took the first game 5-0.

The other Thursday night game matches Barrie and St. Catharines Maroons in the final game of a two-game, total point series for the O. M. H. A. bantam championship, with Barrie holding a six-goal lead.

ABOUT 22000 B.C.

Western anthropologists estimate that African civilization is some 30,000 years old.

Hungarians to Mark Anniversary of Landing In Nfld. in 1583

Toronto, April 4 (CP)— Canada's Hungarians will celebrate on Easter Sunday the anniversary of the arrival of the first Hungarian in North America. He was Stephanus Parmenius of Buda, Hungary, a scholar and geographer, who landed in Newfoundland in 1583. He accompanied Sir Humphrey Gilbert at the command of Queen Elizabeth.

The time is approaching for the best play of the season and it is probably safe to say now that the palm will go to "Death of a Salesman."

This column picks the sombre drama by Arthur Miller as the leader in the field of straight plays. As for musicals, "Kiss Me, Kate" is out in front by a wide margin. But its position may be challenged by "South Pacific," due to hit Broadway next week.

"Death of a Salesman," in addition to tackling real and everyday problems, is a tense and absorbing drama. It is written skilfully and is blessed with fine acting and fine directing.

Best Ingredients

When it comes to light entertainment, "Kiss Me, Kate" has all the ingredients that add up to making a good musical. Authors Bella and Sam Spewack have happily blended the story of Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew" with a counterpart in a modern romance. Cole Porter has turned out a lusty, tuneful score. Some of the tunes are suggestive of the melodies of Elizabethan days. The singing, dancing and acting are all excellent.

"Kiss Me, Kate" has pace, colour, humour and action stirred together to a nicety.

In the straight drama field, "Edward, My Son" and "Detective Story" appear to be close rivals for the runner-up position. "Lend an Ear," I'm told, is the next-best among musical shows.

The season has been noteworthy for high-calibre new scripts.

Police Power Drama

The whole idea of absolute police power and its effect on one man's mind gets a melodramatic airing in Sidney Kingsley's "Detective Story," which had its Broadway opening last week.

The powerful production looks like the latest in the season's crop of top hits. The taut and timely production tells of several hours in the life of a police detective, a man fiercely convinced of his public duty but completely regardless of the idea of checks and balances on police power that a democracy is supposed to provide.

Unswerving in purpose to the point of being sadistic, his tenacity brings even his own wife into the proceedings for a small tragic ending.

TWO CONSTABLES BEATEN

Toronto, April 4 (CP)— Police say two constables were beaten up at a dance in Oakville. Constable Stanley Woods was knocked down and kicked when he attempted to eject one young man blamed for a disturbance. His legs were badly bruised. Sergeant James Russell was kicked in the shins and stomach before three other officers arrived and arrested three youths. Leonard Oakley and Reno Faggini were charged with assaulting and obstructing a police officer, Allan Kelsey was charged with creating a disturbance.

AT McCARTHY — The explosives from south of the Border have not yet arrived, so nobody expects just good ole Bob Hope and Bing Crosby and Lon Costello turned loose in "Monte Carlo Nights," starring comedy with a hot tamale flavor, now at the McCarthy Theatre.

AT THE CAPITOL — Cornel Wilde, who appears in the best seller "The Walls of Jericho," with Linda Darnell, Anne Baxter and Kirk Douglas. On the same program "The Golden Eye," starring Charlie Chan. Both hits are first city runs. Matinee daily at 2.00 p.m.

AT THE BELLE — Olivia de Havilland registers an emotional gamut in Darryl F. Zanuck's presentation of "The Snake Pit," starring Mark Stevens, Celeste Holm, and Leo Genn. "The Snake Pit" continues at the Belle until Wednesday, matinee daily.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

New York, April 4 — (AP) — Dumb Dan Morgan, who frequently argues that modern boxers don't know how to box and modern managers and trainers don't know how to teach them, has a standing offer to demonstrate 120 different moves in boxing . . . The catch is that Dan insists on a sizable inducement, say a $1,000 bet, before he'll put on the demonstration . . . "Joe Louis," Dan says, "didn't know anything about boxing except what Jack Blackburn taught him . . . Blackburn taught Joe four moves and he won the heavyweight championship" . . . The four moves were how to feint, how to carry the body with a jab and make it effective, how to draw a lead and counter it with either hand and how to keep an opponent moving backward or hold him in the centre of the ring . . . Joe always made them back up until he fought Walcott. Then Walcott backed him up and Louis got licked — at least I say he was licked," Dan concludes.

Cleaning the Cuff

Horace Rawlings, first winner of the U.S.G.A. open golf championship, also was the youngest. He was 19 when he took the title in 1895. Francis Ouimet, the "Boy Wonder" of 1913, and Gene Sarazen in 1922, both were 20 years old.

Vigil Resumed At King's Cross London Station

London, April 4 — (CP)—The vigil of London's King's Cross station for sight of a missing airman, Wilfred Sutherland of Vancouver, has been resumed.

Pit. Sgt. Sutherland was reported missing by the R. A. F. and believed killed when his plane was shot down off Borkum Island in December 1943.

Last year his father, John Sutherland, spent 10 hours daily for four months scanning the faces of travellers at King's Cross station. He started his vigil after seeing a young man boarding a Cambridge-bound train at the station. The father said he was certain it was his son, but he was so startled that he lost sight of the youth. The chance encounter came while John Sutherland was on holiday in Britain.

Now middle-aged Mary Barret of Vancouver has taken over the father's watch.

Miss Barret, a family friend, flew here from Vancouver last week. She said Sunday she started the vigil April 1 and will watch daily for the next month.

Ex-Champion Walker Takes to Air at 92

Teterboro, N. J., April 4 (CP) — At the age of 92, former United States walking champion H. Hocking, took to the air Sunday. "It certainly beats walking," Hocking commented after a half-hour ride in a DC-3, his first plane flight. Hocking won several national walkathons between 1910 and 1920.

APRIL IS CANCER MONTH THROUGHOUT CANADA

During the month of April the Canadian Cancer Society is making a national drive for funds required for research, extension of diagnostic and treatment facilities, educational work, and service to cancer patients. This picture shows a group of voluntary workers making cancer dressings in a cancer dressing station. Hundreds of thousands of free dressings are distributed to cancer patients all over Canada who are being nursed in their own homes.—Central Press Canadian.

More than 15,000 Canadians died of cancer last year, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. As a cause of death in this country, cancer is second only to disease of the heart and blood-vessels. Many cancer victims can be saved if symptoms are recognized and treated in the early stages. Here a cancer patient is shown receiving an X-ray treatment, part of the many services given by the Canadian Cancer Society.—Central Press Canadian.

This exclusive photo of the ultra-centrifuge machine used at the Connaught laboratories, Concord, Ont., is worth $15,000. This machine centrifuges viruses at the rate of 60,000 revolutions per minute which enables scientists to purify viruses which are extracted from affected tissue. The machine is the only one of its kind in Canada. — Central Press Canadian.

TULSA OILERS WIN

St. Paul, Minn., April 4 — (AP) — Tulsa Oilers defeated St. Paul 4-3 last night and will meet the Salots here again tomorrow night in a second game of the United States Hockey League's best-of-seven final playoff.

A crowd of 6,193 saw the Oilers get the jump on the home team with two goals within nine seconds in the first period. St. Paul's Alex Sandalack gave Tulsa its third goal when, in trying to clear the puck from his own end, he drove it into the St. Paul nets.

Three Deaths By Asphyxiation In Maritimes

(By The Canadian Press)

Southern Ontario's second fatal airplane crash in three days and three deaths by asphyxiation in New Brunswick swelled to 17 the number of fatalities in Eastern Canada during the weekend.

Although fair weather for April's first weekend brought heavy traffic, a Canadian Press survey found only three deaths due to traffic mishaps.

Two United States Air Force Flyers, Eugene Gerke and Lionel Tasker, 28, both of Flint, Mich., died when their stunting plane crashed into the Norwich, Ont., farm of Tasker's uncle. On Thursday four persons died near London, Ont., in a plane that crashed during a snowstorm.

The bodies of three Saint John, N. B., men, Joseph Gallant, John Gallant and Joseph Ralph Desroches, all between 20 and 30 years of age, were found near Chipman, N. B., in an automobile filled with carbon monoxide gas. At Campbellton, N. B., Ernest Hicks, 34, was crushed between a house and his dairy truck by a skidding auto.

In Nova Scotia's only fatal accident, Russell Pratt, 17, and Asa Pettigrew, 33, were drowned at Kolbeck in River Philip. There were no accidental deaths in Newfoundland or Prince Edward Island.

Body Found in Ditch

The beaten body of William Stewart, 70, missing from his Montreal home for three months, was found in a ditch near the Hampstead golf course in Northwestern Montreal. And at Ste. Genevieve, Que. the body of Frieda Kroeger, 40, missing since last January, was found on the verandah of a deserted summer cottage, lying beneath an upturned rowboat.

Henry Milonas, six, was drowned in the Rideau River at Ottawa after falling from a snow heap by the river. The drowned body of a recently born boy was found on the shore of Lake St. Clair near Windsor.

William Lee, 49, was killed when struck by a truck in the Northwestern Ontario town of Atikokan and in Hamilton Rosie Hockbaum, 24, was trapped in a narrow tunnel by a speeding freight train. Collision between his car and a street-car brought death at Hamilton to Howard Mallard, 28. And at Kingston Jack Allison, rescued from drowning in Lake Ontario Friday, died of exposure in hospital Saturday.

Unconscious in a Toronto veterans' hospital since he fell from a stepladder five months ago, Henry Bruff, 64, died on Saturday.

MINES CLOSE BEACH

Woodbridge, Suffolk, England—(CP) — Two mines were found recently in Holiesley Bay near here. The beach has been closed until authorities are sure it is safe for visitors.

FIRING SPRING

Peterborough, Ont. — (CP) — Firemen don't look for the first robin, but the first grass fire, to confirm spring's arrival. The first one for 1949 was extinguished recently in Ashburnham.

ARREST REPORTED

According to the report of U. S. Minister to Syria, James Hugh Keeley, Jr., Syrian President Shukri al-Kuwatly (above) is under arrest in Damascus after a coup in which the army seized power in a bloodless revolution. The revolt, it was declared, would not interfere with armistice talks with Israel, "being local and having no outside implications." — Central Press Canadian.

Remember That Night

By Margaret Gorman Nichols

Brenda went to the telephone and called Craig.

"Hello, darling," he said quite merrily, "did my daughter tell you she spent the afternoon with me? It was swell! But I'm afraid it was swell only for me. Proud parent exhibiting beautiful child. She's miserable about Philip."

She told him about Lilyan and Walter Rosley. Then, "I've just sent her to Phillip. And I'm scared. If he received her coldly or sends her away . . ."

But his voice was deep and confident and still quite merry.

"He won't send her away. The poor young fool fell in love with her that night in Baltimore and didn't know what was the matter with him. I'll be right out to greet them when they come back together," he laughed. "Who'd have thought that Phillip would be my son-in-law!"

The cab driver paid, Karen stood a moment on the sidewalk before the apartment house where Phillip lived. She was shaking terribly. One moment she was on heights, thinking, "He'll tell me he loves me and take me in his arms and kiss me. I've wanted him to kiss me for so long!" Another moment she was in dark despair, thinking, "What will he think of me for coming in on him like this! He doesn't love me. But he will be sweet and gentle and his mouth will be amused again. And I'll come out alone!"

At the desk she asked the clerk for the number of Phillip's apartment. The clerk called, saying, "Miss Mallare to see you, Mr. Mallory."

Her heart sank. Suppose he wouldn't see her!

But the clerk nodded and told her the number of the apartment. Again she had to wait for an elevator.

Phillip's servant lifted shaggy white brows in surprise when he saw her. Then he vanished as she came in and she found herself standing face to face with Phillip in a large warm room where only one light glowed faintly.

He frowned. "Well — what a pleasant surprise!" Why had she come! In answer to his desire to see her? How lovely she was in that black suit with her chin lost in the soft fur collar!

He smiled. "I suppose Brenda told you that Lilyan and I are not going to be married tomorrow."

No longer did she have it her eyes betrayed her. He must know! Phillip, look and see!

"Yes, she told me. Are you sure you . . ."

"Sure! No. Not at all. And that is the truth. I haven't wanted to marry her for weeks but it was the decent thing to do after I'd asked her. I'm immensely relieved."

He wished that a brighter light were burning so that he could see her face more clearly. Were her eyes — those clear, dark blue eyes of hers — as soft and as appealing as they seemed? Should he speak? Now was the time to speak, now that they were alone.

Across the little space that separated them, he looked at her.

"All my life I'm going to have one regret, Karen. Do you remember the night in my car when we were driving out to Tommy Nolting's? In the flame of my cigarette lighter you and I looked at each other. It was only a second, and my one regret is that I put the light out! If it had stayed on another moment, you'd have been in my arms."

He did not move. "Ever since that night, and perhaps before, you've been moving in my heart."

His firm mouth broke into a sudden smile. "Karen, my dearest, shall I take that one regret to California with me or shall — shall we start from that minute?"

She had to ask, "You love me, Phillip?"

In an instant he was beside her, his hands on her shoulders.

"Love you! Of course I love you! Why do I love you? You want to know such fool . . . for a thousand reasons."

He drew her closer and his mouth was close to her face. "Why do I love you, Karen! I love you for your imperfection, for your fighting heart, for your courage, and because you've got a temper to lose! And because you are beautiful to look at and beautiful to listen to but mainly because . . . I can't help myself! You moved in and took possession!

"I can't tell you what it's been like, planning for a wedding when the only wedding I want to plan is ours — yours and mine!

"Now you say something. We have argued and we've fought but we couldn't escape each other."

She looked up. But before she spoke, he kissed her and said, — "There are tears in your eyes, Karen. You're the only girl I know who is beautiful when she's crying."

"I know you. You love me! You have loved me all along. Why didn't I know, why didn't I find out? I've been such a blind fool."

Later she would tell him that she was Craig's daughter. But not now. These moments were theirs. It was true. True! These were Phillip's arms holding her, Phillip looking at her as he had never looked at her before, Phillip saying, "Of course I love you."

"Karen, what do you suppose Tex Rickard is doing this afternoon? I was going away for a while and when I got back I was going to launch a campaign to make you love me! Now! He lifted her chin, "now I'm not going away and . . ."

She didn't have to try to make me love you! I do, Phillip."

"And you and I are going to be married tomorrow, my darling Karen, let me hold you close and kiss you again and again until this becomes real.

But it was real, he knew. This warm face against his, the warm arms that encircled him, her blue eyes looking into his. Joseph . . .

"We'll be married at midnight," he said, "and then, Karen," and we'll have less than twenty-four hours for a honeymoon until next afternoon. Tonight I'm wanted to be an actress. You would be, you know."

"But if you want me to be just your wife, I won't be an actress. For weeks I thought that foot-lights were phantom things, Phillip. Only dreams."

"We won't talk about that now. Not a word. Not a single lame between us." He smiled again. "We have done all our arguing before! Now I'll find the basic elements. I'll help you make yourself a great actress. We'll talk about that later but now . . . now . . ."

The phone rang shrilly. With his arm still around her, he picked it up.

Brenda asked, "Is Karen there, Phillip? I've been worried . . ."

"Of course she is here! You know she is. I'm probably sent her!"

"Then you and she . . ."

"You have my permission for our wedding, darling. It takes place at midnight. I'm going to you to be there. You and Craig. And then we're going to try and find some quiet place for a honeymoon. Sid's mountain lodge probably. We're stage people, you know, and the show must go on."

"Oh, Phillip, . . . I'm so happy? Where is she now?"

"Beside me where she is going to be always. And after I've kissed her a few more times . . . After all, tonight is the first time I've kissed her . . ."

"I'm waiting. Craig and I are waiting!"

She rang off and Phillip put down the phone and drew Karen closer.

"It began on a June night in a shower. Do you remember that night!"

"It began that night but it will never end, Phillip. We're always going to be as much in love as we are tonight."

"No. We're going to be more in love after midnight."

First Cabinet Of Newfoundland Begins Work

St. John's, April 4 (CP)—Headed by provisional Premier Joseph R. (Joey) Smallwood an "average bunch of Newfoundlanders" today began their first full week as this infant province's first cabinet.

They moved into the 100-year-old Colonial Building Saturday and Mr. Smallwood cleared up his first task that of allotting portfolios.

In a radio broadcast to 325,000 Newfoundlanders Saturday night Mr. Smallwood said: "Our government are not archangels and we are not supermen. I think I can say that we are an average bunch of Newfoundlanders who are determined to do our best for the toiling masses of this country."

Cold War Costs U.S. Huge Sum

Baltimore, April 4 (AP)— The cold war is costing the United States at least $10,000,000,000 a year, Senator Millard Tydings (Dem. Md.) said Sunday. The chairman of the Senate armed Services Committee put that price tag on United States expenditures "which would not be necessary if the threat of Communism did not exist."

This figure, he said in a radio speech, includes the military budget and money spent under the Marshall plan.

Say Young Girl Admits Robbery Of 15 Apartments

Pittsburgh, April 4 — (AP) — A 14-year-old girl who said she robbed at least 15 apartments, police reported Sunday. The girl was seized after an apartment occupant found her looting his quarters. "I've been doing this since I was 10 or 11 years old," police quoted her as saying.

ACTRESS SEVERELY ILL

Hollywood, April 4 (AP)— Olivia De Havilland is severely ill, her studio disclosed today, and every effort is being made by her doctor to save a baby she expects in August. The Academy Award-winning actress has been confined to her bed for the last two months.

London Lights Go on Again After 10 Years

London, April 4 (CP)— After nearly 10 years of blackout and gloom the lights of London have gone on again.

Thousands of Londoners poured into Piccadilly Circus and other gathering places Saturday night as the switches were thrown and neon signs and theatre marquees flashed on throughout the capital.

And the big town had its noisiest, happiest celebration since VJ-day.

One hospital handled 20 fainting cases and countless children were temporarily lost, but the crowds kept in the best of temper all night. Buses and taxis barely crawled through the cheering, waving Londoners.

To many Londoners the lights seemed a big step towards the end of post-war austerity—despite a recent cut in the meat ration and other shortages that still exist in Britain.

Although it began to rain after 8 p.m., everyone and his girl friend had the time of their lives as the display of lights—advertising beer, beef extract and burlesque shows—recalled the pre-war glories of London night life.

The famous flashing signs hadn't shone since Sept. 1, 1940.

For children up to 13 or there-abouts, it was a brand-new sight. A little girl, watching the stars cascade down great electric sign, sighed: "This must be what fairyland is like."

Typical of the comment of the grown-ups was that of George Watkins, a London engineer, who watched the big show at Piccadilly Circus with his 12-year-old daughter, Margaret.

"It's been so long," he said. "We've had so much gloom and darkness. It's certainly good to see some brightness come into our lives."

In other cities and towns throughout Britain there were gala celebrations to mark the occasion. At Southampton, David Street, nine, pressed a switch which touched off one of the city's biggest electric signs, a 15-foot high movie display.

To little David it was a new phase of his life. For the lights had been off there since the day he was born—Sept. 1, 1939.

CONSTRUCTION COMPANY OFFICES BURNED

Toronto, April 4 (CP)— Fire Sunday night destroyed the offices of the Kershaw Construction Company in suburban Weston causing damage estimated at $5,000. Firefighters from Weston bogged down in mud before they could reach the fire, believed started from a faulty oil heater.

ONTARIO GOVT. READY TO MAKE CHANGES IN BILL

Would Extend Time Limit and Allow Investees to Buy 90 P. C. of Stock

Toronto, April 5. (CP)—With the views of all parties in the Ontario legislature now on record, debate continues today on the provincial government's charitable gifts bill.

Attorney - General Leslie Blackwell, facing opposition groups united in criticism of the measure, announced Monday night that the government is prepared to consider two amendments. One amendment would extend beyond three years the time limit for disposal of the shares of a business which operates as a charitable foundation. The other would permit trustees of a foundation to buy up 90 per cent of the shares which they must dispose of under the bill.

The bill, as it stands, provides that if a charitable trust or foundation has more than 10 per cent of the interest in any business, it must dispose of the remaining 90 per cent within three years. If the foundation converts the business into cash it may invest the proceeds in investments authorized by law, but again is limited to investing in not more than 10 per cent of the capital stock of any company.

Mr. Blackwell, Education Minister Dana Porter, Liberal Leader Farquhar Oliver and A. A. MacInnis (Lab.-Prog.-Comm., Bellwoods) spoke during night sitting debate on second reading of the charities bill. At the afternoon sitting, F. R. Aquilite, leader of the C.C.F. opposition, in a two-hour speech continued argument he started in a 4 1-2 hour speech last Wednesday.

Joliffe Makes Charge

At one point Mr. Joliffe charged that the three-year time limit in the charities bill was set because it would elapse before the government, re-elected last June, had to contest another election.

Young People Too Coddled Says Dr. Reaman

London, Ont., April 5 (CP)—Young people today are coddled too much by their parents, Dr. W. E. Reaman, director of the Department of English at Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, said in an address here Monday night.

He told the Builders' Exchange that "we deny children the opportunity of having to struggle like many of us had to. We should encourage our youth to step out and make a place for themselves the hard way."

Dr. Reaman said he disagreed with some of the methods of present day education because "just giving people the facts doesn't necessarily make them educated."

"Excessively brainy people are a dime a dozen. Many have no personality, and consequently in industry they fail in their attempt to handle men."

Falls 25 Feet

Toronto, April 5 (CP)—William Mills, 28, of Toronto, who suffered skull and collar-bone fractures in a 25-foot fall Monday night, today is in satisfactory condition in hospital.

Unconscious several hours after the accident, Mills is believed to have climbed from a downtown hotel window on to a flat roof and fallen into a lane.

TRUMAN TO ASK SPEEDY APPROVAL OF ATLANTIC PACT

Issue Controversial In The United States

Washington, April 5 (AP)—President Truman is expected to send the North Atlantic treaty to the United States Senate before the end of this week with an appeal for speedy ratification.

This is one of three major steps which officials forecast today for carrying out the pact that the President acclaimed Monday night as "a milestone in history". The treaty was signed by the United States, Britain, Canada and nine western powers in solemn, fast-moving ceremony Monday afternoon.

The other two steps in prospect are disclosed in the pact as follows:

1. Completion of an American arms aid program, costing close to $1,000,000,000.

2. Discussions among the 12 of ways to set up an organization of a council and a defence committee. Their assignment would be to unify the defences of the non-Communist western world under the new alliance.

Headquarters Change Protested By Manitobans

Ottawa, April 5 (CP)—The Province of Manitoba today protested in force today to protest to the Commons Railway Committee the proposal of the Canadian National Line to move its head offices from Winnipeg to Montreal.

Headed by Premier Campbell of Manitoba, Mayor Grant Coutts of Winnipeg and Mayor George McLean of St. Boniface, the group represented more than 30 government, labor, business and other groups of the Province of Manitoba.

In a 13-page brief, the group said the C.N.R. move would be a serious blow to the economy of the province.

The C.N. plan, announced some months ago, would move the president along with the directors of research and economic control, personnel, etc. to Montreal. At present the T.C.A. occupies a total of 1,500 persons at Winnipeg, representing with an annual payroll of more than $3,000,000.

"In view of the removal of all operating departments and their township offices and clerical staff, we are naturally apprehensive that this is only the beginning," the brief said. The initial moves indicated that "Stevenson Field will become nothing more than a maintenance way stop."

(Editor's Note: The following eyewitness account of the tragic hospital fire was given to The Intelligencer by W. B. Connell, 30, an employee of the Civil Aeronautics, administration.)

By W.B. CRANNELL

Effingham, Ill., April 5 (AP)—It was about midnight. My wife, Melba, and I had been asleep in our bedroom directly across the street from the hospital. The fire sirens sounding the general alarm woke me with a start.

The first I recall coming out of my sleep was my wife shouting: 'Oh my God, look.'

When I looked out the window flames were shooting from the upper portion of the building and from the roof. Within a few minutes mostly were on the west side. But more were pouring from everywhere.

I grabbed my clothes and dashed across the street in about 30 seconds. When I got there a city fire truck and a few firemen had arrived.

Two fellows were placing ladders up to windows on the east end. I ran around to the side by the Sisters' home. Two women were seated in windows about 12 feet off the ground. I asked them to sit with their legs hanging down and another fellow and myself were able to grab their legs and ease them to the ground.

Around in back of the hospital three or four women were seated in windows and others were jumping out.

By that time, flames were everywhere and firemen were beginning to jump from third-floor windows. I hollered to many of them "don't jump". Then I ran to the Sisters' home to try and find some blankets to improvise life-nets. But when I got back it was too late to help and the blankets were left on the ground.

I actually saw three or four jump around me. I'll never forget hearing a shrieking sound you would associate somebody falling to ground after a three-floor fall.

Then I ran back and told telephone operator to call all ambulance and fire fighting equipment in the area.

It is impossible to describe how fast those flames spread. I don't know. It just seemed a great mass of flames.

Our firefighters tried but the fire was so fast that I think it just burned itself out. It couldn't be fought.

No one in the town hasn't lost a friend.

Bulgar Deputy Premier Stripped of Three Posts, Charge Double Dealing

By DIMITER MISHEV

Sofia, April 5 (AP)—The Bulgarian Communist party central committee last night stripped Traicho Kostov of Deputy Premiership, membership on the Politburo, the No. 3 Communist party group in the land.

Kostov, a top flight Bulgarian Communist, was accused of intrigue and double dealing to cause trouble with Soviet Russia and foment trouble, also, at home. He was also accused of improper methods of leadership and even plots against the party.

He also was stripped of a third post, presidency of he economic and financial committee.

(The official Yugoslav news agency Tanjug, in a broadcast heard in London said 300 party and Communist party leaders have been arrested in Bulgaria on spy charges, and that Kostov is involved in the case. Tanjug did not name or include house arrest.)

Kostov had served as a deputy premier since March, 1946, when he was promoted from Minister of electrification. He kept the deputy premiership through cabinet reorganizations in November, 1946, and December 1947.

Since Kostov was active in trade negotiations with Russia it is possible that he incurred the Kremlin's wrath by demanding more favorable terms for his country than the Russians were willing to grant.

The stress the Bulgarian Communist central committee laid on charges that Kostov tried to cause a split with Russian comradeship could indicate that he was ousted on orders from the Kremlin.

Allan Turncliffe Pleads Guilty To Five Charges Non-Support; Children Made C.A.S. Wards

Madoc — Pleading guilty to five separate charges of non-support laid under the Children's Protection Act, 29-year-old Allan Turncliffe, Mayo township, was given five years suspended sentence by Magistrate Court in Madoc Monday afternoon.

The five children whom he abandoned in a North Hastings shack were made wards of the Children's Aid Society. If at the end of that time Mrs. Effie Lowe is able to support his wife and children, the C.A.S. will apply for renewal of the wardship.

Turncliffe yesterday afternoon told Magistrate Court Lloyd Hay he was "going to look for work and try to get the children back."

The children, ranging in age from 10 years to just under seven years, were found undernourished in an extremely filthy condition in a small shack 15 miles east of Bancroft, and some 80 miles north of Belleville, by provincial police.

For several weeks they had been looked after by their uncle, 22-year-old William Landry, Bancroft. Landry was in Belleville giving birth to a sixth child in Belleville hospital.

Now the children are in C.A.S. foster homes, while Frederic, age 6, is in Belleville hospital recovering from impetigo.

Two-year-old Betty is in a home at Havelock, north of Stirling. Rose and Shirley, ages five and four years, are at Holloway, and Carol is at Foxboro.

Superintendent of the C.A.S. in Belleville, Mr. William C. Lockhead said the children were living in the shack on March 18 and were a pitiful picture of dejection and destitution."

Seizure of Liquor in Car Related Before Royal Probe

O.P.P. Constable C. E. Siple was recalled to the stand at the opening of the session today of the Royal Commission hearing charges of Conservative graft and corruption Crown Attorney Donnan and seven provincial police officers. He was recalled to testify to conversation with conversations he had had with Cpl. Sam Ervine regarding disposition of liquor seizures in connection with the liquor conviction of Mrs. Malcolm Robb, that Const. Driscoll had denied saying Kenys had been drunk.

Liquor Seizure Case

James David Wilson, local plasterer and bricklayer, told Commissioner Mackay that he had informed R.C.M.P. Const. Driscoll about the liquor which he had seen in a house car parked at the West End Motors Parking lot on Front street.

He said he had gone to police authorities and had asked for Cpl. Ervine, then in charge of the R.C.M.P. This officer had been away so he told his story to another constable in the office.

Kenys testified that Const. Driscoll made out a false report to the department. He had been directed by his inspector to proceed with the charges rather than turn the case over to the city police.

Cross examined by Malcolm Robb, Mr. Wilson admitted he could not identify the officer to whom he had given the information regarding the liquor.

He denied that at the time he had known that the R.C.M.P. paid a fee for a "tip off".

Deputy Chief Testifies

Retired Deputy Chief for the city of Belleville, Mr. Arthur Harman today testified that it was quite common knowledge in Belleville that Robb's car man had "occasionally" been intoxicated during court appearances.

"Yes" was the reply "it has occurred."

He said that he had known of charges that Robb's chauffeur-car man has never known him to withdraw charges once they had been laid.

Mr. Harman gave evidence in connection with a 1944 liquor seizure made by the provincial police and which police have been a city case."

He recalled the day of the seizure and stated he had seen Const. Driscoll of the O.P.P. and R.C.M.P. Const. Kenny Ervine would leave the police office on their way to the Robb home.

Crown Attorney on Stand

Mr. Donnan went back to the stand for the second time during the 22 days of public hearings. He was to be questioned about the allegations that he constantly interferred in Constable Keays' investigations.

He told the coroner's jury returned a verdict recommending manslaughter charges against Holdenbeck who had been driving with emergency headlights.

Mr. Donnan said he wrote the Attorney, General's Department, saying that no jury would convict Holdenbeck and suggesting summary conviction. The department agreed but the case did not come before a magistrate for a year.

The magistrate ruled that the time limit for summary proceedings had expired and the charge was withdrawn.

Driving Charge

An incident concerning a dangerous driving charge against Frank Bertrand, 70, of Peterborough, was referred to.

CABINET PLANS KEEPING STRENGTH OF FORCES SECRET

Information Might Be Valuable to Reds

Ottawa, April 5 (CP)— The Commons was told Monday night that the government plans to keep secret the exact strength of the armed forces because of the value such information might have to the Russians.

George Drew, Progressive Conservative leader, in a spirited attack against the secrecy surrounding the present defence establishment said Parliament should be given all possible information so that it could recommend changes or improvements.

Defence Minister Claxton said that as long as he is Minister the strength of the forces will not be made public.

He made this statement after saying that Russia was the only possible aggressor against this country.

Woman Protests Effort to Block Home Driveway

St. Catharines, April 5. (CP) —A dispute between a woman and the Chief of Queen Elizabeth Way home two miles west of St. Catharines at nine o'clock this morning. Mrs. William Moffatt feared Ontario Department of Highways workmen to back their truck over the lawn if they wanted to unload and in the driveway.

And the workmen, told in their efforts to again block the driveway as Mr. Moffatt can use it for access to his property, drove away empty-handed.

Six times in the past year the drive has been fenced. Six times Mr. Moffatt has found a month ago Highways Department crews acting on orders, dumped seven loads of sand in the drive and put the fence up again. Laboriously, a shovelful at a time, Mr. Moffatt cleared it away, finishing the job on Saturday.

Then the wood there and would-be dumpers arrived. Mrs. Moffatt said, if the driver of the truck should take it to court. If we have to go to jail, we certainly aren't going to block it for us. We should be settled one way or another."

WEATHER SYNOPSIS

Toronto, April 5 (AP)— Synopsis: Somewhat cooler air from the northwest is moving over our region and will cover all of Ontario by Wednesday afternoon. Showers are occurring with the advance of the cooler air, in extreme northern sections the air is cold enough to give snowflurries but extreme temperatures are not expected in southern regions.

Bodies of Victims Among Rubble of 3½-Storey Building

Scenes of Wild Confusion As Many Leap For Safety

By TOM MADDOX and BILL TOBIN

Effingham, Ill., April 5 — (AP) — More than 50 persons, including eight new-born babies, were reported dead today in a fire that raced through St. Anthony's Hospital.

Hospital officials said the death toll may reach 58 or 60. The Red Cross said 60 of 108 patients were rescued. At least 15 bodies were removed — most of them charred almost beyond recognition.

Flames quickly enveloped the building at midnight and destroyed it in about an hour, trapped patients screamed in agony. Some, including expectant mothers, leaped from flame-framed windows.

"It was horrible," said one eyewitness, "all those poor people in there shrieking for help."

The fire was discovered shortly before midnight in a laundry chute. Fanned by a 50-mile-an-hour wind, the 60-year-old 3½-storey brick structure quickly became a great mass of flames.

"It burned so fast, it couldn't be fought," said one rescuer.

Many patients leaped from windows. Some died in their flaming rooms as nuns and townspeople tried to save them.

Uncounted bodies were strewn on upper floors. There were about 30 patients on the third floor, a nurse said, "and I don't believe any of them got out."

Effingham, a community of 8,000 in south central Illinois, 100 miles northeast of St. Louis and 200 miles southeast of Chicago.

Hundreds of the city's residents rushed to the aid of the 100 or more patients in the 125-bed hospital. But they were hampered by falling bricks and rubble, and the danger of falling walls.

Some Lead to Safety

Inside, the Roman Catholic nuns who were on duty braved the flames to lead some still-living to safety. Some nuns died in the attempt, and others perished in their rooms, where they were asleep.

The hospital chaplain, Father Sandon, died in the fire.

Charred body was found in a room next to the hospital chapel.

Crisp remains were found there today. The intense heat of the smouldering ruins and the accumulation of debris slowed removal of the bodies.

Shortly after dawn, firemen used a rope and tackle to haul small white-blanketed bundles down ladders, passing them from hand to hand. Many were carried to the bodies of 11 newborn babes. Parents hoped to identify them from footprints made around their necks.

Karl Alt, 66, who lives across the street from the hospital, in a residential section of Effingham, central Illinois community, and a neighbor, aided in the rescue of between 15 and 20 persons.

"I heard a commotion, heard screams and looked around," Alt said. "Flames were shooting out from the hospital's front entrance. My brother Bill (Alt) and I started running and we rushed to the back of the hospital. There were dead and injured there. They

London Still Finds Itself Literally Sitting on Load of High Explosives

London, April 5. (CP)—Almost four years after the end of the war London still finds itself literally sitting on a load of high explosive—five tons of it.

The T.N.T. is contained in 19 buildings in Hyde Park district in varying sizes still to be dealt with by the Canadian Explosives Limited by the Luftwaffe between 1940 and 1945 they lie buried in the northeast section of the grounds and fields in the greater London area.

Since the start of the war London, No. 2 bomb disposal company of the Royal Engineers have dealt with 1,000 bombs and with more than 1,700 bombs and never lost a man.

Now the job of these men—and the former German prisoners-of-war volunteers who help them—will soon be done. It's expected the remaining 19 bombs will be disposed of in a few months and the squad disbanded.

Largest of London's last surviving bombs is one believed to be a 2,250-pounder under the power station at Ripple Way, Barking, Essex. Another monster lies beneath the back garden of a house in Bermondsey, southeast London.

More than a dozen other known bombs in various parts of greater London have still to be located.

No one ever thinks much about bombs any more in London. But the men who handle them do. They talk about the 500-pounder they removed last year from the quay side at Surrey Commercial docks where it had lain buried since May, 1941.

That was the bomb squad's story. Hundreds of residents from nearby houses and offices, ships were moved from docks and passing trains were stopped. A motorist taken from under a house in Stepney.

The big fellow had demolished the kitchen and buried itself underneath. Thinking it had exploded, the house-owner rebuilt the kitchen. No one was more surprised than he when bomb men told him he had rebuilt over a live 2,000-pounder.

New Schedule For Tax Purposes Being Mailed Out

Ottawa, April 5 — (CP) As part of measures included in the budget, a new set of tax reduction schedules is being mailed to employers throughout Canada, who will put into effect the budget's tax reductions in their pay-cheques.

The new schedules are a ready rule-of-thumb by which an employer can alter his "deductions at source" to fit the new rates of income taxation and the increased exemptions.

The revenue department started mailing the tables last March 31, after Finance Minister Abbott's budget address, in order to have them in the hands of all employers before the end of the month. The decreased deductions will come as soon as employers' accounting departments can get the new schedules into operations.

As before, the tables are designed so a small balance of tax will remain to be paid at the end of the year.

KILLED IN FALL

Toronto, April 5 — (CP)— Roy Murray Cameron, 27-year-old farmer of nearby Woodbridge, was killed Monday in a 30-foot fall from the loft of his barn. He was moving implements from the loft when it is believed he lost his balance.

UNION PROTESTS ACTION OF CONGRESS

Indignant at the treatment of their President C.S. Jackson at the hands of the executive of the Canadian Congress of Labor, the executive of Local 233 of the United Electrical Radio and Machine Workers of this city met last night following telegram to day to Pat Conroy secretary of the Congress in Ottawa.

"This local strenuously protests the arbitrary undemocratic action by which our president of district five was removed from his post as executive of our Congress. The action of the executive council of our Congress in this respect can lead only to the weakening of the trade union movement in Canada and our Congress in particular. The right of free speech and criticism of leaders was certainly in the spirit of the original constitution of the Congress and we demand that this spirit be continued."

County Court Being Conducted In Shire Hall

Austere old Shire Hall, where the reeves and deputy reeves from the various municipalities have three times each year for county council sessions, took on a strange dignity Monday morning.

Believed to be the first time in the history of the county, the January session of county court, is being presently held in the Shire Hall building.

Reason for the change of locale from the county court building where the sessions would ordinarily take place is that the Royal Commission inquiry investigating charges by Constable J. E. Keays against Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan and seven provincial police officers, is currently sitting in the court room.

Gowned in their conventional court robes, Judge J. C. Anderson, Hastings county judge, and the various members of the Bar, Monday morning walked from the court room to Shire Hall to commence the county court sittings.

Police Blotter

Minor hit-and-run drivers were on the prowl last night in the city. No personal injuries were involved but some damage was caused to parked cars.

Alex M. Bass 147 George Street, reported to police that one of the hit-and-run drivers responsible caused severe damage to a fender when an unknown car crashed into it sometime during the night. It was parked near his residence. The fender damage is estimated at "a new one."

Two cars came to grief at the corner of Bleecker and Victoria Avenue yesterday when one driven by Mrs. Mildred Wilson was in collision with that driven by Fred Dafoe, R.R. 8, Belleville. The right front door and fender of the Dafoe car were damaged to the extent of $100.

Case Enlarged

Appearing for sentence today, Gordon Graves had his case remanded to April 12th pending settlement of an offer by other persons to purchase furniture involved in the case at its full value with no loss to the original owners. Graves pleaded guilty to theft in Magistrate's Court last week. Crown Attorney T. W. Wills, K.C., D. O'Flynn is appearing for Graves.

A breach of the Liquor Control Act and a non-support case rounded out the brief docket.

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse B. Carr Happily Married 50 Years

Forty-eight summer suns and winter storms have come and gone since Jesse B. Carr, eighty-one-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Montague Township, Hastings County, took his family to that Northland, there to settle in Canada when he was but five years of age, settling with his parents in Sidney township. Mrs. Carr, the former Jane Mary Sawyer, was born in West Humingdon.

Despite his heavy duty and yearly round-up, on the farm Mr. Carr found plenty of time to engage in municipal affairs, and community life.

A staunch Conservative all his life ("I cast my first vote for Sir John A. Macdonald, and have never missed a vote since") he was president for five years of the Bancroft Progressive Conservative Association. He was a director of the Agricultural Society of his district for 40 years and for 4 decades was reeve of the Montague Township Council. Prior to that he was the township assessor.

He was employed with the Ontario Forestry Department for a period of thirteen years.

"I well remember that," he smiled. "When the government changed the Grit land me out of office in 24 hours."

Member of Church

A devoted member of the United Church, Mr. Carr was superintendent of the local Sunday School for 33 years.

He does not smoke, nor drink, and never has. He is a staunch believer in fresh air living and hard wholesome work. "It never hurt anybody," he claims. He uses eyeglasses for reading and writing only.

Except for a slight stroke in 1940 from which he is entirely recovered, Mr. Carr has never known serious illness.

Mrs. Carr celebration today. Mr. and Mrs. Carr left for Prince Edward County where they will be guests of relatives.

Born in England

Mr. Carr was born in Thwaite, Northumberland, England, and came to Canada when he was but five years of age settling with his parents in Sidney township. Mrs. Carr, the former Jane Mary Sawyer, was born in West Humingdon.

Despite his heavy daily and yearly round-up, on the farm Mr. Carr found plenty of time to engage in municipal affairs, and community life.

Rev. E. Briceland Was Speaker At Forty Hours

Rev. E. Briceland P.P., of Read, delivered an instructive sermon on the "Real Presence," at the Service of the Forty Hours, last evening in St. Michael's.

The celebrant of Solemn Benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament was Rev. H. Farrell P.P., Marmora. The assistants were Bishop Rev. J. G. McCabe, P.P., Stoco Rev. C. F. Hagerty, P.P., Madoc; Monsignor Nicholson, and Father Carley were in the Sanctuary.

St. Michael's male choir under the direction of Mr. Paul Mercier, rendered in an able manner, the Hymns of Benediction. Miss Margaret Mary Dandeno presided at the organ.

This morning at High Mass, celebrated by Monsignor Nicholson a large number received Holy Communion from St. Michael's, under the direction of Rev. Sr. M. Hilda. rendered the Gregorian Chant for Double Feasts, Rev. Sr. M. Olphus was at the organ.

Model Engineers Begin Building Gauge Railway

Interest in the Belleville Society of Model Engineers, established little more than a month ago is gaining each week, according to Dorland Boulton, secretary of the organization.

At the last meeting of the model engineers held at the home of Mr. F. C. Bonisteel, 32 Lewis Street, definite work has been commenced on the construction of an H.O. gauge railway. At their meeting on Friday night of this week the track will be laid and rolling stock will be assembled.

Enthusiasm in the club is at a high pitch and members turn out regularly for the meetings as well as doing considerable work at home on the various models which they are constructing.

In addition to the construction of the H.O. gauge railroad track, members have also commenced construction of a telescope and are doing model boat construction.

Club members are keenly interested in the various models being constructed and a full turnout is seen at each meeting at the Gelsthorpe home. But possibly the hospitality of Mrs. Gelsthorpe has something to do with the attendance figures. Following each meeting of the club Mrs. Gelsthorpe treats the model engineers to refreshments.

Church Greatest Contributing Factor Says Judge

"One of the greatest contributions that the community has toward the building of youth citizenship is the church. Through this one great institution we are able to reach more teen-agers than any other organization in the community," Judge Anderson told the gathering at a series of meetings of the Home and School Club meetings in the Belleville Collegiate last night.

"Another suggestion that the community makes toward the development of citizenship is the Y.M.C.A. It now not only has helped the boys but also has an organization for the girls. Other great steps in the right direction are the Sea Cadets, the Boy Scouts and the Girl Guides, community Concerts that a large number of teen-agers attend, the Women's Canadian Club, the schools, theatres, the Kiwanis Music Centre sports and the courts."

Dealing with what the schools contribution is Dr. Bert Howard, principal of Albert College, said, "the schools have at least six points which the schools follow. The first is a wise and thoughtful care in planning new schools. Then they have children under another country come to a real school and not a immodelled building. There is much more care in the selection of teachers for schools. They are taking more care in selecting teachers who understand boys. There is an increased recognition that citizenship training is not adequately covered. There is also a wise relation of the school with the recognize authority.

"Another contribution that Dr. Howard feels that the schools are making is the Home and School Association."

The panel discussion was presided over by Mrs. William Fiske and Mrs. Hagerman and was followed by a musical interlude. A social half hour was enjoyed by all at which refreshments were served following the meeting.

This was the final in a series of meetings of the Home Branching of the Home and School Association will be the annual meeting.

Negroes Ask Dresden To be Served Meals In Town Restaurants

Dresden, Ont., April 5 — (CP) — Dresden, in this Kent county town soon will be asked to decide whether restaurants should be forced to serve food to Negroes.

A Negro deputation Monday night told council that members could not obtain service in three restaurants in town. Council decided that residents should vote on the question.

William Carter, spokesman for the deputation, said the group had acted on behalf of residents "for years without raising a hand and asked council to pass legislation compelling restaurants to serve Negroes.

Counting Rents, He Closes Door In Bandits' Faces

Toronto, April 5 — (CP) — Apartment superintendent Edgar Sellers locked the night persons to say "no" to Monday night. He slammed the door in the faces of two would-be robbers.

"This is a hold up," one said.

"No it isn't," Sellers yelled, and slammed the door. He then telephoned police but the gunmen escaped.

GIVEN 16 CENTS AN HOUR INCREASE

Galt, April 5 — (CP) — City council last night increased the wages of board of works employees by 10 cents an hour to 85 cents. The highest ever paid. Other civic bodies are expected to adopt the new rate.

OBITUARY

MRS. MARY WONNACOTT

Mrs. Mary Wonnacott, 51½ Bridwell Street, died this morning at the home of Marshall Road, about noon on Monday after an illness of one year's duration.

The late Mrs. Wonnacott, who was in her 80th. year, was born at Carlton Place, Ont., the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Eastern Bell, and the last nine years she was a resident of this city. She had been for 30 years in the College Hill district. She was the oldest member of the Victoria Street United Church and when age and health permitted she took an active part in church work, being a life member of the Women's Missionary Society. In the regard of all who knew her she held a high place.

Surviving her are two sons, Albert Wonnacott and William Wonnacott, both of Belleville; two step-daughters, Mrs. George Andrews, Bonnell Street, and Mrs. Robert Orr, Foster Avenue. She was the last of her family. Her husband, John Wonnacott, died here in 1918.

IN MEMORIAM

GILROY—In loving memory of Benjamin C. Gilroy, who passed away April 8, 1934.
Always remembered by his wife. A8

SHARPE—In loving memory of a dear husband and father Oct. 6 1940 Frederick Sharpe.
The depths of sorrow we cannot tell,
The pain we hide, nobody knows well,
And while he sleeps a peaceful sleep
His memory we always keep.
Never remembered by his wife and family. A8

CURRY—In loving memory of my dear son Arthur Curry, who died away one year ago today, April 8th, 1940.
His sufferings were great and long,
His pain was hard to bear,
The peace of Jesus filled her breast,
And in His arms she sank to rest.
Ever remembered by daughter Doreen and family. A8

CLARE—In loving memory of a dear husband, John Clark, who passed away one year ago today, April 8th, 1940.
Without farewell he fell asleep,
With only his memory we keep.
Ever remembered by wife Winnie. A8

CLARK—In loving memory of a dear husband, John Clark, who passed away one year ago today, April 8th, 1940.
Sleep, dearest heart, sleep on in peace,
Rest, tender, fond and true,

Ever remembered by children, Reta and Douglas and family. A8

CURRY—In loving memory of my dear son, Arthur Curry, who passed away April 8th, 1940.
Sleep, O dear one, and take your rest,
Sweet as the tender fragrance that
When matured flowers breathe out their soul,
Sweet as a song that once controlled
But never more shall be sung again.
Is thy remembrance.
Now the days of sorrow come,
Hath come to them,
Days that we shall never, never,
Never, never, never forget.
From son George and wife. A8

Ford Passenger Cars and Trucks Reduced in Price

Windsor, Ont., April 5 (CP) — Price reductions ranging from $30 to $114 on passenger cars and from $16 to $42 on some truck models were announced Monday night by Ford Motor Company of Canada, Ltd. They will go into effect this morning.

Rhys M. Sale, executive vice president and chief of Canada's is simply passing on to customers the benefits of record-breaking production and sales during the first quarter of 1949," reduced costs made possible by greater manufacturing efficiency, and significantly lower prices of a few materials.

The price reductions apply to all models of Ford, Meteor, Mercury and Monarch passenger cars and to the lighter weight commercial vehicles excepting the Ford panel delivery truck. Ford tractor prices are unchanged.

The retail price of a Monarch 6-passenger coupe at the factory will drop from $2,595 to $2,481, while a Mercury town sedan will be reduced from $2,578 to $2,457. The price of a Meteor custom four-door will drop from $2,194 to $2,080, and of a Ford deluxe business coupe from $1,823 to $1,709. Other prices include excise and sales taxes but not retail freight and authorized delivery charges, license or local or provincial taxes.

Signers of Pact Meet Gromyko Face-to-Face

New York, April 5 (CP) — Signatories of the Atlantic pact met face-to-face today for Russia's Andrei A. Gromyko, representative of the Communist empire impelling their alliance.

Western powers hold that it is purely defensive in character. They scent their top policy-makers to the assembly session to indicate their solid support of the world peace agency.

Foreign Secretary Bevin of Britain changed his mind Monday and decided against flying to the opening of the Assembly along with Canada's Secretary Lester of the United States, Foreign Minister Schuman of France and L. B. Pearson, Canada's External Affairs Minister.

The U.N. veteran, who returned from Moscow last Wednesday, could request that the pact be withdrawn from the agenda as an addition to the agenda.

Many observers expected it was more likely he would bring the question in "through the back door"—during discussion of one of the 24 items already on the agenda. Items of the wide scope include debates on Franco Spain and disposal of the Italian colonies.

The east-west clash may first break out during the committee's discussion on what to do with requests for assembly consideration of the Communist accusations of Joseph Cardinal Mindszenty and 15 Protestant church leaders of Bulgaria.

The steering committee is expected to pass this problem to the political committee—over Russian protests—along with the question of the Netherlands-Indonesian conflict.

Showdown Battle Between Unions Looms at Halifax

Halifax, April (CP)— A showdown battle between two rival seamen's unions loomed today in this port, one of several in the grip of a Canadian Seamen's Union (T.L.C.) deep sea shipping strike.

Heading into its sixth day, the walkout was ordered when Canadian flag-owners signed working agreements with the 90,000-member International Seamen's Union (A.F.L.).

Monday night an S.I.U. spokesman said in Montreal that "a large contingent" of seamen left here for east coast ports to take over ships covered in their contracts with the Shipping Federation of Canada.

Atlantic organizer H. C. (Bert) Meade of the C.S.U. would not comment whether his union would oppose actively any S.I.U. attempts of the strikebound ships.

Monday night a spokesman for Local 6, Canadian Fish Handlers Union (T.L.C.) said his union would support the C.S.U. "in any way possible."

Today, J.K. Bell, secretary - treasurer of the Maritime Marine Workers' Federation - (C.C.L.) claimed about 4,000 members in the Maritimes said the executive "supports the C.S.U. strike."

Millard Critical Of Charities Bill, Debate Continues

The bill would require charitable foundations such as the Atkinson foundation, owners of the Toronto Star and the Star Weekly, to disclose 90 per cent of their interest in any business.

Mr. Millard, national director of the Canadian Congress of Labor, said he spoke for organized labor. He had been classified "a very large number of recognized and responsible trade unionists today," he said.

"Labor is particularly sensitive, even to the point of apprehension about the introduction of a bill such as this bill."

Organized labor knew from its own experience and history where there is cutting of the freedom of the press, the freedom of press is only the mouthpiece of the government, and democratic rights begin to disappear.

"Wherever the press has come under the control of a ruling party then fascism made its appearance and the workers were fed first by organized labor."

The bill before members of the House are being intimidated into supporting this bill against their judgment by the statement: "If you don't support it they won't have the Toronto Star, the Globe and Mail, the Toronto Telegram and the party machine in the next election."

Questioned Statement

Mr. Millard said he questioned the statement of Premier Drew in the surer Frost that in exempting the foundation the people of Ontario are in effect saving $2,000,000 a gift of several million dollars.

There would be a greater margin of profit to the people if they were left in trust with the foundation to be used by charities than if the money were paid in death duties or invested in bonds.

The bill would require the operation of the foundation by "10 persons of integrity, ability and public spirit."

Seized on Charges Of Fleeing With Funds of Bank

Daytona Beach, Fla., April 5 — (AP) — A couple of newly - published Canadians, a bank accountant, garage owner and policeman were brought in for arraignment Monday night of Richard H. Crowe on charges of disappearing with $60,000 in Bowery York International City Bank funds.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation had been trailing Crowe since shortly after he dropped out sight of Miami Beach, and shortly thereafter a trail of letters and money mailed back home to friends he owned.

Police Captain Virgil Stuart of St. Augustine said descriptions given him indicated Crowe had shaved some of his hair from the front of his head to make him pearly bald, and has re-apparently had attempted to bleach his hair.

He said Crowe always carried a suitcase with him, regardless of where he went.

The F. B. I. had phoned his call March 28 when the bank reported at the Beach Hotel at St. Augustine as "Robert Franklin," of New York and Miami Beach, was on March 31 that the search for Crowe had been ended.

Crowe checked out of the Beach Hotel April 2, paid his room rent through April 5, and said he would be back. An attendant became suspicious when he saw Crowe's suitcase with him, regardless of where he went.

The F. B. I. had phoned his call March 28 when the bank reported at the Beach Hotel at St. Augustine as "Robert Franklin," of New York and Miami Beach, was on March 31 that the search for Crowe had been ended.

Crowe checked out of the Beach Hotel April 2, paid his room rent through April 5, and said he would be back. An attendant became suspicious when he saw Crowe's suitcase with him, regardless of where he went.

Meanwhile, the F. B. I. was watching the hotel.

Crowe made arrangements March 31 to store a Pontiac which he had purchased in Miami, Stuart said.

He took the machine to the garage of Frank Pact in St. Augustine and told him he wanted to store it for six months.

Attendant Calls Police

"He told me that one belonged to a friend of his at Miami. He said Roberts was an oil company representative and would be gone for six months. This didn't sound just right to me," Pact said.

So Pact called Police Captain Stuart who went to the garage and checked the license number and motor number of the car. It was the same as that for which he said Crowe had purchased in Jacksonville.

Stuart told the F.B.I. what he had learned.

Crowe purchased a light gray coupe Chrysler and left it with the Main Motors of St. Augustine. He bought it under the name of Bill Neil and gave a Miami address and paid cash.

Crowe then dropped from sight, but the F.B.I. kept tabs on him, getting narrower and more and more officials were on the watch for him.

Rented Apartment

He drove to Daytona Beach where Jack Dow Hoover, F.B.I. agent, said he rented an apartment Saturday under the name of Richard Crowe, Toronto, N.J., and proceeded to spend his time in bars and restaurants on the beach.

However, he parked his Chrysler on a downtown parking lot and locked it up.

Police became suspicious of that car called St. Augustine officials. The F.B.I. took up a search for Crowe's movements.

On Monday night, several F.B.I. agents recognized him and followed him into a bank. They were joined there by a member of the Daytona Beach police department, Hoover said.

Hoover said Crowe readily admitted he was the man they were taking a large sum of money from the bank.

The F.B.I. official said they recovered $50,000 and even a suitcase in Crowe's possession.

Crown to Place New Evidence Against Carr

Ottawa, April 5 (CP)—The Crown will place new evidence against Sam Carr, it was learned today, as he seeks to have set aside a charge of conspiring with Russian-born Fred Rose to utter forged passport. But there was no immediate indication that the important the new evidence will be.

There are 13 prosecution witnesses, with Fred Gruenwoldt, super embassy cipher clerk slated to start off the case when the 1945 case.

The morning sitting heard no evidence but was taken up with the judge and a jury. Carr is expected to last several days.

The Judge refused objections by defence counsel J. L. Cohen Fredericwick who asked him to quash Carr's indictment on the grounds that it was improperly drawn.

Mr. Sedgwick also protested, without success, that the fact that Carr had not been given an opportunity to elect non-jury trial.

Carr, former organizing secretary of the Labor Progressive party, was committed for trial March 6 after being deported from the United States where he had been since 1946.

He was named by the Royal Commission on espionage as "one of the two main Canadian cogs" in a Russian espionage network.

The court-room was crowded with potential jurymen and there were indications most of the morning sitting would be taken up with the picking of the 12 men who will try Carr.

SEIZURE

The charge had been laid during an accident but as result of the investigation it was learned the accused the charge had been withdrawn following several statements.

"If that constitutes maladministration of justice I cannot accept the full responsibility," stated Mr. Bonnar.

The death of John D. Stewart, Toronto flier, who was killed in June, 1947, while making pass in Thurlow township, was touched off the investigation.

He stated he had not considered an inquest into Stewart's death necessary as the Department of Transport was investigating. Evidence at the inquest into Attorney General's Department was that Keays had not conferred with.

The inquest was held Dec. 3, 1947, and the jury returned a verdict of accidental death and a recommendation that changes in regulations governing crop-dusting be made.

Blood Sample

Mr. Donnan asserted Const. Keays was either "mistaken or misled" when he stated that the blood sample taken from Allan Mitchell had not been produced in court. Mitchell was charged with drunk driving, dangerous driving and careless driving.

He stated that both the blood sample and urinalysis had been produced in court. To substantiate this Mr. Donnan referred to the exhibit numbers of the evidence at the Mitchell trial.

Denial Given

The Crown Attorney denied that he had lectured Keays out of the court room during the trial of Fred Martin of Rawdon township, who was charged with attempted murder and arson.

He also stated Keays had been incorrect when he said Mr. Donnan had Martin placed under observation at a mental hospital when he had already been stated by a psychiatrist to be fit to stand trial.

"That is entirely inaccurate", stated Mr. Donnan. "I have a letter from Dr. Billings stating that Martin should be examined mentally investigated and that Dr. Billings fail justified in admitting Martin to hospital.

Martin was still in custody in an institution at Penetanguishene, Mr. Donnan stated.

Denies Interference

Mr. Donnan also denied interference in the Jean Badgley case, stating a coroner's jury had brought in a verdict of suicide after numerous eye witnesses had been called.

Referring to the Ralph Turner case, Mr. Donnan assured Commissioner Mackay that he had prosecuted the various cases and not Assistant Crown Attorney G. Robertson as Keays had alleged.

"The record will show", observed Mr. Justice Mackay.

With the exception of a few words and words which are expected to be cleaned up today, all of the evidence has been taken before the Commission inquiry now sitting in Belleville before Mr. Justice Keller Mackay. It is now completed.

Monday the last witnesses in the LeRoy Woods accident case were heard while also evidence in allegations against Const. J. B. Driscoll was completed. There remain but the allegations in connection with the Carefoot case.

The accusations mentioned above are part of allegations of fraud, perjury, maladministration of justice and interference, levelled by Constable J. E. Keays against seven provincial police officers and Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan of Belleville.

In the Woods case Cpl. Sam Irvine is charged with perjury and falsification of his diary in an effort to exonerate Woods who was charged with drunk and dangerous driving. Const. G. R. Purdy was charged with making out false report in connection with the same case.

Other offences charged by Keays include, Police Commissioner W. H. Ponsford, Inspector W. Cuss of Perth and Inspector W. A. Page of Belleville.

LeRoy Woods on Stand

Called to the stand to tell what he knew of the accident which was the base of one phase of Keays' allegations, LeRoy Woods, Sidney township taxi cab collector, told the Commissioner that Const. Purdy had visited his home some days after the accident to investigate. Also he had seen the officer later the same day at the scene of the accident.

He said the officer informed him he was not being held responsible for the accident as the guard rail posts as red paint had been smeared over the posts. Woods' car had been open.

He said that Const. Keays had also contacted him about the accident "two weeks to a month later." He denied the tyres of his car had been damaged in the accident.

Under cross-examination by Keays the witness stated he had not told Const. Purdy his car had gone into the east ditch. He said the car had gone into the west ditch. He had not told police that his car had gone into neither ditch.

Mrs. LeRoy Woods was called and corroborated her husband's evidence.

With the conclusion of the Woods' case the Gerald Holden-beck case was brought up. Keys in his evidence in chief stated that Const. Driscoll had accused him of being drunk while he was investigating the accident.

Const. Driscoll Denies Making Statement

The constable emphatically denied he had ever stated Keays was drunk when he investigated the accident and he denied that he had told Cpl. Ervine that "Keays was so drunk that he almost ran over me."

"That is absolutely untrue," stated the constable.

Constable Driscoll was also questioned about the alleged liquor seizure which Keays had claimed resulted in the city of Belleville losing a $500 fine when Const. Driscoll had allegedly made out a false report.

The witness told of the liquor seizure in Nov. 1944, the liquor having been seized from a car bearing Quebec markers which had been parked.

He said the incident had taken place during the time of a strike of rationing in Ontario. One hundred and fifty-five bottles of liquor were taken from a dilapidated roadster in charge of two flash-by-dressed men.

Const. Driscoll said that as the seizure had been made inside the city he had reported the matter to Inspector Hayes of the city police. However, the late Inspector Hayes, before former resigned at Belleville, directed that the O.P.P. prosecute the case.

He denied he had caused R.C.M.P. Constable Maurice Kennedy make out a false report in connection with the matter.

Denies Knowledge of "Tip Off"

He also denied any knowledge of a "tip off" which Keays had claimed had been given to the R.C.M.P. Keays had claimed an anonymous phone call to the R.C.M.P. that the liquor was passing through Const. Driscoll's district. He had indicated the liquor had been located in a routine check for a hit and run driver.

Malcolm Robb asked the witness if he remembered ever telling Mr. Robb about Keays being drunk in connection with the Holdenbeck accident.

"I didn't think Mr. Robb was interested," the witness replied. Const. Driscoll. "If he was he could have asked me."

"What would have been inspector Storey's directions if he had known of an informer in the liquor seizure?" asked Keays.

Pressed for an answer, the constable replied his late Inspector would have turned the matter over to the proper authorities.

City Police Inspector Testifies

Inspector J. C. Hayes, Belleville city police, was called to give a statement which he had taken from one James Wilson. It was Mr. Wilson who was claimed by Keays to have been the informer in connection with the liquor seizure.

"I understand," interrupted Mr. Hope, "that this man Wilson is available. I think it would be advisable, I think he should be called and no statement taken from the witness."

"Yes" agreed the commissioner. "We cannot take Hilson's statement from this witness if Wilson is available. That is one of the rules of this inquiry."

Inspector Hayes told of being called to the O.P.P. office and of seeing the two bottles of liquor which had been seized.

"Constable Driscoll told me that the case would be turned over to the police court," he said. Inspector Storey, stated, Inspector Storey."

He said the next day he had been informed that Inspector Storey the charges would be preferred by the O.P.P.

The witness said he had learned later by the "grapevine" that R.C.M.P. officers had received a tip about the liquor from one James David to whom he had received a statement to this effect from Mr. Wilson.

Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan was the next witness to be called but as his evidence consisted mainly of several matters, Commissioner Mackay decided to call him until Tuesday morning.

FORD of CANADA REDUCES PRICES on CARS and TRUCKS

$30. to $114. on Ford, Meteor, Mercury and Monarch passenger cars; $16. to $42. on most light-duty Ford and Mercury trucks.

Ford of Canada, in announcing these immediate price reductions, passes on to its customers the benefits of record-breaking production and sales during the first three months of 1949, lowered costs made possible by manufacturing economics, and slightly lower prices of some basic materials used in the manufacture of cars and trucks.

HISTORIC DOCUMENT SIGNED.

One of the greatest alliances in history has become a fact with the signing by representatives of 12 non-Communistic nations of the North Atlantic Security Treaty. With it the date April 4th will always be remembered as the time when no fewer than a third of a billion people of the world's population became part of this safeguard for democracy. By those who like history the treaty is seen as one of the mightiest oragnisations ever formed. In the words of President Truman of the United States the pact is "a shield against aggression and the fear of aggression." He added that the nations had determined that "the sickening blow of unprovoked aggression shall not fall upon the world again."

The world is assured by the document that in this treaty there is entire lack of any threat to other nations. Safeguarding democracy is the only object of this organization.

As defined by State Secretary Acheson of the U. S. the treaty is "a guide and refuge and strength to those who seek peace but to those who set their feet on the path of aggression, it is a powerful warning."

The democratic world knows and every other nation should know that every nation in the Atlantic Pact desires to preserve peace and liberty.

Twelve nations have performed in this treaty something from which will flow increasing good for all people, said Acheson seeing in it "new inspiration for the future."

In the ceremony of signing the representatives of the twelve nations spoke briefly with a range of comment which shows the importance to be placed upon the document.

This historic ceremony was a memorable one as representatives of the signatory states would convince the world of the earnestness of these nations signing the treaty that their aim is peace for all, as one of the signers declared "Its aim is peace — peace not after a new war, but peace now and from now on."

And the Italian Foreign Minister Carlo Sforza said "Signing a pact is not enough . . . Life will have to circulate through it as a result of a constant free collaboration in the service of peace between all its members present and future."

Sforza's words were rich in meaning, the treaty should not be taken as a "protective umbrella" but as a basis for "continuous creations of mutual purpose among nations and a recognition of the fact that no nation anywhere can feel secure today "if all its neighbors are not as safely marching toward the same goals of prosperity and security."

The words of the Danish foreign minister, Rasmussen, bear the message of democracy. He said that the very nature of the institutions of the western nations forming this defensive compact makes impossible for them "a calculated plan of aggression." The Portuguese foreign minister called the document "a precious instrument for peace."

The treaty brings together in peace and in the determination to safeguard liberty twelve nations which have had experience in the past to guide them along that path that must be taken for the maintenance of freedom.

QUESTION FOR WEATHERMAN

Weather conditions not on a local scale, which could be important enough but on a scale including not one but a good many nations, have been more in the mind of the public since it has been reported that the regular weather program of northern Europe appears to be changing. Norway has had the mildest winter in more than one hundred years. Spitzbergen Island, which used to be icebound all but one hundred days in the year forty years ago, is now free of ice boundaries two hundred days in the year. The late unlamented winter in Canada has generally been extremely mild, sero weather having been almost absent. There have been winters of extreme severity in this country, one in the mid thirties, and deep snow used to be a characteristic of the season.

The same apparent trend toward moderation of climatic conditions is now noticed in the Hudson Bay territory.

Of course once upon a time the northern country was warmer than it later became, even to the extent of being balmy and almost tropical. But that was geological ages ago. Now there has been enough evidence of unusually mild winters in the Hudson Bay area to cause scientists to ponder over the evidence and try and find a conclusion as to whether there is a trend towards a warmer condition.

ENCOURAGEMENT

How far one cheering word will go,	And be remembered down the years.
Is never given us to know.
The hammer blows on steel or wood	A youth with dreams of enterprise,
May not result in lasting good.	With courage to his task may rise.
But who, at proper time, is heard	He'll tell, in his declining days,
To utter just one heartening word	"Because I heard a word of praise
May change the life of him who hears	I am what I have grown to be,
	Knowing one man had faith in me."

Mr. Clare Stewart of Toronto is spending the Easter vacation with friends here.

Mr. and Mrs. Angus Mowat returned yesterday from Toronto where Mr. Mowat attended the annual meeting of the Ontario Library Association.

Mr. Verne Weir, Frank St., is attending the annual meeting of the O. B. A. A. in London, Ontario.

Mrs. E. Cousins of Toronto is spending a few days at the home of Mr. William Mossman, Strathcona.

Mr. Douglas Bowe of the Smith Hardware Company, has returned home from Toronto where he attended the Hardware Dealers' Convention.

Mr. C. J. Wills is spending a few days in Toronto.

The Royal Templars of Belleville Council No. 297 entertained a number of friends from Trenton and Bayside Council last evening. A short and pleasant programme was given by members of the Trenton Council. Short addresses were made by J. O. Herity, Capt. Ruston of Belleville, S. Pine, Bayside; George Henley, Trenton and 2 newly elected members, E. Prinzen and W. Dale.

Mrs. John McKenna of this city and her daughter, Mrs. R. McCurdy of Conseco, left yesterday to visit friends in Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. Blake Way of Harbrville spent the weekend with relatives in Peterboro.

The practice of tying horses to trees within the city limits is contrary to bylaw and persons doing so will be liable punishment. Yesterday a horse was tied to a young tree on Bridge Street east and the result was that the horse badly barked the tree. As the offender is known he will be dealt with by the authorities.

It takes a long time for a letter to reach the Yukon. As an illustration of this fact, Lieut. Col. W. F. Fonton has received a note from Lieut. Herbert Holme, formerly of this city, now of Dawson City informing him that a letter mailed in Belleville on Oct. 19th., 1898, only reached Dawson City on March 7th., 1899.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Tousaw spent several days recently with friends in Frankford.

THE PACKSACK

OF GREGORY CLARK

In a bus, it is sometimes difficult to avoid or evade conversation with the passenger sitting next to you. Usually if the passenger is a moralist and a blatherskite.

We were sitting at the front of the bus, where the seats run sideways. Nothing to do but the weather, my right-hand fellow passenger and myself. On a variety of subjects, when his glance happened to fall on it, the weather. Then a workman in rough clothes, with his lunch pail between his knees.

"Ah," muttered my neighbor, leaning forward, "there's the man the happy type. Not a care in the world. Nothing to worry me about. Just take your lunch box and go to your job. Do it. Then come home. Tired, perhaps? But not a care in the world . . ."

The man with the lunch pail was eyeing us with cold, level stare.

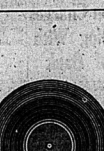
"He, he, he!" chuckled my right-hand neighbor. "As the old saying is: work eight hours a day; don't worry; then some day you may rise to be boss, and work eighteen hours a day and worry all the time."

He rose to his feet, pulled the buzzer cord, and, bowing me genially good-bye, as one having conferred a favor. My eyes were blissfully upon the man across the aisle. He was grinning. He lifted his lunch pail and moved across to sit beside me.

"I could see you squirming," he said. "I'm used to them characters. Always worrying the old line about just carrying a lunch pail, without a worry coming your way . . . I thought so. Well, mister, we've all got our worries. There is a lot in the soul that hasn't got all the worries he can carry, from the self-pitying big boss down to the least guy with a shovel, who has a listless pity himself. Here I am tonight, on my way home, to find out if my wife is dead or not. I've had for thirty-two years is alive or dead . . ."

Then he stood up, pulled the buzzer cord, got off at the next and I called: and stumbled out the bus door.

Strength for the Day



DR. EARL L. DOUGLASS

WHAT BRINGS SUCCESS?

Many thousands of people in Europe and America were approached some months ago and asked this question? "Which is the larger factor in success — environment or the innate resourcefulness of the individual?" In Europe 60% voted for environment; in the United States 85% declared that success is due to a man's inner qualities and resourcefulness.

The Americas, of course, have the environment which would be expected to produce success if success is possible. We know that with all our good environment many people fail, and even the most successful fail a certain percentage of the time. So we are very sure that the only thing which really produces success is the stuff a man has locked in his heart. On the other hand, many of the Europeans live in the atmosphere of despair and in an environment symbolized by rubble. They are quite sure that if they could have the right kind of environment, success would automatically be produced.

Environment is a very important factor in life, but there are other factors even more important. These are character, purpose, resourcefulness, energy, religious faith, and a willingness to sacrifice. Given these, a man has the tools out of which he can fashion success. Without them, he can expect none.

Mackenzie's Column: U.N. Assembly Not Weakened By Pact Signing

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press News Analyst)

Monday the Foreign Ministers of 12 western powers met in Washington and signed the Atlantic Pact — the most powerful defensive alliance of history.

Today the United Nations reassembles in New York with mixed emotions, for the Atlantic Pact is the direct outgrowth of U. N. inability to fulfill the mission for which it was created — namely, to insure international peace. The Alliance, acting within the framework of the peace organization, proposed taking over defence of its signatories.

This is no reproach on the UN. It is the result of conditions over which the U. N. has no control, that is, the division of a great portion of the globe into hostile ideological groups which are absolutely opposed to each other.

Because the security council of the U. N. has been hamstrung by the division, the western powers have felt impelled to take over the job themselves.

New Weekend

However, while the western powers have thus felt compelled to supplement the U. N., there is no reason for the peace organization to feel that its standing has been weakened by the move. On the contrary the alliance is calculated to strengthen its hand. And in its own line of influence, the Atlantic Alliance now can act on behalf of peace - loving countries against aggression.

So it would seem to be significant that we find the United States Secretary of State, Dean Acheson, British Foreign Secretary, Ernest Bevin, journeying from Washington to New York for the opening of the U. N. session. I think we are entitled to take this as emphasizing the determination of the members of the new alliance to work with the peace organization.

The two-fisted Bevin made this trip despite the fact that we had landed in New York the other day the Russian Foreign Minister, Vishinsky, who got a rousing welcome and tomatoes at him. The group didn't approve of some of his politics.

Followed Marshall Plan

Bevin is given credit for major assistance in developing the Atlantic Alliance. Some say that it is the sequel of a chain of events which started with the inception of the Marshall plan. They will tell you in London that Bevin was feeling fairly low before State Secretary Marshall made his speech at Harvard June 5, 1947, proposing the European rehabilitation plan. Bevin was listening to his radio and heard Marshall's speech.

Bevin is said to have exclaimed: "This is it." The next morning he flew to Paris and conferred with Foreign Minister Bidault. The two having reached agreement, Bevin reported to Marshall in Washington and the "Marshall plan" was put in the works.

Bevin followed this up by initiating the e - ment of the "entente cordiale" between Britain and France. He also took the lead in putting through the Brussels Pact, establishing the western union among Britain, France, Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg. There were other similar developments in quick succession, and these made the Atlantic Pact possible.

200 Siamese Girls Computing Census Of The Country

By MILTON MARMOR

Bangkok, April 5 — (AP) — Two hundred young Siamese beauties are using 80- of the world's most modern calculating machines to compile the official population census of Siam.

At periodic intervals, when the electric gang punchers, the big tabulating machines and the operators have punched out the totals for any given problem, two young ladies take the figures and double check them — on an ancient adding machine.

That isn't unusual — or surprising — in Siam.

Let H. W. Franke of the International Business Machines Corporation of New York, the American engineer in charge of the official census calculating bureau tell it.

First, the United Nations had suggested that the census be taken for a year ending in a zero. The government decided on the year 2490 (Buddhist era) which happened to be 1947.

Then unofficial results were compiled and brought to the flower-filled gardens of the royal palace of the ladies of the court in other days.

Today the big palace is filled with young ladies all busily engaged in transferring figures from the original census sheets to the punching machines.

The difficulty is the usual one in the tropics — the general feeling that the work can be done as well tomorrow as today. The young ladies also like to discuss social problems among themselves and it became necessary to set up a bonus system to get the figures in.

The power system is erratic and unpredictable and during the rainy season it is gloomy inside the palace. Franke installed a new series of electric bulbs, but they are disappearing one by one. Over in the centre of the floor are piles of boxes. There don't seem to be any filing cabinets. Instead clamber over the boxes of cards, which often spill on the floor. Then a patient clerk patiently puts them back in the box.

Nobody worries too much about the task before them.

The unofficial figures showed about 17,400,000 people in Siam. They are expected to be found to be just about the same. Otherwise, somebody would lose face.

Minimum Prices On Peas, Tomatoes Being Reduced

Toronto, April 5 — (CP) — Reductions in minimum prices for tomato and pea crops grown for processing in Ontario have been announced by the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board. It was announced Monday.

Minimum prices for tomatoes are reduced to $22.50 a ton ungraded, $27.50 a ton for first grade and $17.50 a ton for second grade. Previously minimum prices on peas will be $60 a ton ungraded, coupled with a cost of peas used to growers of $2.50 a bushel. The prices, compared with those in 1948, are $2.50 a ton lower on tomatoes and $5 a ton lower on peas.

Prices on peas and tomatoes were established by arbitration between growers' committees and canners and processors broke down.

Ottawa, April 2 (CP)—Senators and commoners as a rule treat each other with a good deal of official reserve, but there was real warmth in the welcome extended Transport Minister Chevrier this week when he trod the sex red red carpet.

Mr. Chevrier entered the upper chamber to introduce a bill providing for international and interprovincial gas and oil pipe lines and to explain to the Senators what it was all about.

The legislation will permit incorporation of a new company or companies to spend as much as $250,000,000 to pipe oil from the rich west of Alberta.

The Transport Minister was given a round of hand-clapping as Senator Wishart Robertson, government leader, escorted him to a front-row desk. Senators listened with more-than-usual alertness as he talked for a half-hour. They gave him another big hand as he left.

In introducing a government bill before the Senate instead of the Commons, Mr. Chevrier was following a precedent he established last year when he launched the Canadian Broadcasting Act. That was the first time in history a Canadian cabinet minister entered the Senate personally to initiate a government measure.

Ottawa Visit

When the Throne Speech is read each year or when royal assent is given bills, the commoners are "summoned" to the Senate in high-handed fashion. Not allowed on the floor of the Senate proper, they must crowd about the brass rail just inside the doorway.

Members of one body, referring to the other House in debate, may go so far as to call it "the other place." More properly, it is referred to as "an other place."

Personal Health Talks

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

(Signed letters pertaining to personal health and hygiene, not to disease diagnoses or treatment, will be answered by Dr. Brady if a stamped self-addressed envelope is enclosed. Letter should be brief and written in ink. Owing to the large number of letters received only a few can be answered here. No reply can be made to queries not conforming to instructions. "DIETING" AND MALNUTRITION

A frequent query in the mail is whether this or that food or drink is fattening. The answer is yes and no.

If it is chest-food, yes, it is fattening.

If it is natural food, no it is not fattening.

In every mailbag there is at least one letter from a girl or woman who has gotten grouchy over many pounds she has reduced by dieting—but she doesn't write merely to tell me that. What she wants now is my diagnosis, opinion or advice (though not carefully avoids using those words) about a set of ailments symptoms she has recently acquired. Of course she knows she is tired out and ought to rest more, not just relax, but maybe she needs a tonic or a mild sedative for her worn nerves.

The poor girl has lost twenty pounds or more in less than three months. That is pretty severe. She gives her height and present weight—which is considerably below standard. All of these physical complaints may well be the manifestations of nutrition deficiency disease—malnutrition.

Probably the girl or woman has been on a "reducing" regimen. In addition when she began "dieting." Then her daily nutrition was still further impaired by the diet she followed for three months. You see, her original or ordinary diet, like that of most of us, gave her barely enough vitamins and minerals to prevent manifestations of

Mennonites' Gifts Are so Generous No More Needed

Kitchener, Apr. 5 (CP)—Mennonites throughout the Dominion have contributed so generously to the recent Farm equipment drive that they have been asked to stop sending donations.

A check-up at the local warehouse of the Canadian headquarters revealed that it is filled with plows, cultivators, wagons and other implements which had been sought to assist the 5,400 European Mennonites who settled in Paraguay.

Shipments are expected to be made to the "pioneer" settlers in Paraguay before the end of the month.

In addition three carloads of food, clothing and flour were sent to Europe last month. The shipments totalled 80 tons and was valued at $65,000.

Occupation? Fluonomist!

Halifax (CP)—When Alderman John Walker took the stand recently at Halifax days with their police inquiry into this city's snowplower disturbance, he was asked his occupation by investigation counsel H. P. Mooney.

"Fluonomist," replied Ald. Walker.

The lawyer inquired if Ald. Walker had coined the word.

"No, sir. It's my business, that's all. It's a dirty business, but the money is clean."

A fluonomist is a chimney-sweep, Ald. Walker said he discovered the word in an Irish newspaper and adopted it.

Brighteners

Los Angeles (AP)— A rooster which lost its head two days ago is still alive today.

A veterinarian says it should live as long as its windpipe and throat remain open.

Dr. Allan Ross examined the phenomenon Sunday and found a small part of the rooster's brain which controls respiration and circulation, still was left in the severed neck. Its movements, he explained are controlled by its spinal cord.

The bird was purchased, with head missing, Saturday by Mrs. Martha Green. She had a Sunday chicken dinner on her mind.

She placed it in the sink to pluck feathers when the bird stood stood and began walking around. It made a strange noise. It wasn't a crow or a normal sound a chicken would make with its head off.

Mrs. Green is feeding her new pound pet with milk and egg yolk by inserting an eye-dropper in its throat.

Then the Emperor climbed into his maroon Mercedes Benz limousine and motored to the Imperial Villa at Numazu for a rest.

So recorded patrolman George Fusaro, Jimmy ambled up to a midnight bicycle shop Sunday toted a brick through the window and started in after a shiny new red one.

"I just wanted the red bike so bad," Jimmy told Fusaro as he was being led away, "I can ride it —I know I can. It wasn't too big for me."

Fusaro said the boy's parents will have to pay for the damage to the window, making it even dearer for them to get the money to buy Jimmy what he wanted most.

Windsor Police Find Propaganda Attacking Treaty

Windsor, April 5 (CP)—As 12 nations today signed the North Atlantic pact, police here unearthed distribution of propaganda attacking the principle of the pact.

Constable Willard MacDonald seized more than 200 of the leaflets and scattered three on a street distribution of the sheets on city streets. Police are making further investigation of the three men.

The leaflets, described as "communist propaganda, say it is "a fight for life here in Canada" if the North Atlantic pact is signed.

Rather than a peace proposition, the pact is described as a step towards war.

Ottawa, Ont. McNaughton's recent visit, 25 leaflets were found on the steps of Patterson Collegiate a short time before the general spoke in favor of the North Atantic pact.

Printer is Charged With Distributing Anti-Pact Pamphlets

Montreal, April 5 — (CP) — Nathan Bilder, 21-year-old printer, today was charged with illegally distributing pamphlets after his arrest for handing out circulars critical of the North Atlantic Security Pact.

WEDDINGS

MOWBRAY—LASHER

White wedding bells, pink and white streamers and Spring flowers decked the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lasher, of Centreville, Ontario, on the occasion of the marriage of their daughter, Eliza Bernice Elizabeth, on Saturday morning, April 2, at 10 a.m., to William MacDonald Mowbray, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Mowbray of Toronto, Ont. The Rev. W. R. Merrick, of Selby, officiated, assisted by Mr. Carson W. Duguette, of Bolsover.

Mrs. C. W. Duquette played the wedding music and during the signing of the register, Miss Elsie Kellar, of Deseronto, sang "O Perfect Love".

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was charming in white crepe of slipper satin of floor-length with nylon yoke outlined in tiny seed pearls and white sequins and butterfly busle back and floor length veil of tulle illusion held in place by a sweetheart headdress of lily-of-the-valley. She carried an arm bouquet of Better Time red roses and fern.

Mrs. Dalncourt Frotis, of Deseronto, was matron of honor, wearing a floor-length gown of pale blue sheer with shoulder length veil caught with a halo of flowers and carried an arm bouquet of pink roses.

Little Linda Kimmett of Deseronto, was flower girl, wearing an off-the-shoulder, floor length dress of pink taffeta, shoulder veil, and halo of flowers. She carried a nosegay of baby roses and sweetpeas.

Mr. Dalncourt Frotis, of Deseronto, was groomsman.

The reception and wedding dinner was held at the home of the bride's parents, where the bride's mother, in a green and brown crepe trimmed with gold sequins and wearing a corsage of white carnations, was assisted in receiving the guests by the bridegroom's mother, who wore a gown of blue and white crepe with corsage of white carnations.

For travelling to Toronto and points west, the bride chose a brown gabardine suit with green and white accessories, green top coat, and corsage of red roses.

Upon their return, the happy young couple will reside in Deseronto.

DECIDE TO MAKE TRADE

Toronto, April 3 — (CP) — Should Toronto's 200 swap two surplus elk for a wallaroo?

City council debated the point Monday night and decided to make the trade.

Rev. D. E. Raymer Shows Films Of Life at T.B.C.

An informative as well as an entertaining evening's programme was recently spent at the Christian and Missionary Alliance Church, corner of Coleman and Moira Streets, when the Rev. D. E. Raymer, missionary from the Toronto Bible College, in company with the Young People's Society of the church and friends of the assembly in attendance, were privileged to hear the Reverend D. E. Raymer, secretary of the Toronto Bible College, and the college male quartet, who accompanied him.

During the course of the evening, which was highlighted with the rendition of several choruses and songs by the male quartet, a film depicting student life at the college was shown, and Mr. Raymer, commentator, it began with a young person responding to the call of the Master during a church service, and later showed all this same person making application and enrolling at the college, and on throughout the prescribed course of study and lectures, culminating in the 25 days' faculty arena for the graduation exercises. He also showed a closing scene and splendid library.

The focal point of the college's training is the chapter by chapter exposition of the entire English Bible. All students gather around the Book in the second lecture hour of each school morning, during the first two years of the course. Other subjects are woven around the theme of the Bible's message and the practical emphasis is given to evangelistic results in conjunction with other studies.

Serve on Six Continents

"For more than half a century the graduates of the Toronto Bible College have gone out to the front lines of Christian service on six continents; today the sun never sets upon the graduate body. They serve their Master abroad on six continents; in 33 countries; under 36 mission boards; and at home, in nine provinces, in the offices of mission directors, superintendents, and as missionaries to the Indians, the outcast, the poor, and the needy.

"In a day when great gatherings are chiefly associated with sporting or political interests, there is something deeply moving and impressive in the sight of several thousands of young people assembled with a common purpose for the glory and the cause of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"The deep and penetrating impressions of the graduation exercises is the volume and heartiness of the singing; the musical items by groups of students, or by the college choir as a whole. All are of high standard and give clear evidence of careful, competent training, and of thorough practice."

A group of the Belleville Young People's Society are planning to attend the graduation exercises which will be held on April 20th.

Couple to Mark 63rd Wedding Anniversary

Picton, April 3. — Mr. and Mrs. George McConnell, who tomorrow mark the 63rd anniversary of their wedding, have one hundred grandchildren. Of these, 42 are great grandchildren, with 27 of them being born since they marked their diamond anniversary. As the couple are not enjoying the best of health, the occasion will be quietly observed here and Mrs. McConnell reside on a farm near Milford with their son, Roy McConnell. They have always resided in South Marysburgh township, save for some few years he made cheese. At one time Mr. McConnell owned Boyle Street cheese factory, and won a number of awards for high quality cheese. Mrs. McConnell was formerly Eldora Hinsman, daughter of the late Capt. and Mrs. John Hinsman.

The couple have eight children, Mrs. Elden Hinsman, Kingston; Mrs. Egbert Vaughn, Milford; Mrs. Kenneth Johnson, The Outlet; Kenneth McConnell, night-housekeeper at False Duck Island; Mrs. Malcolm Orr-Ashcroft, South Bay; Mrs. George McKenzie, Wesport; Roy McConnell, Royal Street; Mrs. William Pounder, Cherry Valley. Seven children are deceased. Nine of the grandchildren served in the armed forces during the last war.

POINT ANNE

MADOC

Educational Films Shown at Madoc Pub. School Tea

Madoc.—On Saturday, April 2, Madoc Public School staff, held a very successful afternoon tea. Its purpose was to acquaint the public with the school and its staff. The money received from a silver collection is to be used to obtain further furnishings for the Home Economics' room. A showing of four educational films by Mr. Seesey, of the National Film Board, was very much enjoyed. Mr. Seesey shows films of this type monthly to the school. These included "Stone Canning", "Crafts in Mexico", "Life in Brazil" and "Fishing in the Maritimes".

The guests wandered at their leisure through the classrooms, inspecting and enjoying the work displayed. Following this, they went to the Home Economics' room, where tea was served.

Mrs. Irwin and Mrs. Alexander poured tea which was served by the girls of the Home Economics' class.

The staff and pupils would like to thank the many mothers and others interested who attended and made the afternoon such a success.

MARMORA

New Loyalty Needed In Christian Religion Fundamentals

Marmora — Rev. A. S. McConnell, L.Th., M.B.E., of St. George's, Trenton, officiated at the 11 a.m., celebration of Holy Communion at St. Paul's on Sunday.

He delivered an impressive sermon on the text in Acts 7: "They continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship and in the breaking of bread and in prayer". The preacher called for a deeper realization of church life being family life in the spiritual sense. A new loyalty is needed towards the fundamentals of the Christian religion that the church remain the living organism it was intended to be.

POINT ANNE

Bride-Elect Recipient Of Lovely Gifts

Point Anne.—On Thursday evening, Mrs. Gordon Chisholm and Miss Joan MacDonald, entertained a number of girls in honor of Miss Barbara Bills, a bride of this month.

The evening was spent in games and social chat.

Dainty refreshments were served later by the hostesses.

Prairie Mission Adventures For English Girl

Liverpool, England, April 3. — (CP)—The adventure of a lifetime starts for 25-year-old Daphne Holdsworth when she sails May 13, on the Ascania for Montreal.

For 18 months Canada will belong to her.

All expenses paid, monthly pocket money provided, her home a caravan—Dalcindie — job is to visit lonely people on the Prairie; baptize babies, organize Sunday Schools and encourage local youth movements.

She will be sponsored by the Anglican Caravan Mission of Canada, the head of which is wealthy Eva Hassell, now on a lecture tour of Britain.

The Mission has 30 caravans, or trailers, which continually tour areas too isolated for clergymen to reach.

For seven years Daphne's career has been welfare work at London's East End, Birmingham, Nottingham and Wrexham. For the last year or so she has been club-leader of the Manchester Y.W.C.A.

Salvationist Does Tough Job Bringing Comfort

Trenton, April 3. (CP)—Major Maurice Wellcome has a tough job. And she does it with a cheerful humor.

For Major Wellcome, who has spent 32 years as an officer of the Salvation Army, sees the poorest and most sordid of the city's women pass before her in the police courts and tries to help them.

In her early 50's, she has offered comfort to women charged with everything from drunkenness to murder. Once a week she has a brief evangelical service at the Don Jail. She interviews women prisoners at Mercer Reformatory and runs errands for them and all of them. She also holds services every Sunday.

A widow, she has four daughters, two of them serve in the Salvation Army.

ADVICE to the LOVELORN

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Wants to leave an unfaithful husband

When any wife begins to think about whether or not she should leave her husband, I believe one very simple procedure would help her clarify the whole situation, as a starter.

What I suggest is, that she sit down with a pencil and paper and make two lists, one of what she would gain if she left her husband, the other of what she would lose.

It is, of course, very difficult to assess the value of emotional considerations. It is simple enough to note down that she would lose economic support for example, if she broke up her marriage, and, on the credit side, that she would gain peace of mind by so doing. But it may not always be so easy for her to tell which consideration means the most to her. For if she were to give up economic support in favor of peace of mind, it might be the subsequent wor.y over how she was going to live would offset the advantage she hoped to gain.

On the other hand, there are some situations which make it appear that practically everything will be on the side of leaving a husband, and very little, if anything, against it.

Take, for example, the case of a woman who writes me that she has been married for eighteen years, that her husband has told her husband has been unfaithful to her. So far from receiving any support from him for herself and their two children, no win their teens, she has always worked to earn money for their living.

"I can't remember when my husband has given me any money. It's been so long," she writes. "He spends his money on other women."

After all these years of putting up with her husband's infidelities, and of assuming the responsibility for the livelihood of herself and her children, this woman now wants to leave her husband to marry another man. She and this man have been in love for many years, she writes. He is not married and has told her that he will wait for her "forever".

With what she believes to be certain happiness ahead of her if she were to divorce her husband and marry this other man, the wife apparently still feels so much hesitation about making a decision that she wants to be told what to do. Or perhaps what she really wants is for someone to give her the courage to make the break and put an end to the current phase of her life.

Frankly, I cannot see a great deal of hope for the future of her present marriage, and if the circumstances are exactly as she describes them, it seems to me she has a right to terminate it.

The chief catch I can see in the whole thing, however, is that in telling about the man with whom she is in love, she says, "He and I have been going together every chance we get". I am wondering just how far this relationship has gone, and whether there has been anything in it there that might react to her disadvantage if she were to try and bring legal action against her husband I think this woman definitely needs advice on her problem from an expert, and if she would like to send me her full name and an address to which I could write her a letter, I would be glad to make a suggestion along this line.

No More Dosing For Constipation

Famous cereal frees women from harsh laxatives

Searching desperately for constipation relief? Then read this unsolicited letter:

"For 10 years I was among millions who couldn't help me. At last my doctor in England advised KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN. I began to eat it for breakfast and soon realized I was better. I eat ALL-BRAN regularly now and can safely say I am free from constipation." (Name given on request).

You, too, may never have to take another harsh laxative for constipation due to lack of bulk in the diet. Just eat an ounce of KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN daily—and drink plenty of water. ALL-BRAN is not a purgative, but a wholesome regulating cereal. Eat as a cereal, or in recipes for constipation relief. If after using one package you are not entirely satisfied, get double your money back as guaranteed on the package. Buy delicious ALL-BRAN from your grocer. Made by Kellogg's of London, Ontario.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Plastic Surgery

When a woman finds that she has accordion pleats in her face and that there are little tissue flounces under her chin, she is likely to flirt with the idea of getting a face-lift. A face for an old one sounds grand to her.

Of course, she should have guarded against furrows in the first place, started early to fight the enemy. Time who does us good by anyone. She should have realized the devastating effects of emotional sprees that interfere with nutrition. She should have learned about the balanced diet so that she would not lack various food elements that are necessary to keep the body cells in good condition. Exercise and fresh air are more or less of an insurance against the marks of the years. When women go in for physical education in a big way, beauty shops won't be crowded and cosmetic sales will drop with a dull thud.

Facial creases are due to partial dissolving of the underlying tissues and the weakening of the fibres that keep the skin smooth. Some lines, of course, are formed by facial gymnastics— frowning, squinting, pitting the eyebrows. It seems senseless to inflict oneself with blemishes of this kind.

Specialists in plastic surgery must have an artist's eye.

Plastic surgery is an extremely expensive indulgence. And that's not all. One must go on a hunt for a capable surgeon who is in good standing in the medical profession. They are few and far between. The only way to be sure is to ask your family physician to recommend a specialist. In the past, many charlatans throved on the gullibility of trusting women who know nothing about them or their work.

Once a reputable surgeon is found, he may refuse to do the job; he may be occupied with more serious cases. In your good-looks defects are of the ordinary kind he may feel that others need his attention more than you do. Wrinkles are not always as terrible as a woman thinks they are. Sometimes they make the face expressive and interesting.

The so-called face-lift is achieved by making incisions at the temples, just beyond the hair line. The flesh is lifted until the furrow is smooth, the wound stitched carefully. Pouches under the eyes can be corrected, though that is an exquisitely delicate operation.

A number of well-known movie stars have had their noses remodeled. They are done with remarkable skill and no scant result.

Specialists in plastic surgery must not only be good surgeons but must have an artist's eye, know how the patient will look after the operation is finished.

gala evening clothes. Gray tulle is used for a beautiful gown, made with a deep, off-shoulder neckline and a very full skirt with an insert of a 4-inch band of pale pink satin set below the waistline in front and sweeping low to the back.

SOMETHING NEW and very sensible in the line-up of separates, is the blouse and skirt of printed silk shantung, each piece nice on its own, and together forming a charming dress. Blouses are mostly of the soft shirtwaist variety and skirts moderately full with unpressed pleats.

DRESSMAKER detail adds charm to new cottons for summer afternoon wear. Dotted Swiss, white on bright red is used for a pretty dress with a deep white band on the full, flaring skirt. A wide, softly tucked sash with a full bow in back, is of white muslin also, as is a band that edges the round, oval neckline and also bands the short sleeves.

NEVER SO EARLY is the word on cotton sales. Maybe it's because the cottons are so pretty that women no matter the season. Block or navy calico with a white dot finishes in a small geometric print in mauve, green and pink makes the fabric chosen for a nice frock with self ruffle outlining the deep narrow, plunging neckline and finishing the long sleeve, also defining a pointed peplum.

IT'S A FINE IDEA that of the fabric glove house that has prepared for late Spring and Summer a nice glove wardrobe all in nylon—plain, mesh, lace and other novelty weaves.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Attention, Bride-to-be

This is the time when the June brides will be ordering her wedding invitations and announcements. She should realize that for every default of formal wedding invitations and announcements there's a definite tradition, a right way. It is important that she know what these forms are, and that she abide by them explicitly.

This is the traditional form of a wedding invitation:

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Earl Brown request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter Elizabethe Anne to

Mr. Arthur David Field on Tuesday, the seventh of June at four o'clock Faith Church Haven, New York

Today's favorite: Shaded Antique Roman

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

What do you consider the most popular type of lettering for wedding invitations and announcements today? I am shopping for my wedding invitations, and I have seen several letterings that seem to me particularly beautiful.

Bride-to-be

The favorite lettering for today's brides is Shaded Antique Roman. Deservedly so, too, I think, for this type is graceful, youthful, very effective. However, always in excellent taste, lends the most reserved lettering, is Script, either the regular size Script or the larger lettering, London Script.

White dinner jacket not correct in April

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

We are going to be married the last week in April, a small church wedding at four o'clock in the afternoon. The groom, best man, and ushers want to wear white dinner jackets . . . but this seems all wrong to me, too early in the season, and not right for an afternoon wedding in the city. Am I right?

Emily T.

You are absolutely right! White dinner jackets are correct for the man in the wedding party to wear at a semi-formal or informal evening wedding (they should not be worn before six o'clock in the evening, at the very earliest), in the summer. In a northern city (where you live) a white dinner jacket is not correctly worn until late June, and never correctly worn until evening. (In the suburbs or in the country, white dinner jackets are often worn at evening weddings beginning the last week of May or nearly June . . . "weather permitting.")

Easter card signature, when husband is in service abroad

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My husband is in the service, now stationed in Germany. I miss him so very much, and I would like to send Easter cards to his relatives and mine, and to our friends, signing his name with mine on the cards, as we did here at Christmas-time. Would this be a proper thing for me to do?

Martha D.

Yes, indeed, it would be proper for you to include your husband's name in the signature to these Easter cards, and this would give the cards an added welcome as a greeting from your husband, too. Naturally he would want to be included in your Easter greetings, just as he would be included if he were at home. And, to make your cards even more personal, suggest you add a message of explanation and greeting; for example, "Easter greetings from Mary and Bob." Although I'm far away at the present (stationed in Germany) I know that he will want me to include his Easter greetings with mine, his warmest greetings and devoted wishes to you all from both of us."

Double wedding . . . Two wedding cakes

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Our two daughters are to have a double wedding in June. Should there be two wedding cakes, or only one with the couples cutting the cake from opposite sides?

Mother

There should be two bridal cakes . . . each bride and groom should have the joy of cutting their own cake.

The Velvet Touch

By ALICE ALDEN

A TOUCH of velvet is one of the new notions for giving the print dress a different aspect, and is a very handsome detail if it is too, when wisely handled. New, too, is the print dress cut with a slim lines, just asking of course, to be topped by a cartwheel hat. This Harriette Harra design is in almond green silk crepe printed with a tiny black and white modernistic design. It has a narrow velvet collar and buttons and a wide stiff velvet belt.

Duke of Windsor Visits With King At The Palace

London, April 8 (Reuters) — The Duke of Windsor, who arrived Monday from Paris, saw the King at Buckingham Palace Monday night for the first time since the King's illness began.

His present visit to Britain has roused some speculation as to his future. Since the Duke resigned his post as Governor of the Bahamas in March, 1940, he has been without a job.

He and the Duchess, who will join him at the end of the week to spend a few days as guests of the Earl of Dudley, have been living on the Riviera and in Paris. They have bought a new Paris home, in the fashionable district near the Bois De Boulogne, which is much smaller than their former Paris residence in the Boulevard Suchet. Their new house has about two reception rooms, two bedrooms and comparatively small servants' quarters. There are no guest rooms.

The Duchess of Windsor has made only three visits to her country since her marriage—two between 1946 and 1947 and one just after the outbreak of the war in 1939.

On no occasion has she been reported as having called on any of her royal in-laws.

London, (CP)— One of the liveliest current art shows in London has not a picture in it; the work is done by students of 34 art schools in greater London.

"I am really startled by the high level of the work," said Phillip Hendy, director of the British National Art Gallery.

Although 3,500 works were submitted, only 500 could be hung.

Hundreds of students attended the opening—young men in corduroy trousers, some with long beards, many in sandals, long-haired and girls wearing sandals and brightly colored stockings.

Los Angeles (AP)— Customer Bob Kimbrough complained recently to barber George Hughes that $1 is too much to pay for a hair cut.

"Trouble with you," Hodges replied "is a yen for the good old days—the era of the horse and buggy."

Hodges cut his hair for 75 cents.

Charleston, W. Va., (AP)—"It's going to some early bird," read the Monday morning advertisement for a 1940 four door sedan.

SUGAR FACE—The ecstatic look on this girl's face is typical of Quebec sugaring-off parties. When the run of sample sap is at its height these parties are highlights of entertainment in the rural districts of Quebec. The sap which has been collected from the maple trees is taken to the sugar house where it is boiled down into sugar and syrup. When a party is held, the party-goers take the thick boiling syrup, pour it into the snow to congeal and eat the resulting taffy. Dancing, dining and plenty of "whisky blanc" usually add spice to the party. (CP Photo)

GATHERING THE SAP—Thousands of Quebec maple trees are tapped every year and the light colored sap is carried to sugar houses where it is boiled down into thick maple syrup and sugar. The season is now in full swing and this photo shows a horse-drawn sled with metal drum being hauled from tree to tree as the sap is collected. (CP Photo)

MAPLE TREE TAPPING—When early spring brings warm days and clear, cold nights, that is the time the sappy sap rises in the maple trees. Maple syrup and sugar mean extra income to the farmer lucky enough to have maple trees on his woodlot. Here, a habitant shows a pretty visitor how aluminum buckets are used to catch sap running through a spile in a tapped tree. (CP Photo)

Quebec is Converting Sap Flow Into Stream of Dollars

By WILLIAM STEWART
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Quebec, April 5 (CP)— Quebec farmers, making a 100-hour week in their stride, are busy converting the sap flow of 20,000,000 maple trees into a stream of dollars.

Quebec, Canada's top maple sugar and syrup producer, over the years has built up a $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 annual business from its groves of rock and red maple.

Last year their yield was close to 27,000,000, and this year's weekold season favored by good sugar weather has good chances of exceeding that mark.

Since the colonists of New France 360 years ago learned the Indian trick of boiling maple sap into tasty syrup, the maple sugar industry, after two or three false starts, has grown up.

The colonists who took the boiling a shape farther than the Indians and produced sugar. Their methods were wasteful and about half the maple sap was spilled and lost.

That was a time of birch bark buckets, wooden troughs and spouts, and clumsy stoves in the sugar camps. The maple season was a time of folksongs and lateevening story-telling while contracted hands kept paddles moving in the sap boilers.

In the past few years, the maple season has been converted from haphazard one-time into business time for a serious commercial enterprise in which Quebec has about 75 per cent of the Canadian share.

Week-end sugar parties still are held but in most cases now, except on family property, the occasion is one at least $2.50 a head for the last snowball fight of the winter, and a stomachful of sticky taffy and soft warm sugar.

The Quebec maple industry is leaving behind its happy-go-lucky atmosphere and farmers now are starting to plan and plant their groves for the best possible yield, keeping one eye on their evaporators and the other on market reports.

It did, City police said the car was stolen from a used car lot four hours before the place opened for business.

Daylight Saving In Winter Months Would Help Hydro

Toronto, April 8 — (CP) — If Southern Ontario municipalities observed daylight saving in the winter months it would mean a hydro-electric power saving of 50,000 - 100,000 horsepower at peak-load periods, H. Challies, minister for hydro, told the Ontario Legislature Monday.

Mr. Challies answered a question by W. L. Houck (L.—Niagara Falls).

Mr. Houck asked whether the Hydro-Electric Power Commission had "any definite policy on daylight saving and which level of government had jurisdiction over daylight saving."

Toronto city council had recently extended the daylight saving period from the last Sunday in September to the last Sunday in November, he said.

"It seems silly and certainly unnecessary that Toronto should be an hour ahead of everyone else," Mr. Houck said.

Mr. Challies said daylight saving was within the jurisdiction of municipal governments. The demand for electrical energy remained consistent, he said. Universal daylight saving in Ontario, however, would reduce peak loads by 2 to 8½ per cent.

3,000 POLICE OUT IN N. Y. TAXI STRIKE

Some 6,000 cabs are idle in New York today as a result of a strike over union recognition by cab drivers. Two non-striking drivers were beaten and a cab overturned as outbreaks of violence occurred. Arrests in the dispute have already mounted to 45 and 3,000 heavily-armed police are on patrol duty. Meanwhile thousands of residents are discovering that "walking is healthy. But Miss Toney Terry, above, decided to pedal her way around town and 'dusted off her bicycle.—Central Press Canadian.

Russia Protests Frontier Shifts In West Germany

London, April 8 — (AP)—Russia has protested that the western powers broke a Big-Four agreement by making changes in the frontiers of Western Germany.

The Western Allies announced March 27 three minor border shifts affecting 52 square miles of German territory were being made to ease communication and administrative difficulties.

Portions of the area sliced off went to The Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, the French-controlled Saar and France.

The Soviet note, as distributed by Tass, said the frontier changes violated "a declaration on the position of Germany" signed by Russia, the United States, Great Britain and France in 1945.

Old Country Letter:

Britain Leaves Worrying About Spy Dangers to 'Cloak And Dagger Boys' of Dept.

By STUART UNDERHILL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, April 8 (CP)— Because it is hard to remain in a state of alarm over an invisible threat, Britain leaves its worrying about spy dangers to the "cloak and dagger boys" of the government security departments.

During the last few years there has been no dearth of warnings that a spy peril exists more deadly than any Britain has ever known.

Communists who quite possibly could wear an old school tie or talk with an authentic cockney accent are the suspects.

But since there is no way of distinguishing spies (in the war days you could look for something like a betraying swastika manner), the average citizen puts his trust in such mysterious organizations as MI5.

In actual fact MI5 is only one of many intelligence branches engaged in counter-espionage and other security measures. It is the fifth branch of the army's military intelligence section, there being 13 branches in all.

Inter-Departmental Co-operation

The various government departments, notably the Foreign Office and Home Office, also have security forces. They work in close co-operation with a special section of Scotland Yard.

Secrecy shrouds their activity. But for some reason it is MI5 which has captivated the public fancy. The wealth of information about its doings encourages the legend of its quick and ruthless operations.

No one can measure how much vital information flows into unauthorized hands. The government already has acted to "purge" Communist civil servants who were in key positions where they had access to such facts.

Spy's Cross Small

Prime Minister Attlee has indicated in the House of Commons that a spy may find his picking leaner than many think.

He declined a Conservative Demand to give more information of defence plans on the ground that foreign governments often were not in the possession of what seemed fairly obvious information.

He said there was documentary proof that the Germans "benefited very much from excessive information which was given before the war."

Suspect Diplomats

Subsequently in the House of Lords, Lord Vansittart, a veteran of the British diplomatic service, declared that eastern European countries were using their consular employees for espionage. His views were endorsed by Viscount Swinton, former Conservative Minister, who said:

"Nobody doubts that the swollen staffs of the Russian and satellite missions would engage if they are not already engaging—and I know or at least I think I know that some of them are engaging—in espionage and subversive activity."

The Foreign Office said if Lord Swinton's charge were true "there is certain machinery with which would be glad to know something about it."

Hamilton Makes Quota in Drive For Red Cross

Toronto, April 8 — (CP)—Hamilton, with its $160,000 quota, is the first large Ontario city to reach its objective in the Canadian Red Cross campaign for funds, campaign chairman S. H. Young of Toronto announced today.

Reports from 100 Red Cross branches throughout the province show returns have reached $1,034,506 of Ontario's $2,000,000 quota.

Mr. Young said the campaign period will be extended in branches which had postponed the start of their canvass until March 15, two weeks after the official opening date, because of adverse weather.

DEPARTING CHURCHILL GETS "VICTORY" ASSIST

Mr. Blackwell, announcing that the government would consider extending the time limit, said: "We would like the period of settlement to be long enough in the future that if the opposition is prepared to make an election issue of this measure they can have it in the fall of 1951 and learn what party stands for the principle of perpetuity in property."

He said the government wanted to avoid the situation that arose since the Joseph E. Atkinson will transfer, under ordinary law governing businesslike, trustees are not permitted to purchase the assets from a trust estate. Now the government is prepared to accept the plan, to permit such purchase as long as they are approved by the courts as to price, terms and conditions of sale.

Would Have to Change

Mr. Oliver, who followed Mr. Blackwell in the debate and the moved of the proposed amendment and hoped that when the special committee stage the government would bring into force other amendments. The bill would have to be changed drastically before it met the approval of the opposition and of the public.

Mr. Porter accused the C.C.F. of "pleading a special case for a special asset." He said that although in times past the legislature had been free to pass retroactive legislation affecting wills, there was nothing retroactive in the bill before the House.

The bill was termed by Mr. MacLeod the most unprincipled piece of legislation introduced in any legislature within the memory of man." He added:

"This bill was conceived in sin and born in shame. It was stated by Dr. McCullagh (George McCullagh, publisher of the Toronto Globe and Mail and the Telegram, has an honorary doctorate) that the Atkinson will was drawn by Roy Frost) is here in the role of the midwife to deliver the ugly child."

Denies Filibuster

When Mr. Jolliffe resumed his argument in the afternoon sitting he denied he was conducting a filibuster.

"There has been a great deal of silly talk about a filibuster on my part," he said. "These suggestions are very much off the mark. I challenge anyone to point out a single sentence in my speech last week that was not relevant."

Mr. Jolliffe last Wednesday read lengthy extracts from the will of the late Joseph E. Atkinson, former owner of the Star and the Star Weekly, and of the late John Ross Robertson, former owner of the Toronto Telegram. He also read a number of written judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada concerning freedom of the press.

Provincial Treasurer Frost said Monday that those quotations were "entirely unnecessary."

"Nothing I read or said was in relation to Mr. Jolliffe said. "A lengthy discussion must be regarded as heretable.

"From the first to last this bill bears the mark of the hand and of the former leader of this government who could not be elected to this House. It is well known in Toronto that certain members of the government are determined to have the bill withdrawn one day last week and only changed their minds when their former leader came to town and the dead hand was laid on them once again."

Mr. Frost said "(If Mr. Drew (former Premier George Drew) was in Toronto this weekend I did not see him." Mr. Frost added he had never discussed the legislation with George McCullagh, publisher of the Toronto Globe and Mail and the Toronto Telegram.

Frost Takes Responsibility

"If take privately responsibility for this bill myself," Frost said. "I stand or fall on the fairness of this legislation."

Mr. Frost and Mr. Jolliffe conducted a running debate during most of the afternoon session. Mr. Frost denied that the bill was dictated at the Atkinson Foundation. The Sudbury Star was "just the same as the Atkinson Foundation" and had agreed with the principle of the bill.

(The Sudbury Star is owned by the Mason Charitable Foundation under trust and the will former owner W. E. Mason).

"The Mason Foundation is not the same thing at all," Mr. Jolliffe said. Mr. Mason's estate had not been concentrated in a newspaper. He had "large real estate holdings."

Mr. Frost's will had provided that the newspaper be sold by the trustees "in due course." Atkinson's had not.

Bi-Partisan Attitude

Mr. Frost said the government had attempted a "bi-partisan" attitude to the bill. Its provisions applied equally to Atkinson and Mason Foundations.

"Both were multi-millionaires; both owned newspapers; but one was a Liberal and the other a Conservative," Mr. Frost said.

Mr. Jolliffe said the Atkinson will "made it perfectly clear that he did not want the newspapers to fall into private hands." The government was trying to "make sure that they do."

Mr. Frost: "Do you imagine we set out to destroy the Sudbury Star?"

Mr. Jolliffe: "The bill makes absolutely no difference to the Sudbury Star and the treasurer knows it."

Mr. Blackwell said there was nothing in the bill to prevent the continued existence and operation of the Atkinson Foundation on one hand, or the Mason Foundation which has to do with the Sudbury Star on the other hand.

THE IDEAL POLICEMAN

Ely, Cambridgshire, England—(CP) — A policeman's job is "not to throw his weight about, but to be a friend of the public and to make their lives happier," the late Sir Ely's Chief Constable told his forces.

CABINET PLANS

"The only possibility that is envisaged by the government and by its advisers at this time concerning an attack on Canada is what is called a diversionary raid on a remote and key point, something designed to attract attention and to create local tension, and to force us by pressure of public opinion to put much more than static defence than we should do otherwise.

"If this is the only possibility then what could the only possible aggressor want to know except the kind of force how eight have to divert from his major military activities in order to make this diversionary raid?.

Drew Claims no Reason

And I can assure you that so long as I am minister of National Defence I am not going to give him that information."

The argument developed during the night when Liberal party statesmates of the Defence department for the $1,483-40 fiscal year, ended March 31.

Mr. Drew said that information about the strength of Canada's armed forces should not be kept from parliament.

There was no reason to keep the information secret. The information, if given to the Canadian people would be "much more surprising" to them than it would be to Russia.

"And the minister knowsit," Mr. Drew said, "that his reply would not be very gratifying to the Canadian people."

He urged that members not pass the defence estimates until Mr. Claxton had given assurances that a standing defence committee, similar to the United States committee, would be established. The United States committee of Congress decided on the strength of the American forces.

Besides information about the strength of the forces, a statement on why Canada was not participating in the North Atlantic.

He argued that Russia has not the surface ships or the land transportation to carry armed forces to this country. The only danger troops could be brought here was by air. Yet Canada had only 51 jet fighters and they were not even manufactured on this continent.

"Our air force is pitifully inadequate by any test," he said. Mr. Claxton informed Mr. Drew's charges as being "vague and general." He added: "We don't know whether a defence committee would be a good idea, or not. The United States had a defence committee but there the members of the cabinet were not responsible to Congress or responsible to Congress.

Practice Not New

He said he might be wrong, but he did not believe the United Kingdom or any Commonwealth country had a defence committee similar to that of the United States.

The practice of not giving figures on the strength of the armed forces was not new. It had been followed in the United Kingdom and Canada before the last war. If the strength of the one unit was given it could not be refused for the strength a series of questions would disclose the whole battle order of the Canadian forces.

He quoted from the British Hansard to show that the United Kingdom government also had adopted a policy of declining to comply with requests for military information.

In the free swinging discussion on other departmental supplementary estimates, C.C.F. members called on the federal government to intervene in a mine strike at Asbestos, Que. Hazen Gillis (CCF-Cape Breton South), Ross Thatcher (CCF-Moose Jaw) and Angus MacInnis (CCF-Vancouver East) protested against the action of the Quebec government in sending provincial police into the strike area.

Joseph LaFontaine (Le-Megantic-Frontenac) termed the actions dictatorial.

Labor Minister Mitchell said the dispute came within provincial jurisdiction but he hoped common sense would prevail.

Can Sell to Britain

Mr. Mitchell told C. C. Merritt, V.C., (PC-Vancouver Burrard) that he could give no assurances that there would be a permanence of seasonal unemployment in Vancouver, next winter. Mr. Merritt asked that the federal government assume responsibility for unemployed employables.

In a discussion on fisheries Fisheries Minister Mayhew said "there is every reason to hope that something will be done" to allow the British Columbia canned salmon industry to sell a "good portion" of its surplus to Britain in this way.

He told Howard Green (PC-Vancouver South) that negotiations have been going on with Britain for months and that three representatives of the federal government, fisheries, trade and finance, are now in London. Later, Mr. Green had warned that the industry's market in Britain was such that a "disaster" could result.

A. J. Brooks (PC-Royal) and George Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-King's) urged that steps be taken to conserve not only Atlantic salmon but also such things as herring.

G. R. Pearkes, V.C., (PC-Nanaimo) said he had no objection to the shipment of British Columbia herring to the Maritimes, but he did feel the shipments should be made at the expense of the industries on the west coast. There was a shortage of fish meal in British Columbia for use by poultry producers.

ALLAN TURNCLIFFE

Arrested at Point Anne

The next day Turncliffe was arrested at Point Anne, east of Belleville, while he was working on a construction project. He said he had taken his wife to Belleville and had returned to the first of February, returned to the children around the middle of the month and was called back to Belleville to be with his wife.

Given his freedom at the conclusion of the hearing on Friday yesterday Turncliffe said "I guess I am pretty lucky."

Just previously he had been told by Magistrate Lloyd he could have been sent to jail for five years in addition to a $500 fine. He was told by the magistrate "if you get into trouble during the next five years, you'll be brought up again and you might get those five years."

Robert D. Jones, Belleville lawyer, appeared as defence counsel for Turncliffe and after pleading for his client stated that some newspaper reports published in connection with Turncliffe's arrest had been extremely inaccurate.

Should Have Come Back

He said his client had worked in the bush cutting timber all winter and had taken his wife to the hospital where she would have proper care during her confinement. "He didn't come back, although he should have come back," he said.

Turncliffe appeared at the hearing wearing patched battledress trousers and plaid jacket (minty, Sir" in a low voice as Assistant Crown Attorney S. Gordon Robertson read out the five charges.

When questioned on the matter by the Crown Turncliffe admitted jail officials at Belleville had not prevented him from seeing a lawyer. At his first appearance at Madoc he had claimed he had asked for a lawyer but was prevented by the police from seeing one.

"Is it not so that you were not prevented from seeing a lawyer?" asked Mr. Robertson. "That's right," was the reply.

Kept Children Alive

Cpl. Stan Palmateer, of the Ontario Provincial Police at Bancroft, stated that the children were sitting down to a "meal of bread and boiled potatoes when he and the C.A.S. superintendent, Mr. Lockyer arrived at the home. William Landry, Mrs. Turncliffe's brother, was credited by police and children's aid officials with keeping the children alive during the period in the absence of their parents.

Landry had shot squirrel and snared rabbits to augment the daily rations for the children. "I said the children did not go hungry if I could prevent it," he said. Landry owed $28 for provisions at a local store when the children were taken away by police and the C.A.S.

Mrs. Turncliffe and her new husband William Robert, are staying with friends in Belleville. She was firmly in support of her husband, claiming he had always provided well for the children.

"Dictatorial" Methods Used Charge Levelled

Ottawa, April 3 — (CP) — Charges that Premier Duplessis of Quebec was using "dictatorial" methods in his handling of the Asbestos strike at Asbestos, Que., were heard Monday in the Commons.

Joseph LaFontaine, Liberal member from the Quebec eastern townships riding of Megantic-Frontenac, levelled the charge and described the strike, under way two months, as "just."

The discussion was provoked by Clarie Gillis (CCF-Cape Breton South), who quoted reports from French-language newspapers which he said "are not carried in the English-speaking section of our press." He said Quebec provincial police in the area were dealing with the public in a manner which "left nothing to be desired."

He quoted a translation from a dispatch in Montreal Le Devoir which said the Asbestos town council had adopted a resolution protesting that the provincial police, numbering 150, had been under the influence of alcohol, had committed "indecent acts" on the streets of the town and had caused "disorder in public places."

The resolution also charged that the police had used "violence" against maintenance employees and constables of the plant, committing these acts "without warning and with evident thought of provoking trouble."

Tshtsr No Rides

Labor Minister Mitchell said he was taking no sides in the dispute, but he hoped it would be settled speedily with justice to the employees. He hoped common sense would prevail.

The dispute came completely within the jurisdiction of the provincial government.

Mr. Gillis further quoted Le Devoir as saying the provincial police were paid $50 a week by the Johns-Manville Company, in addition to their regular pay from the provincial government.

The kind of thing that was taking place in Asbestos was at least 30 years behind the times. The workers were members of the Catholic syndicates. They were not radicals or Communists. They were part of the regular Labor movement.

He believed it was time for Mr. Mitchell to investigate what was going on in Asbestos. The way the provincial police were being used put them in the category of "armed thugs."

Canada Assumes New Duties to Help Maintain Security

Ottawa, April 3 (CP)—Twelve million Canadians—playing an arms-widening role in world affairs has taken on the responsibility of helping maintain security in the North Atlantic area.

With the signing in Washington of North Atlantic Security Treaty by Lester B. (Mike) Pearson, Minister for External Affairs, Canada threw in her lot with 11 other countries to help keep protect each other from aggression.

It meant that Canada might one day be called upon to deliver military aid in the event of an armed attack on the land, ships or aircraft in the North Atlantic area of Belgium, France, Luxembourg, The Netherlands, the United States, Italy, Norway, Iceland, Denmark, Portugal and the United States.

In the same light, and attack on Canada might mean the dispatch of foreign troops to the shores of the Dominion.

Joint Defence Pact

Canada may be called upon to supply equipment and arms to other countries signing the treaty. And in addition she will be responsible for maintaining her own effective forces as an efficient standard.

The treaty does not affect Canada's obligations to the United States. Rather it is designed to work within the provisions of the U.N.

An indication of the solid backing given the principle of the treaty was the rare degree of unanimity in parliament last week. The four leading parties and their political leaders to give unqualified approval to the principle of the fact after which it was adopted by 149 to 2. The Senate gave it unanimous approval.

German Police Claim Laborer Actually Suhren

Regensdorf, Bavaria, April 3—(Reuter)—German police have claimed that a man they had arrested working as a laborer was actually Fritz Suhren, former commandant of the notorious Ravensbruck concentration camp.

They alleged he had vainly attempted to escape with aid of the S.S. (Elite Guard) tattoo mark under his left upper arm.

The police said they based their claim on personal identification by a former camp inmate and on statements from the Hamburg police, who have been searching for Suhren since he escaped from an internment camp more than two years ago.

The man they claim is the 41-year-old Suhren was working as a laborer under the name of Herbert Pakusch in the village of Grafenau when arrested March 23, they said.

His felt Premier Duplessis should be made to realise that he is living in Canada and not in some totalitarian state.

At Disposal of Company

Ross Thatcher, (CCF-Moose Jaw), speaking in French, said the Quebec government had declared the strike illegal and had cancelled certification of the unions. It was surprising that the English-language newspapers had not given fuller coverage of the strike.

It appeared, he added, that Mr. Duplessis had put the police at the disposal of the company which he described as a cartel. The Progressive Conservatives and their leader Ivan Sabourin in Quebec supported such tactics.

Angus MacInnis (CCF-Vancouver East) also was provoked by any suggestion that the Asbestos strike was of no concern to the Federal Department of Labor even if it was outside its jurisdiction. He also warned industry that anyone who ignored the rights of labor was "fooling himself." Labor would have its voice heard.

He recalled the promise of former premier Hepburn of Ontario to destroy the C.I.O. in Canada. Mr. Hepburn was gone; the C.I.O. remained "a force for good." Any one who disregarded such lessons was "blind." If the

Twice Rescued From Freighter In 24 Hours

Morecambe Bay, Lancas, Eng., April 3. (AP) — Crew members of the 100-ton freighter Alpha had to be rescued twice in 24 hours from their gale-pounded ship.

Lifeboats took off the crew of seven men and a boy Sunday night when the Alpha ran ashore near here. Later the vessel and five of the crew went back to steal watch on board. A 12-mile an-hour gale drove the ship out to sea again and lifeboat once again moved to the rescue.

Sydney Millionaires Beat Marlboros 5-4 in Overtime To Tie Allan Cup Series

Toronto, April 5 (CP) — The Queen's bid—closest thing that of smoky Toronto, they say—must agree with Sydney Millionaires.

The Maritime hockey champions moved headquarters to the Motor City, 30 miles east of Toronto, during the weekend. Monday night they came back by bus and stayed just long enough to put out with their first victory over Toronto Marlboros, a rousing 5-4 overtime triumph, to tie their eastern Canada semi-final Allan Cup series at a victory apiece.

From their spirit performance, the Cape Breton Islanders must have found the Queen's summer sphere as invigorating as the salty Atlantic breezes blowing in on their native shore.

Four times they spotted coach Joe Primeau's all-Ontario champs a one goal lead and four times came back to tie it up. Then CliFF Roach, a native Sydneyite, slapped home the winning goal on a pass from veteran Lou Medynski at 4:16 of the 10-minute overtime session.

A crowd of 8,700 was on hand in Maple Leaf Garden to see the Millionaires achieve the first victory Marlboros won in their history after the opener ended in a 1-1 draw. The teams play again here Wednesday night.

Coach Jack Fritz, who took his Millionaires right back to Oshawa after the game said he planned no change in the winning combination for the next match.

Shifted Forward Lines

"I think we've solved them now" the lanky, horn-rimmed coach chortled. "We should be able to take them from here in."

Fritz shifted his forward lines around for Monday night's game in an effort to find a winning combination—and the move paid off. He started Ken Elmer (Red) Mosher, the shifty Winnipeg product, at centre between Jimmie Pelkey, a former Toronto junior, and Alex Hurukow, chunky winger from Fort William.

McRae scored the goal that sent the game into overtime at 14:50 of the third period, with both his line-mates drawing assists. Burukow and McRae also joined in helping Pelkey's overtime winner by tally tying the count at 3-3 early in the third frame.

Sydney's first goal was fired by Terry Gallagher, spunky little Toronto native who was the player to particular who said he found Oshawa's air "much cleaner than Toronto and you can breathe there." It came after Ray Hannigan had given Marlboros an early 1-0 lead.

Johnny McLellan again put the Toronto Maple Leafs farmhands ahead 2-1 at 14:39 of the second period but Doug Fritz, veteran brother of Sydney's coach, evened this one four minutes later. In the third frame, first George Armstrong and then Scotty Muir fired Toronto ahead 4-3 before Medynski and McRae got these both back.

Frank Hollett, the 30-and-old ve an, fell to the ice in the cic ng seconds and had to be taken off, but coach Joe Primeau of Marlboros said his standout defenceman had suffered only a slashed thumb that would not keep him out Wednesday night.

SIGNS WITH TIGERS — Merle Hapes, former New York Giant football star who was suspended by the U.S. league, has been signed to play this season with Hamilton Tigers of the Ontario Rugby Football Union. Hapes was suspended at the same time as Frank Filchock, last year's Tiger coach, who had signed with Montreal Alouettes, over charges of silling to report a bribery attempt. (CP Photo)

Goalie Troubles Nearly Over For Black Hawks

(By The Canadian Press)

Chicago Black Hawks should have few goaltending troubles in the future, Major (Bill) Tobin, president of the National Hockey League club said Monday at Edmonton.

Tobin said Hawks were "very pleased" with the services of Al Rollins, goalie for Kansas City Pla-Mors in the United States Hockey League this season and with Edmonton's Allies, Western champion Flyers in the 1947-48 season. "We consider him pretty near ready to make the jump to the big league but it may take another year," he said.

The Black Hawk president also said his organization was keeping a close eye on Bev Bentley, brilliant young defenceman with Regina Capitals.

At Port Arthur, Brandon Wheat Kings crept within one game of winning their best-of-seven Western Canada Junior semi-final series against Port Arthur Bruins by defeating the defending Memorial Cup champions 5-2 in the third game Monday night. The Wheat Kings need one more win to meet Calgary Buffaloes or Moose Jaw Canucks in the western final.

At Calgary, the powerful Calgary Buffaloes took another step along the Memorial Cup trail Monday night by blanking Moose Jaw Canucks 5-0 to take a 2-1 lead in their best-of seven Western Canada Junior semi-final series. The fourth game of the series is slated Wednesday.

At Winnipeg, Fort Frances Canadians closed out semi-final series by defeating two consecutive defeats, Monday night whipped Winnipeg Nationals 6-4 in the third game of their best-of-seven Western Canada semi-final hockey series. Winnipeg now leads the series 2-1.

Frank (Piper) Bain, 30, a noted figure in Ontario lacrosse, has been named coach of the western entry in the Ontario Lacrosse Association's junior "B" league. He coached Owen Sound Crescents for the past three seasons and was a former professional, star with the Toronto Maple Leafs in the old Canadian League. He played with Orillia Terriers when they won four Ontario and three Canadian senior titles.

From Toronto comes word that George Kelly, 32, has been named manager and club pro of the Tillsonburg, Ont., Golf and Country Club. Kelly, a former American League hockey player who for several years has been pro at three Toronto clubs, will take over the Tillsonburg course in mid-April.

Benny Civitello, 18-year-old apprentice jockey from Newark, N.J., equalled a Maryland mile and a sixteenth track record Monday when he rode eight winners in eight races at Bowie. The famed Earle Sande first accomplished the feat at Havre De Grace in 1919, Civitello's string was one of seven winners in one day held jointly by Joe Sylvester and Herman Phillips.

At Washington, the United States Supreme Court Monday agreed to review conviction of two men charged with attempting to bribe football players to throw a professional game. Harvey Stemmer and David Krokover were sentenced to five to 10 years each for attempting to bribe the players—both now with Canadian teams. The players, Frank Filchock and Merle Hapes, were with New York Giants when the alleged action took place. Filchock now is with Montreal Alouettes and Hapes with Hamilton Tigers.

At Kingston, Gananoque Lacrosse Maple Leafs defeated Kingston Monday night over Midland Seniors to take their first game in the best-of-three semi-final series for the Ontario Hockey Association Intermediate A title. Fair and Jackson each tallied twice for Gananoque with Allaire scoring the other. Ambeau started the Midland scoring in the second period and Toole and O'Hearn added the rest in the final period.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE H. CARVER, Sports Editor

That old result the figure "3" is still hanging around the hallelujah-chasing Flyers of Detroit and Montreal Canadiens and Detroit Red Wings. The Canadiens toppled the proud Wings by a 3-1 score giving the scrappy Habs two wins each in this flaming semi-finals series.

•

Tonight in hockey-mad Detroit the battle will be joined for the last time. It is do or die for either squad with the Adams cup having the advantage over Elliot Chabot's band of doughty warriors from Montreal. The boys in the back rooms quote the Habs as being 2-1 favorites to take the game and the series tonight. No matter the odds, there should be fireworks aplenty when the Habs swing into action. It may be the last stick for the right to meet their traditional foemen from Conny Smythe's ballywick in Toronto.

If, however, the Canucks defeather the Wings in Detroit tonight, the first game of the Stanley Cup finals will be played in the Montreal Forum on Thursday night with the second tilt scheduled for March 12 at Olympia on Saturday evening. Third and fourth games are slated for Montreal on Tuesday and Thursday of next week. Word from Montreal has it that Canadiens, if they win over Detroit, will be the biggest favorites to cop the pewterware over Leafs than would be the Wings. Odds on this battle are quoted by Montreal at 2-5 for Canucks to bring home the silverware, because they were superior to the Maplecs during the regular schedule. So were the Detroit Wings so that is conceivable, and look what happened to them when the strengthened Leafs struck boldly, savagely and efficiently.

The Gananoque Legion plastered a 13-3 shellacking on the Hospeler veterans in the third game of their Intermediate "A" semi-finals series, and the Gane look good enough to cop the title, George Campbell, writing in the Oshawa Times commented on the game as follows: "In the O.H.A. Intermediate "A" semi-finals at Gananoque Monday night the Gananoque Legion walloped Hospeler Legion 13-3. This was the third and it makes one wonder how Hospeler ever managed to win the game "at home." However, there is nothing to it last night after they got going and an 8-goal spurge in the second stanza clinched the issue. Members of the Hospeler team moved out of the law, drew misconduct penalties and one N. Dyer, got a match misconduct. They were lucky to get off that easy but they certainly make themselves heard. Were a bit rough too—three fist-and-fight bouts. "Bill" Hastie, who played Junior with the Toronto Marlboros in 1937, was the hero for Gananoque." Gananoque meet Port Colborne in the final series.

Meanwhile Ned Vitarelli's Peterborough Legionnaires, playing the same inspired hockey which swept them through a touch schedule have their sights lined on that Senior "B" title. The Vitarelli machine took their measure 7-3 on Grimsby Peach Kings in their titular rush, and now await the final test in the Senior "B" playing-off round. Harvard and his potent firing lines and backed up by a sterling defence, the Peterborough crew played brilliant combined hockey from the time the first puck was dropped until they hoisted high the pentalon of semi-finals victory. They have come up the hard way to reach the finals, and have to take no neck of the woods are pulling for them to win provincial honors. More power to 'em.

Austen Watkins' hard-striking Belleville Pappas Billiards basketball intermediates went down to close defeat over the weekend bowing to the strong Toronto Broadview YMCA quintet by a few points on the round. The Toronto team was their home game by a margin of five points but this was not sufficient to overcome the 13-point lead garnered by the city club in the first meeting of the squads. Pappas, however, proved one of the best intermediate teams to come out of this city and district in many years and the boys should add three suffering squads in their quest for the title. They proved a distinct credit to themselves, their city and their sponsors. Better luck next year.

Here's something a friend of ours sent in, which might prove useful to the fishing fraternity: If you know the length and girth measurement of a fish you can find its approximate weight by multiplying its length (in inches) by its girth and then dividing by forty. A fish measuring 20 inches in length has measure twelve inches long and ten inches in girth. Multiplying twelve by ten gives you one hundred twenty, which, divided by forty, gives three—so your bass should weight approximately three pounds.

To measure a bass without a tape use a cigarette. Any of the standard popular brands of cigarettes are two and three-quarter inches long. King-sized cigarettes measure three and one-quarter inches. You are now ready to perform the trick. First, measure the length and girth of the bass with a cigarette. Then multiply the length by the girth and divided by forty.

Halifax, April 5 (CP)—Through the years hockey and baseball pundits have almost worn themselves out trying to answer the question: Are players born or made?

The answers have been varied. Some maintain that good coaching is the important factor which gives Canadians the edge in hockey and Americans in baseball. Others say native ability is more important.

The two schools of thought were pitted against each other last weekend in Halifax. New York Rangers' Pee Wees, a miniature edition of the National Hockey League club coached by several of the parent team's top flight stars, angled with Halifax Toppers, a bunch of hockey-crazy kids who had been batting a tin can or puck around the ponds.

Toppers, Nova Scotia bantam champions, took the two-game, total-goal series for the unofficial international bantam title by a 6-4 margin. The result led Jack (Halifax Chronicle-Herald) Nickerson to comment that Toppers had "demonstrated that intensive ability is more important than first-class coaching."

Nick says the Halifax kids won "mostly skating and their opposition. The youngsters from New York and vicinity are lucky if, during the season, they have three weeks' skating on open-air lanes."

If that conclusion, based on the result of the bantam series, is correct, the United States will never produce many top-notch hockey players because of the lack of skating facilities.

And it would have another effect. It would shatter the two-colored dream of some Americans that the admission all American-born players on the four American N. H. L. clubs some day.

Claims Speeders Not Prosecuted

Oshawa, Ont., April 5 (CP)—Alderman Finley M. Dafoe suggested Monday night that 'some persons stopped for speeding in Oshawa were not being prosecuted because of their position.

He told city council "there are charges being made at Belleville that 'some speeders there have let off due to their position . . . I have had it suggested to me that similar things happen here."

It was an apparent reference to charges made in a Royal Commission investigation in Belleville, that K. B. Jolliffe, Ontario C.C.F. leader, was severely warned when stopped for speeding there in the midst of his provincial election campaign last year.

Ald. Dafoe suggested "perhaps political strings are being pulled here too, people should not be let off, regardless of who they are."

He recommended that the mayor, as 'a member of the police commission, should investigate.

Seventh Game Will be Played To Decide Winner

(By The Associated Press)

The final-round pairing of the American Hockey League's Calder Cup playoffs will be decided tonight in Providence where the Reds clash with St. Louis Flyers in the seventh and deciding game of their semi-final series.

St. Louis the western division's regular season winners, is in the best physical condition, since the series started on March 22. The retired to action of defenceman George Milligan, who missed the first two games because of a bad knee, has helped considerably.

The Reds, eastern flag winners, are also topped by the loss of Fred Michaluk, one of the best defencemen in the league.

One factor in favor of the Reds is that the game is in their home ice. The Reds never have lost to St. Louis at home this year while St. Louis has dropped a game to the Reds in St. Louis.

The winner will meet Hershey Bears in the first game of the best-of-seven final series in Hershey Tuesday night. The second and third games will be at either Providence or St. Louis Saturday and Sunday. The fourth game will be at Hershey next Tuesday night.

Providence or St. Louis will be the site of the fifth game if necessary, April 14. The sixth, if necessary, will be at Hershey, April 16. Should a seventh game be needed it will be at Providence April 17 or at St. Louis April 19.

Requests Charges By Bob Crosby Be Investigated

Windsor, April 5 (CP)— Investigation of charges that two players on the Windsor Spitfires O.H.A. junior team, were over-age, was demanded Monday by Spitfire manager Lloyd Pollock.

Pollock's demand, in a telegram to O.H.A. assistant secretary George Dyment, followed a statement by Bob Crosby, secretary of the Northern Ontario Hockey Association.

Crosby said Sunday that seven over-age players were in the O.H.A. junior loop but amended Monday by saying that he did not have the facts to back up his charges. His original statement was not intended for publication he said.

O.H.A. officials said Monday they would call on Crosby to provide proof to back up his statement or retract his charges.

Tommy Yarosz Defeats Sand, Aussie Champ

London, April 5 — (AP)—Back in 1936 when trainer Reg Arcel handled middleweight Tommy Yarosz that he taught a little shaver how to box. The 12-year-old eager beaver was Teddy's brother, Tommy.

Arcel, manager and trainer of the 27-year-old army veteran from Monaco, Pa., asked for the title shot after the latter defeated Dave Sands, Australian triple champion, in a 10-round bout in Harringay Arena Monday night.

A sellout crowd of 10,000 gave the skilful American a thunderous ovation for his upset triumph of the Australian middleweight, light heavyweight and heavyweight champion.

It was the sixth straight triumph this year for the busy battler and his most important victory. Yarosz came out of the fight with a $5,000 purse and a swollen left forearm.

The lanky Pennsylvanian's thrilling duel with a fast left jab and with his counter-punching — two things that figure high in the British boxing book.

Sands, 26-year old scrapper who had cleaned up all opposition from 160 pounds up in his home country, hurt the forearm with a right to the head in the second round. He was never able to throw the clever Yarosz after that. Yarosz had a 165 to 160 weight edge.

The capacity crowd paid around $60,000 to see the American counter the touted Australian. They also saw another American, Tony Janiro of Youngstown, O., stop Gwyn Williams of Wales in the eighth round of another scheduled 10.

The 151-pound Janiro took no chances on the referee. He decked Williams for seven in the second round and floored him three times for eight in the eighth before the referee halted the one-sided contest.

Training Camp Notes

(By The Associated Press)

Lee Durocher, manager of New York Giants, and Branch Rickey, of Brooklyn Dodgers, met at El Paso, Tex., Monday and talked baseball, but no deals came out of the meeting.

Manager Burt Shotton of Brooklyn Dodgers appears to have decided on a regular outfield. After experimenting with several different trios he apparently has decided on Carl Furillo, Duke Snider and Cal Abrams as his first string.

Manager Eddie Sawyer says his Philadelphia Phillies will not be a "soft touch" for any club in the National League this season. We didn't outclass anybody in exhibition games," he said, "but at the same time we were not outclassed by any other club."

Pitcher Don Black of Cleveland Indians will not travel eastward with the Tribe on their current exhibition stadium swing. Black will work out at the training base at Marianna, Fla., manager Lou Boudreau said, "Because he can't get the right kind of conditioning on the road." He was gravely ill after a brain haemorrhage suffered last fall.

Canadiens Have Chance to Take It All in Game

Detroit, April 5 — (AP)—Detroit Red Wings and Montreal Canadiens pick their hopes for survival in the Stanley Cup playoffs into a single scallop here tonight when they meet for the seventh and deciding time in their semi-final series.

Each club has won three games in a nip-and-tuck set that already has lasted two weeks. Winner of tonight's game moves into the cup finals against Toronto Maple Leafs — an outfit that has won the prized trophy three times in the last four years.

Montreal, all but booted out of the playoffs here last Thursday when Detroit won 3-1 to take a 3-2 edge in games, came back Saturday to deadlock the series again, winning by the same score.

Now the Wings, who led the league almost all season to win the National Hockey League championship, are the team on the spot as third-place Montreal girds for an upset.

Detroit hopes hinge closely around the scoring efforts of Gordon Howe, the 20-year-old goal-getting star of the first six games, who now has seven goals for the series and is within five of the playoff record of 12 set by Montreal's Maurice (Rocket) Richard in 1944.

Rink - aiders are of the general opinion that Howe's scoring outburst was stemmed from the strategy of Montreal coach Dick Irvin of concentrating the Canadiens' defence against Gordie's running-mate, Ted Lindsay.

The Detroit line of Howe, Lindsay and centre Sid Abel has been carrying the brunt of the attack so far and is expected to do so again tonight.

Montreal again will bank heavily on a newly-organized forward unit of Richard, Gerry Plamondon and Joe Carveth, which produced all three goals in the sixth game at Montreal.

Not Positive Who Conceived Reserve Clause

By TED SMITS

New York, April 5 (AP)— No one knows for sure who conceived baseball's reserve clause.

The evidence points to A. H. Soden, President of the Boston club when the National League was organized in 1876.

That is the opinion, too, of Frederick A. Johnson, long a student of baseball and now in charge of it as counsel for Danny Gardella. He has suit which baseball club owners and players- alike are closely surveilled.

Right from the start of professional baseball in 1872 there was an unwritten agreement among owners not to bid for each other's players.

In 1880 the clause was put in contracts, each National League club reserving five players. Last year each free agents. In 1883 the figure was raised to 11, to 12 in 1884, and 14 in 1887. From then on it became universal. Every professional ball player in organized baseball for 20 years has been "reserved"—has agreed, every time he signs a contract, that he will sign again the following year with the same club.

Soden was the chief, for this protective device because he was a shrewd businessman and—because he had practical experience. The stage first reserved star performers.

First Attack in 1880

The first attack on the baseball reserve clause came in the 1880s with the formation of the Baseball Players' Brotherhood, a union aimed to deal with the owners. Connie Mack and Charles Comiskey were two early players. They later became club owners.

Baseball writers set up a howl about the brotherhood.

One of them described leader of the brotherhood as "a few porcine professionals who, in their selfishness and love of gold, tried to destroy the reserve rule."

The brotherhood set up a player's league in 1890, but it soon folded up. The National League players from then on, however, got more pay.

One of the bitterest fights on reserving developed when Ban Johnson started the American League in 1900 and lured away National League stars despite the clause. There was a flurry of court action but in 1903 the American and National Leagues teamed up to form "organized baseball."

Yes, that is the same American League the leaders of which are really worried over the present attack on the reserve clause.

Hockey Players Sell Career by Signing C Form

Conny Smythe had the right information when he said Danny Lewicki, the Fort William boy who played with Toronto Maple Leafs with Stratford, last season, will line up with one of the Toronto club's next season. "He's bound to. Next year he won't play at all." The fact is Smythe can make it stick.

Smythe's mouthful takes in a lot of territory, including the Ontario Hockey Association and its parent body, the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, which still has some say about the game — but how much! — in the country as Danny can be stopped from playing amateur or pro if he doesn't toe the line.

Blame "C" Form

The cause of it all is the "C" contract. Danny signed with Toronto Maple Leafs. He put his signature to it when he was under hockey's "age of consent," and there's a legal loophole there, but as far as the National Hockey League, the C.A.H.A., the O.H.A. and Smythe are concerned, it will be enforced because next season Danny will be of age, which is 18. Danny is said to want to play with Stratford next year. That's 50 season, but he'll do what Smythe tells him or be suspended from any kind of hockey. When he signed the "C" form he sold his hockey career.

They Can't Win

"If he refuses to play where the Leafs tell him, Toronto can ask for a suspension and we'd have to honor it," George Dudley of Midland, Ont., secretary-manager of the C.A.H.A., said in a telephone interview. "This applies to Stratford or any other amateur club.

"From a legal standpoint it might not stick, but that is it."

Maybe Danny by this time figures his future is with the Leafs or one of their farm clubs, but in this writer's opinion this doesn't matter. Any organization which owns, or any other hot-shot player can tie him in a minor, do about it? He can go to court. But legal fees are expensive and the kid or his parents haven't the money to pay high-priced lawyers.

Hockey is big-time stuff and can bring powerful legal guns to bear.

Cost-of-Living Index Reduced 3-10th of Point

Ottawa, April 5 (CU)— Declining food prices once again have sent the cost of living index into lower ground.

The Bureau of Statistics reports the April 1 index, totalling some $1,251,300 annually were granted Monday night by Toronto city council after deciding given a 94 weekly bonus to 4,800 regular employees earning less than $3,909 a year and to 1,000 - odd temporary workers. An additional bonus of $1 was granted to members of the Toronto Municipal Employees' Association. It was retroactive to Jan. 1.

The bonus grants will continue until the cost-of-living index, now standing at about 190, falls below 166.

Lack of Orders Cutting Back Production

New York, April 5. (AP)—A lack of orders is cutting back production in many industries, the paper manufacturing industry in the United States.

But most industry, spokesmen feel it is a temporary condition. Business generally has slipped from a sellers to a buyers market. Management no matter likes it is becoming more cautious. Many industries are watching inventories.

And spokesmen for the papermakers think recent cutbacks in their industry are following the trend in other types of business.

Hardest hit to date in the paper industry have been the paper-machine manufacturers in the southern States.

Ed St. Jos Paper Company of Port St. Joe, Fla., which employs 500, closed down because of lack of orders late last week.

The International Paper Company's Mobile, Ala., plant closed for a week. Several thousand workers were affected and "general economic conditions" were given as the cause.

The cutbacks have not yet extended to all types of paper-goods manufacturing.

Newsprint, high-grade tissues and a few other items are in short supply. Demand is strong for the industry add, some papers, paper board and paper products have outrun demand.

But many industrial executives report a slight falling off of orders in the Kraft Paper industry. Such, however are not being substantial increase in business to the near future.

Both associations said bookings in the first quarter had up comparatively well in recent weeks.

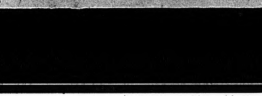
400 More Beds For T.B. Patients Made Available

Toronto, April 8 — (CP) — Four hundred more beds for tuberculosis patients will be made available in Ontario this year, Health Minister Kelley said.

A new sanitarium will be built at Sudbury to accommodate 128 beds. New wings will be built to sanitaria at Ottawa and Fort William. The Ottawa addition will accommodate 132 more patients and the Fort William wing, 75.

Seventy-five additional beds will be available at the Kingston hospital, a Dominion building, used in wartime for military patients and later purchased by the province. Mr. Kelley said there were still some military patients there but beds would be available for 75 civilian patients.



Mr. Kelley estimated today cost of new construction in the three other hospitals would be $6,000 or $7,000 a bed. The Ontario government makes a grant of $2,000 a bed and the Dominion government $1,500.

The Ontario government had asked for a federal grant for the Kingston hospital, Mr. Kelley said, because the province had made a "satisfactory deal."

It is a good idea to keep the bidding low. But it can become a bad habit. Even with enough for an opening of two, some players open with a bid of one. Just to keep the bidding low.

There was this tournament deal:

Several south players opened with one club or one spade. This was certainly hiding from partner some valuable information to which he was entitled. No excuse for it.

Surely south expects to reach a game in something. And if his partner can show any kind of encouragement, slam will be beckoning in the vicinity. Very little help is needed for slam.

On the other hand, partner may pass an opening of one. To such an opening he is not obligated to bid with less than three tricks. Is it wise to take such a chance of passing up a cinch game?

The bidding should go like this:

South	North
1 C	2 D
2 S	3 NT
4 S	4 S
4 NT	5 D
6 S	Pass

Having bid clubs before spades, south says the clubs are longer. Having valid spades, south says they are at least five in length. So, he must have six clubs. Consequently, only two red cards.

When a suit is bid twice it must be at least five cards long. When a longer rank is bid first, it is longer. When one of two shown suits is rebid, partner is asked for a choice. North shows the choice by taking to spades on the third round.

The opening lead was heart king. The safe play is apparent.

LESTER B. PEARSON SIGNS NORTH ATLANTIC PACT FOR CANADA

The alliance of the non-Communistic western world—the North Atlantic treaty—was signed Monday in Washington by Canada and 11 other countries intent on pooling their defences against Russia. Lester B. Pearson, Canadian secretary of state for external affairs, was the Dominion's representative at the signing of the 20-year alliance. Mr. Hume Wrong, Canadian ambassador to the U.S. and Mrs. Wrong, were on hand to welcome Mr. Pearson in Washington. Left to right are: Mrs. Wrong, Mr. Wrong, Mrs. Pearson, Mr. Pearson and Stanley Woodward, U.S. state department chief of protocol.—Central Press Canadian.

CANADIAN FARMERS START PLOWING IN MAY — BERLINERS BUSY NOW

Farmers in this country do not start plowing their land for spring planting until May or early part of June but it is plowing time in Berlin. In the desolation that once was the city's famed Tiergarten, two hopeful Berliners plod along behind their horses as they plow for a vegetable garden. The new statue of a moose is a remnant of the one-time grandeur of the Tiergarten, popular with Germans and pre-war tourists.—Central Press Canadian.

AT THE CAPITOL — Edward Arnold as Charlie Chan, and Mantan Moreland appear in the latest hit, "The Shanghai Cobra." On the same program, the best seller, "The Walls of Jericho," starring Cornel Wilde, Linda Darnell, Anne Baxter and Kirk Douglas. Matinee daily at 2.00 p.m.

AT THE BELLE — Bride and Groom. In her most engaging role, Olivia de Havilland has been wooed, won and married by Montgomery Clift. "The Snake Pit," starring Miss de Havilland, now on the Belle Theatre screen.

By BOB THOMAS

New York, April 5 (AP) — How does a Broadway first night compare with a Hollywood premiere?

Now I've seen both. I attended the opening of Thomas Mitchell and Walter Abel in "Biggest Thief in Town," which seemed to me a slow-starting but amusing comedy. The other show on the theatre side of the footlights was just as interesting to me.

A Broadway opening seems less frenzied then filmtown blowouts. I counted but four cops outside the Mansfield Theatre and less than 50 rubbernecks. A dallies-tessen opening draws more than that in Hollywood.

Of course, there were no searchlight; they don't seem to be used in New York at all. I saw only one photographer and one amateur photographer. They found little interest. The only names I spied were Boris Karloff and Roland Young.

Fewer Beauties

The audience dressed better than those at Hollywood premiers, but there were fewer beauties. Only a few showed up in formal attire. At least there were no leisure jackets and moccasins.

For what it lacks in glamour, the New York opening makes up in excitement. There's a thrill about a first night; the sport of watching whether a show will be a hit or flop. There doesn't seem to be as in-between.

The critics occupy the centre of attention. Their grins or frowns can make or break a show.

Hick's Impressions

A Hollywood Hick's impression of a first visit to the big town. . . .

The excitement of the Times Square signs, each trying to outdo the others.

The massive backstage of the Radio City Music Hall, more like a factory than a theatre. . . . And friendliness of the natives. . . . And it's supposed to be a tough town!. . . .

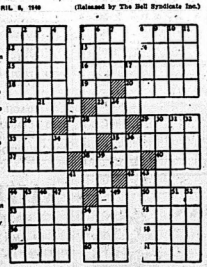
SCOTT'S SCRAP BOOK By R. J. SCOTT

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was opening her mail at breakfast, saying to pop, Well William, what do you know?? I'm a full fledged citizen. Here's a summons for me to appear for jury duty, she said.

It's going to take up a lot of our time for a while, pop said. Now do you feel about it?? he said, and ma said, I feel honored and I feel privileged.

Good, that's 2 good feelings, pop said, and ma said, After all, is there any greater influence in the world than justice?



I just think of any, unless perhaps it's injustice pop said, and ma said, When you stop to realize that only a few short hundreds of years ago, innocent people were being burned at the steak in the name of justice, it's really inspiring to know that we're living and breathing in an age when people are judged by a jury of their free and equals, just as you and I would be ourselves if conditions were unfortunately reversed, dont you think, so, William?

Well, that was rather a long sentence, pop said, like a choke and say I think so, pop said, and me said, I realize it would mean giving up my afternoon bridge and other social activities, but that would be a small price to pay for the honor of excepting such a great civic service. It seems just too bad that I have a retiring nature and dont get along well with strangers, so I'm hardly the type to be suddenly thrown among eleven totally unknown people. Do you think the judge will be broad minded enough to except that as a reason for excusing me from jury duty? he said.

Well yes, if he also has a doctors certificate that you are home with a broken leg, pop said. Being sourcastic.

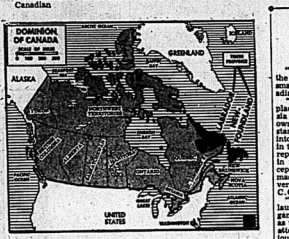
St. John's, Newfoundland, Ceremony Marks Island's Confederation With Canada



A simple ceremony in St. John's saw Newfoundland become Canada's tenth province after 400 years as a British colony. Here Sir Edward Emerson, right, administers the oath of office to Sir Albert J. Walsh, Newfoundland's first lieutenant-governor. Following the administration of oath, Col. Gibson presented Sir Walsh with a token certificate of Canadian citizenship.—Central Press Canadian.

Members of the provisional Newfoundland cabinet include: front row (left to right): W. J. Keough, Premier J. R. Smallwood, H. W. Quinton. Back row (left to right): Gordon A. Winter, L. R. Curtis, K.C., Dr. R. L. Pottle, C. Ballam, S. J. Hefferton, Philip Forsey, M. J. Sinnot, M. B. K. — Central Press Canadian.

Parliament—Ottawa, not London, to be Newfoundland federal seat Since its discovery, Newfoundland has been one of the greatest fishing centres of the world. Today its fish, its mines and pulp and paper products from its forests are its major exports. Because of many predict that its beauty spots will attract many tourists. — Central Press Canadian.

DARK AREA SHOWS CANADA'S TENTH PROVINCE

During World War II Newfoundland was a strategic site of important Canadian and U.S. bases for the Battle of the Atlantic and the struggle to get supplies to Britain for the invasion of Europe. The island virtually spans the mouth of the St. Lawrence river, vital 2,000-mile inland waterway that links the Atlantic with the Great Lakes.—Central Press Canadian.

TRUMAN TO ASK

The arms program . . . probably will provide between $1,200,000,000 and $1,500,000,000 for American help in rearming the European members of the alliance. The balance of the funds would go to aid other non-Communist countries such as Greece, Turkey and Iran.

Officials said that no action toward forming the 12-member council can be taken until the treaty comes into force, but plans for the organization and the defence committee under it can be worked out ahead of time.

The actual enforcement of the pact depends on its being ratified by the seven countries which originally drafted it.

Pact Signed Quickly

The other powers signing Monday were The Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, Norway, Denmark, Iceland, Portugal and Italy.

Including the speeches the ceremony took less than two hours. The actual signing of the historic document, which gives a new turn to the course of post-war world history, required approximately 13 minutes.

The first signature was affixed by Belgium's Foreign and Foreign Minister, Paul-Henri Spaak.

L. B. Pearson, Canada's Minister of External Affairs, signed for the Dominion.

Pearson said the pact gives "the promise of greater security and stability than we possess today." He urged that the treaty's promises be converted into performance less it "remain no more than yet another expression of high but unattainable ideals."

President Truman, like all 12 of the Foreign Ministers sounded the theme of peace as emanating the major purpose of the new alliance.

Truman called the pact a simple document, but added:

"If it had existed in 1914 and in 1939, supported by the nations which are represented here today, I believe it would have prevented the acts of aggression which led to two world wars."

Acheson declared that for those who seek peace the treaty "is a guide to refuge and strength. Its very present help in trouble."

Then continuing to use biblical phrases, he declared:

"For those who rest their feet upon the path of aggression, it is a warning that if it must needs be that offences come, then woe unto them by whom the offence cometh."

Bevin said that the countries signing the treaty "are composed of peace-loving peoples with spiritual affinities . . ."

"Our needs do not want and do not glorify war," Bevin said, "but they will not shrink from it if aggression is threatened.

The emphasis on the non-aggressive nature of the treaty as its sponsors see it obviously was recognition of Moscow's persistent propaganda throughout the world that the alliance is in fact an aggressive move against the Soviet union.

What moves Russia may take to counter the North Atlantic line-up continues to be a prime subject of speculation here. Most diplomats look to the United Nations Assembly opening in New York next month to provide new clues as to the future course of Soviet policy.

BODIES OF VICTIMS

There were more than 100 persons in the 125 bed hospital, Police said. The injured were removed to their homes or to a clinic. Some were reported to have been removed to hospitals in nearby communities.

Ben Selderhorn, 38, a male nurse at the hospital said he was awakened by a sister who told him she smelled smoke coming out of the clothes chute.

Whole Bath of Flame

"I went out there and it seemed like the place was a whole bath of flame," he said. "Then I headed for the elevator, but it would not work. So I ran to get out and called to the patients.

"There were about 30 patients on the third floor. I don't believe any of them got out."

Mrs. Arnold Alderman, 24, jumped from a second-floor window.

she was taken to a nearby home where she gave birth. Her physician said she was "coming along fine." The other woman, Mrs. Wenston Bidner of St. Elmo, was taken to a clinic where her child was born. Mother and child were described as in "good condition."

One sister, who refused to give her name to reporters, was nearly hysterical. She said one of the nurses assigned to the nursery remained with the infants there and perished with them.

Relatives of patients rushed to the hospital, frantically searching for kinfolk. The crying relatives groped from person to person in a tragic search for a familiar face.

Temporary headquarters were set up in what is known as the hospital barn. Patients rescued were brought there.

Patients were being moved to nearby homes and the barn was being prepared as a temporary morgue.

ISOLATE

"Those who follow slavishly the Communist party line are a small minority within the Canadian Congress of Labor.

"The few who consistently place the interests of Soviet Russia above the interests of our own country have in some instances maneuvered themselves into a position of authority within their union. These people have repeatedly, and more frequently in recent months, refused to accept decisions democratically made by representatives of a very large majority of the C.C.L. membership.

"At the same time they have launched, within their own organizations and publicly, so far as they have been able to attract attention, a deliberate and vicious campaign designed to destroy all those who refuse to follow the dictates of the Communist conspiracy.

Red Destructiveness Shall Not Prevail

"It has long been a fundamental tactic of the Communist party that should it find itself unable to control, it will attempt to destroy . . . It is our firm intention that such an effort shall not succeed so far as labor in Canada, as represented by our organization, is concerned.

"Within our ranks and from other sources there is and will never has been any opposition to constructive criticism. We do not, however, propose to harbor within our house guests who deliberately attempt to poison the members of our family.

"Any person or group who, in this time of crisis, provides a cloak of respectability for such people is harboring in our midst potential traitors.

"The Canadian Congress of Labor has proven its leadership of Canadian labor. We propose to continue to provide that leadership. Canadian labor has found its strength, as has labor in other countries, in the Labor Party and program.

"We are too well aware that in Fascist and Communist countries labor has become a mere puppet of the state and free trade unions have ceased to exist. We do not intend that Canadian workers shall suffer that fate."

N.S. Setting Up An Unsatisfied Judgment Fund

By The Canadian Press

Nova Scotia is setting up an unsatisfied judgment fund, similar to Ontario's, to enable automobile accident victims to collect damages in cases where the driver responsible is in poor circumstances is not found.

At the same time, legislation given second reading at Halifax Monday provides for issuance of "financial responsibility cards" to drivers who establish proof of financial responsibility.

If a driver not carrying a financial responsibility card were involved in a motor accident resulting in death, bodily injury or damage amounting to more than $50, his license would be cancelled and the registration of the car withdrawn. The permit and license could be restored on furnishing of security to the amount of the damage and proof of future financial responsibility.

To set up the unsatisfied judgment fund, after next December the province is empowered to collect 50 cents from each motorist driver for payment into the fund. Continues Debate

The Ontario Legislature, which expects to prorogue Friday, continued debate on the government's charities bill. Attorney-General Leslie Blackwell, replying to opposition criticism, said the government is prepared to make two amendments to the bill, which seeks to prevent any charitable foundation from holding more than 10 per cent of the stock in a company.

The amendments would extend beyond three years the time allowed for disposal of shares of a business which operates as a charitable foundation and would permit the trustees of the foundation to buy up the 10 per cent of the shares which they have to dispose of under terms of the bill.

Budget debate was launched in the Manitoba legislature. E. A. Robson, leader of the C.C.F. opposition, said his party would oppose any government move to let a cost-plus contract for a hydro-electric project at Pine Falls on the Winnipeg River.

The New Brunswick legislature is the only other remaining parliament in session. The latest to prorogue was the Saskatchewan legislature, which on Saturday completed its 1949 sessional business.

"Feel Decidedly Better Since Taking Syntona"

Had Stomach Disorders Many Years. Got Sick Headaches, Dizzy Spells. Tells How He Got Relief.

MR. JOHN LEARMONTH

Many thousands of men and women every day use Syntona Herbal Compound for relief from disorders of stomach, kidneys, liver and bowels and associated symptoms such as digestive troubles, rheumatic pains, backaches, headaches and nervous, rundown feeling.

One example of the good results Syntona gives is found in the recent experience of Mr. John Learmonth, 212 Queen's Avenue, London, Ontario, who says:

"I suffered from stomach disorders for many years. Would get a full, heavy feeling and have so much gas and indigestion after eating that I would belch up hot, sour fluid, and often suffer for hours with heartburn. Was subject to headaches and dizzy spells and many days had no appetite at all.

"After reading about Syntona helping so many other people I got some and started taking it. Results were just decidedly better. Gas, sour stomach and heartburn is relieved for first time in years. I am free of headaches, and my appetite is greatly improved. I am very glad to let you know how much this medicine has helped me and am pleased to recommend it to others who suffer as I did."

Why not let this pure herbal medicine help you as it has so many others? It is inexpensive, easy to use, and contains no harmful drugs.

Syntona is sold and recommended in Belleville at DOLAN THE DRUGGIST.

Which Ear Is Yours?

What Type of Hearing Aid Should You Wear?

- Magnetic or Crystal Receiver?
- Should Left or Right Ear Be Fitted?
- Should Intensity Be Increased or Decreased After Initial Fitting?

To Attain Correct Hearing There is No Substitute for Proper Fitting

Satisfaction in a hearing aid depends so much on correct fitting. Hospitals of Army and Navy Veterans Rehabilitation Centers . . . being equipped with electronic accuracy . . . testing that does with electronic accuracy . . . proof of correct clearing "before-you-buy" proof of correct clearing power and volume . . . being that means lasting comfort.

Belmore's best recommendation is the more than 150,000 people who have been fitted. People who tell us happily how they've been "reborn" from silence.

You're running a serious risk if you're satisfied with anything less, just as painstaking fitting as specialist eye-glasses without a prescription. Consistently, Belmore has set the pace in the hearing aid industry—has been the largest distributor—has brought the hard-of-hearing the better ease and comfort in the better quality hearing.

Come in and visit our salon. See how the Selectone meter uses 144 different combinations to analyze your kind of hearing loss for correct fitting. Try it for yourself with one of our courtesy aids or we will call at your home. No obligation. Just let us know.

NOW, THE Beltone MONO-PAC ONE UNIT HEARING AID

No human ear alike in ear. Beltone's exclusive Selectone meter finds individual hearing needs. Never offered by

Beltone

They powerful, economical, Slips into pocket, purse. Fashion-right, ear's worth of hearing. Never offered by anyone else—said one lit!

WE'LL MEET AGAIN

By Margaret Gorman Nichols

Society reporters and columnists called Gay Van Avery "the girl with the golden voice," the blues' eyes, and the best figure in New York. And there was scarcely an edition that did not feature a photograph of her. Girls looked anxiously at pictures of Gay in her startling evening clothes, her smart riding clothes, and at her sport clothes when she attended the races.

Finally a man was photographed with her. He was tall and handsome and his darkness contrasted admirably with Gay's vividness. The man was Alan Riggs whom Gay loved and whom she was engaged.

Very often there was another figure with her. That was Macduff, the inky-black, lovable little Scottie. Macduff is a character you must remember.

There was Gay Van Avery you must meet. There is Diana, the mother, slim and beautiful and a true daughter of the aristocracy. There is Patti, her older daughter, spoiled, petulant with the face of an innocent child and eager little hands that reach out selfishly for everything she wants.

And there is Gay, fashioned by the Divine sculptor; Gay with a heart-shaped mouth, a cap of ringlets, and eyes of the color of the Italian sea; Gay, whose debut two years ago was the most publicized debut of any girl in the land, who inherited her dead father's courage, loyalty and who became the strength and balance of the little family when her father died.

I

It was autumn in New York and it was raining the day that Manhattan society turned out to witness the marriage of Patti to young and good looking Richard Miles.

The inspiring strains of the organ drifted into the anteroom of the church where the bridal party was assembled. Patti, a vision in white, fluttered nervously before the mirror, and a half dozen bridesmaids in blue dresses and wide hats fluttered about her. The drab room was fragrant with flowers and alive with excitement.

"Gay is the only cool one among us," said Lucia Baring. "Look at her."

And they all turned to look at Gay in her green dress and her short cut coat escaping the sides of the broad-brimmed hat.

From under the veil Patti's childish voice wailed, "Gay, are you sure everything has been packed? Oh, dear, what is mother doing? Why isn't she here? I've probably left half my things behind! I'm going to miss you all so much. I don't know a soul in Washington and Richard's people are so stuffy! I don't want to go to Europe at all. I don't know," she cried in a broken whisper, "what I want to get married at all! I'm so young!"

Lucia said, "Gay, for heaven's sake, say something to her! She's marrying a 'catch' and doesn't know it."

"I don't want to leave mother and Gay," said Patti, daubing powder on her pert little nose. "I don't know how to do anything! I don't know the first thing about managing a house and servants . . . Oh!" she asked, lifting her chin and looking at herself in the mirror, "look beautiful enough for half of New York to look at me?"

"Like an angel," said Beta Morrison.

Gay was thinking of Alan. He'd be in the church and he would look everywhere for him. Gay's heart sang when she found him and they'd give him by their tenderness and warmth an unspoken knowledge of her love. There was no one like Alan. There never had been since the night she had looked across the shoulder of the young man with whom she was dancing and, looking across a rosy-lighted ballroom, had seen a man for whom she had unconsciously been looking all her life. Alan was tall and his sorrow, with dark eyes and a deep voice with a warm ring to it. Alan — who had loved a hundred women before that night.

When they were married, she thought, they'd have none of this fuss and excitement. No gaping people, no photographers, no elaborate reception. They'd just go off together and their wedding day would be their memory and not the memory of a thousand curious people. When she and Alan were married . . . the thought was like a breathless beautiful song . . .

Diana, her mother, dressed in long blue velvet, came in, her young looking face flushed, her short, crochet young tres in her strength and honesty and beauty. She thought, "I'm her mother and yet she amazes me. Life wouldn't have been so smooth after Stephen's death if I had not had Gay. Soon I'll lose her to Alan. But they're so beautiful together, so right together, she and Alan—

And so Patti and Richard were married.

Walking down the aisle after the ceremony, Gay saw Alan. Other faces were obliterated — his emerged out alone.

He smiled at her. Gay's red hair and the vivid colors she favored were made other girls drab. He had not wanted to love her. He was cynical where love was concerned. Ambitious and rather, poor but equipped with an impressive family background and excellent education, he had set out to marry money. He had followed Lucia Baring, Gay's friend and an heiress, from Florida to New York to propose to her. And the same night he had seen Gay, wearing a white dress . . . He hadn't been able to see Lucia after that. Like a man bewitched, he'd proposed that night, knowing he could not merely play at love with her, but he'd succeed. Christmas time in a room filled with the scent of holly and flowers. Her brown kiss had been her answer. Add Alan's fears for their financial security were shattered when her father had said, "I want you two youngsters to be happy. I used to want you to scrape. Scraping poisons love. I'll give you a big wedding and keep you decently." On New Year's Day Stephen died from a heart attack, and Alan supposed, though he had not asked, that Stephen had provided for his and Gay's security.

• •

The wedding reception was in progress. Diana moved among her guests, a set mechanical smile curving her mouth. Richard and Patti were standing by the revolving clothes. Macduff had scampered from the clamor to the solitude of under the bed. There was too much gayety and music and noise for Macduff.

In a corner of the room were Gay and Alan. She had taken off the hat, and her red curls fitted her small proud head like an exotic flower.

She put her hand on his shoulder and looked at him. There were times when she had to touch him to make herself believe he wasn't a figure in her young dreams had created. When she and Patti were little, Patti always said, "I want to be rich when I grow up." Gay had always said gravely, "I want to love some one terribly," and her young imagination had created a man that was Alan.

"It's over now," she said. "We can be together again."

"You're lovely, Gay."

"I want to be lovely only for you."

"Don't say such things and don't look at me like that. When am I going to see you again?"

She moved away. "Tea — tomorrow afternoon at four."

"I have serious business to discuss with you, Gay. Very serious darling."

"You mean—"

"Our wedding," said Alan and she moved away and was caught up in a throng of people. But she was never lost in a throng, he thought. Her hair was too bright.

BLACKHEADS

Get two ounces of peroxide powder from your druggist. Sprinkle on a tab. and cloth and apply to the face gently. Every blackhead will be dissolved. The tissues are cleansed and simple way to remove blackheads.

"I've never given my girls much advice, but be a good wife, darling. Don't complain. Co-operate and try to remember that Richard will have his side, too. Be faithful and be an inspiration and not a burden."

She looked at Gay. They were better friends than she and Patti had been. She had given a little advice to Gay who had an astonishing wisdom for her years. And she thought that Gay in her green dress was like a staunch, short, crochet young tres in her strength and honesty and beauty. She thought, "I'm her mother and yet she amazes me. Life wouldn't have been so smooth after Stephen's death if I had not had Gay. Soon I'll lose her to Alan. But they're so beautiful together, so right together, she and Alan—

"Our wedding," said Alan and she moved away and was caught up in a throng of people. But she was never lost in a throng, he thought. Her hair was too bright.

Our wedding, she thought. To live with Alan and never be separated from him. Never to put aside, "Come tomorrow." Patti didn't love Richard with a song in her heart and an excitement that took her breath away and that touched each deep emotion. Alan had said that it brought tears glistening in her eyes.

Patti, in a brown and yellow suit, and Richard sailed that afternoon for a prolonged honeymoon in Europe. Gay thought, waving, "Patti got what she wanted — a rich man." Diana looked at Patti through a veil of tears. "She won't have to fight what Gay and I have to face. Patti is safe," and she shivered, not from rain, but because she knew she was going back to the apartment that would be hers only a few days longer.

• •

That night when the apartment was quiet and Diana had removed all traces of the gay bedlam of that afternoon, Diana called Gay to her sitting room.

Her mother looked tired, Gay thought, as she lay on the chaise lounge. There were shadows beneath her eyes. Her small hand was nervous as she flipped the ashes from her cigarette.

She still looked like a slim graceful boy in green pyjamas and gold sandals.

Diana took a deep breath. "I hope you won't hate me for this, dear. I had to do it for Patti. I couldn't deny her what she's always wanted; a lovely wedding. I didn't spare anything." She sighed. "She can't face grim reality, Gay, but you and I must. That's why I waited until she was married to tell you that — that there isn't any money left."

Gay's eyes were fearful and she tried to subdue and fears for Alan that leaped into her mind. Everything — gone? It was incredible! They had always had so much!

"I don't want to sound selfish or mercenary," she said, low, "but father promised Alan and me—

"I know," said Diana, "but the

DISINTERESTED CATTLE—Cattle on the farm of Phillip Schoepp, near Edmonton, seem more interested in the photographer than in the well in the distance which is making Canadian oil history. The scene contrasts with the excitement of old-time oil rushes. Imperial Schoepp No. 1 well has encountered the greatest thickness of producing limestone yet recorded in Canada. Oilmen are hoping further wells will show that the limestone exte nds over great enough area to mean establishment of a new oil field. (CP Photo)

RECORD WELL—Biggest current development in Alberta's oil fields is Imperial Schoepp No. 1 well, 22 miles southwest of Edmonton. So far drillers have gone through more than 500 feet of limestone, more than three times Redwater's producing thickness of limestone. Limestone is the formation in which oil is found, water and chemicals used in drilling, being burned off in a flare several hundred feet from the well. (CP Photo)

Golden Spike Adds Colorful Chapter to Alberta Oil, Has Record-Breaking Formation

By FORBES RHUDE

(Canadian Press Business Editor)

Canada's oil saga is the new name in the Canadian West, the latest in Alberta's romantic story.

It is a small community some 22 miles southwest of Edmonton, near three Imperial Oil, Ltd., is drilling a well, and such stocks and other securities be promised you are worth nothing."

She uttered a little cry. "Oh, darling, it's not fair that Patti should have everything. I've been tortured by that! It's not fair! She bit her lip and said soberly, "You don't think that Alan would—"

"No! Of course not. But he — he doesn't like being poor any more than Patti does." She stroked her mother's hand. "Don't worry. We'll manage."

"We don't know what it is to be poor. Everything. We've had everything. He made snobs of us."

"Poor mother. All your gayety was superficial—"

"I didn't want to spoil anything for Patti." She sat up. "We'll have to sell everything and move to a small place. Oh, how you hate this, Gay!"

"I'll get a job."

"I've let you down so badly," said Diana. "If Alan loves you—"

"Oh, he does," she defended and smiled wanly. "You're very tired. Get some sleep. I'll think of something. We'll pull out of this together. Keep your chin up, darling."

Back in her own room, her brave words failed her. She was not brave! She was a snob!

There was no sleep for her that night. She sat down ushered in another dismal rainy day, she was sitting in a chair by the window with a silk coverlet over her knees. Gay — as she mumbled doubt him! He'd do the decent thing! He loved her. It was in his eyes, his face, his voice. Oh, everything would be all right!

• •

She had had Macduff out for a walk that afternoon in the dreary rain. When she returned to the drawing-room, Alan got up and Diana left them.

Gay pulled off her brown hat. Her red curls were damp.

"I can't drink tea," he said, "and make polite conversation. Your mother knows why I'm here."

Diana wanted to spare her the humiliation of explaining.

She bit back the tears. She could not bear his pity!

"I feel so badly," said Alan, "that things were so bad with your father."

He fumbled for a cigaret and lighted it. She was so lovely! How could he have left her? He had made himself the center of her existence, and Gay's father gave to the superficial love that most girls had. He touched her cool soft hair. Phillips up roots was a painful business . . .

Gay's green eyes were unsteady. He said, "It isn't fair to ask you to share what little I have. You'd hate it, Gay. You've been used to everything. I couldn't bear that what has passed between us during the months of our engagement should be tarnished with poverty. And poverty does things to people who haven't much character."

What was he saying? Alan, don't say it! She looked up, startled.

Pass of oil bearing limestone ever found in Canada; and tests give good promise that when it is brought into production it will be Canada's biggest individual producer to date.

Too Early for Confidence

One swallow doesn't make a summer, nor one well an oil field. The business is full of disappointments, of promises that failed, of rich pockets limited in area.

So it is too early to speak confidently of Golden Spike as another Leduc, which has some 200 producing wells; or another Redwater, now with some 15 wells but which promises to be at least as great as Leduc.

Accordingly the next thing to do is drill some more wells to see how far the productive limestone extends; and two are being started, No. 3 well three miles to the northeast and No. 3 well three and one half miles to the northwest.

The area of the field is called Golden Spike, but the particular name of the present "Discovery" well is Imperial Schoepp (pronounced Shep) No. 1, named for farmer Phillip Schoepp, on whose land it is located, whose cows continue to give milk whether or not the earth gives oil.

Ship's Officers Attacked by Mob At Halifax

20 Men Board Freighter And Carry off Two Engineers

Halifax, April 6 — (CP) — Violence flared briefly in Halifax early today and two ship's officers were admitted to hospital after being attacked by an unidentified mob.

The men, identified only as Charles Caddell and Harold Syverson, were engineers aboard the strike-bound freighter Sun Prince, one of 11 vessels tied up by a Canadian Seamen's Union (T.L.C.) deep-sea shipping strike.

It is believed about 20 seamen boarded the freighter, scene of an earlier disturbance, and took the engineers ashore either by force or persuasion. Later, they were beaten up. The face of one man was smashed up quite a bit and his companion limped.

R.C.M.P. dispersed the mob but aside from confirming that a fracas did occur, gave no further details. It was not known whether any arrests were made.

There were no official reports that members of the rival Seafarers' International Union (A.F.L.) had yet arrived in this port.

The S.I.U. last week signed working agreements with Canadian flag-owners. This contract precipitated the C.S.U. walkout.

30 Attacked by 20 Seamen

Tuesday's attack at the rail town of McAdam, N.B., about 30 members of the S.I.U., believed headed for Saint John to man ships covered in their contract with the Seafarers' International of Canada, were attacked by a group of seamen from Saint John, they claimed, were believed to be C.S.U. sympathizers.

R.C.M.P. held 25 Saint John seamen for questioning, but later they were released. The S.I.U. crews remained at McAdam after the fracas.

But for the incident aboard Sun Prince, the Halifax waterfront remained under an uneasy calm throughout the night.

First disturbance aboard the Sun Prince occurred Sunday when a group of unidentified seamen boarded the freighter. However, they left when a ship security guard sounded the alarm.

In the House of Commons Tuesday night Labor Minister Mitchell disclosed that the powerful anti-Communist International Longshoremen's Association, A.F.L., had put pressure on Canadian shipowners to ditch the C.S.U.

Mr. Mitchell said he given the Commons by the minister indicating the I.L.A. had threatened indirectly to have its U. S. membership refuse to handle cargo C.S.U.-manned vessels.

H. C. Meade, regional director of the C.S.U., said he was "convinced the men who boarded the Sun Prince and attacked the ship's officers were not members of the C.S.U.

"The attack has all the marks of imported American goonism," he added.

FAIRS TO REGISTER

Toronto, April 6 —(CP)— Harry Hammell, owner of a suburban tourist camp where two persons died of accidental asphyxiation in a gasoline explosion Tuesday for failing to register the names of guests, Police witnesses said the names of the people were not listed in the register and that Hammell had been warned Nov. 1 about non-registration of guests.

WELFARE PLANS FULLY DISCUSSED IN PARLIAMENT

Opposition Demands National Health Plan

Ottawa, April 6—(CP)— A daylong debate, on National Health Insurance in the Commons Tuesday ended inconclusively in a standard pattern of this session—the rehshing of the record of the Dominion Provincial conference.

It would seem health proposals of the 1945-46 sessions was touched off by a demand by CCF leader M. J. Coldwell for a precise statement on any government health insurance plans.

Health Minister Martin, Johnson the debate said the Dominion still adhered to its policy of 1945, when it proposed grants for health planning and organization to the provinces provided that they adopted compulsory health insurance.

George Drew, Progressive Conservative leader, followed the minister with a call for the reconvening of the co-ordinating and economic committees of the Dominion-Provincial conference with a view to getting the ball rolling for establishment of a national health plan.

In turn Mr. Drew was attacked by Defence Minister Claxton who believed the opposition leader's statement there had been full agreement among the provinces on the principle of a health insurance plan.

Mr. Claxton declared that at "no stage" of the conference had there been agreement on health insurance. Quebec opposed it, he said.

Mr. Drew retorted the agreement had come at close of argument had come at close of argument and recorded unanimously, so the minister would not find it in the record.

Had Been at Meeting

To that, Mr. Claxton — who had presided at the economic committee sessions — replied he had been there the whole time, and Drew had not. Just at adjournment time of the night session, a furore developed when Donald Fleming (PC — Toronto Eglinton) sought to introduce into the record a statement by Premier Duplessis of Quebec indicating that Quebec was "convinced the men who boarded the Sun Prince and attacked the ship's officers were not members of the C.S.U.

"The attack has all the marks of imported American goonism," he added.

FAIES TO REGISTER

Toronto, April 6 (CP)— Harry Hammell, owner of a suburban tourist camp where two persons died of accidental asphyxiation in a gasoline explosion Tuesday for failing to register the names of guests. Police witnesses said the names of the people were not listed in the register and that Hammell had been warned Nov. 1 about non-registration of guests.

General Federal Election Expected In June or July

Ottawa, April 6 — (CP)—Rumors — strictly without confirmation — flooded Tuesday about the corridors of the Parliament Buildings that a general federal election will be called for late June or early July.

For weeks election speculation has been a favorite after-dinner topic among parliamentarians. The summer range from June to October with June appearing to have a slight edge.

The man who pulls the trigger is Prime Minister St. Laurent—has kept mum. He has told reporters he doesn't know the date. Mandate of the government expires in mid-1950.

The Commons is scheduled to adjourn April 8 for a two - week Easter recess, reconvening April 25.

Mr. St. Laurent will tour Western Canada during the period and George Drew, Progressive Conservative leader, plans to visit Newfoundland and the Maritimes. M. J. Coldwell, C. C. F. leader, also likely will make some speeches.

The speculation has it that Liberal members of parliament will gauge the feeling of constituents during the recess and report back to the government.

Bow Ties on Canadian Delegates Catch United Nations Spotlight

New York, April 6 (CP)—Bow ties on the Canadian delegation to the United Nations caught spotlight.

Canada's diplomats favoring that neckwear:

Lester B. Pearson, 51, External Affairs minister who heads the 10 man Dominion delegation to the General Assembly, which opened here yesterday.

George Ignatieff, 42, 36 probably by youngest chairman of an assembly committee.

Principal adviser to the permanent Dominion delegation, Ignatieff was originally elected to manage the administrative and budgetary committee. His step into the shoes of Dana S. Wilgress Canada's new High Commissioner to London.

It was not secret that the U.N. secretariat plumped for the Russian born Ignatieff, although Canada was not urging his election just to keep a Canadian at the committee's helm.

Besides bow ties, Pearson and Ignatieff have an education in common. Both went to the University of Toronto and to Oxford.

Efficiency is one of Pearson's watchwords too. He was noted chairman of the political committee of the 1947 assembly which smashed out the plan for partition Palestine.

Pearson is scheduled to attend a Dominions conference in London later this month.

When he leaves, the delegation will be headed by Gen. A.G.L. McNaughton, Canada's permanent delegate to the U.N.

Their alternates are Ignatieff and Leon Mayrand, 46, of Montreal, head of the American and United Nations division of the department of external affairs.

Delegation advisers are: H. H. Carter, 30, Toronto; George K. Grande, 30, Montreal; J.H.C. Lewis, 34, Ottawa; and T.L.T. Pierre-Goulding, 31, Edmonton.

John Starnes, 31, Montreal, is secretary general of the delegation. Sidney Freifeld, 26, head of press relations for the Canadian Consulate in New York, is press officer.

PRINCESS MARGARET HUNTS THE FOX

Destiny mapped different routes through life for Britain's royal sisters, Princess Elizabeth and Princess Margaret Rose. Princess Elizabeth is destined one day to sit on the throne now occupied by her father and rule the shrunken empire. Inspector McNeill Testifies He Asked Keays be Not Moved To Peterborough District

District Inspector Edwin McNeill, head of the Peterborough, Ont., district provincial police, testified today at the Mackay Royal Commission investigation.

He told Mr. Justice Keiller Mackay that he had asked that Constable Keays be not transferred to Peterborough district as he felt he would be a "disturbing influence" among other officers.

A member of the O.P.P. since 1927 Inspector McNeill said he was "aware of the trouble in Belleville" and when consulted by Police Commissioner W. H. Stringer re Keays' transfer had asked that he be not transferred to his district.

Under cross-examination by Keays, witness admitted he had never worked with Keays and was asked if he did not think his opinion of Keays was unfair.

Carefoot Investigation

Inspector T. A. Monahan of the College of Physicians and Surgeons was next called. He testified in connection with the Carefoot investigation.

He said on the night of the search of the Carefoot residence Mrs. Carefoot did have the opportunity of using the telephone to secure counsel for her husband following his arrest on fraud charges. He said he had seen Mrs. McCaughan, Carefoot's partner in the three occasions. Const. Keays had been in the basement at the time.

Under cross-examination by Keays Inspector Monahan admitted that the Ontario Provincial Police would have been capable of conducting the Carefoot investigation without assistance from the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Keays referred to the Carefoot trials and suggested that all evidence had not been placed before the court. He said several bottles of liquid seized at the Carefoot home had been destroyed merely as colored water had not been produced as evidence.

"No, they were not" agreed the witness.

The witness would not completely agree with Keays that E. N. Carefoot was a charlatan.

"Well, he was certainly different from most of the medical men in practice that I know," was the reply.

Asks Inspector's Opinion

"From your experience as an investigator and considering the machines found at Carefoot's would you not say Carefoot was a charlatan?" pressed Keays.

"I cannot answer [illegible]" said the Inspector. Keays said the machines seized included one which was nothing more than "two light bulbs and a FRD cell."

Under cross-examination by Mr. Donnan the inspector stated it was general practice that complaints concerning the medical act were investigated by the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Inspector Monahan stated he was satisfied if charges under the Medical Act had been preferred either pleas of guilty or convictions would have resulted.

Mr. Donnan said Keays had advised that fraud charges under the criminal code should be laid.

Says no Opposition to Search Shown

Inspector Monahan stated that Mr. Donnan had shown no opposition to the search of the Carefoot home but had warned that this should be exercised in the execution of the warrant.

He said Dr. R. T. Noble, Registrar of the College of Physicians and Surgeons had expressed appreciation to Mr. Donnan for his co-operation in "the Carefoot matter."

Mr. Carefoot was acquitted by the magistrate on narcotics charge and was acquitted by a jury on the fraud charges.

398 Cases Handled by C A's Office

At the beginning of the year 398 cases were handled by the Crown Attorney's office in the years 1946-47-48.

The list included a total of 398 police court cases, inquests and fatal cases in addition to the county court, general sessions of the peace and Supreme Court sittings.

Dr. G. A. Stewart, local dentist testified with respect to a certain 32-20 Colt revolver that he had borrowed from Keays after that officer's transfer to Belleville in 1944. The witness said he had kept the revolver for about ten days when Keays had come to him with a letter asking for its return.

Dr. Stewart's evidence was introduced by Mr. Hobbs for the purpose of attacking the credibility of Keays, who at a previous court appearance had testified he had brought no revolver with him to Belleville.

Elmer E. Bowen of Port Stanley, former O. P. P. constable stationed at Belleville, testified in connection with the Carefoot investigation.

He said he had investigated Mr. Carefoot in 1945. He and Const. Keays had made separate investigations and had continued their reports. He had not asked Keays to come into the investigations.

CROWN PRODUCES STAR WITNESS IN CARR CASE

Says He Was Assigned To Conduct Spy Work

Ottawa, April 6 (CP)— The crown produced a sensational surprise witness in the Sam Carr case today—an American named M. M. Krieger who testified that a man named Ignacy Witczak assigned him in 1940 to go to Japan to do conspiratorial work for Russia.

The crown alleges that Witczak was a Russian agent for whom Carr obtained a false Canadian passport in 1945.

Krieger, an optometrist from Los Angeles, said he had met Witczak in 1938 when they were both students at the University of Southern California.

He said that Witczak had sworn both Krieger and Krieger's wife to an oath of loyalty to Russia before they took a boat. Witczak also gave him instructions on how to make contact with certain people in Japan and with the Russian Embassy.

However the couple never reached Japan because of the American-Japanese tension. They were removed from the boat at San Francisco by American officials.

Refused Offers

Krieger testified that Witczak later asked him to go to South America as a Russian agent. Krieger and his wife also refused this offer.

However, he had acceded to a request from Witczak for a report on United States Army Air Corps training. Krieger said he was in the Air Corps briefly in 1940 and was discharged honorably for health reasons.

Krieger said Witczak described himself as a Canadian citizen. He also said Witczak was a brilliant man with both a master's and doctor's degree.

The lawyer was called as a witness following appearance of Igor Gouzenko who contended that Sam Carr was used by the Russians in 1945 as a contact with an agent who was asked to get information and their detection.

F. B. I. Agent Heard

A second surprise crown witness was H. W. Davis who identified himself as a special F. B. I. agent in Los Angeles. He testified that the F. B. I. had both Witczak and Krieger under "close surveillance" from Oct. 23 to Nov. 21, 1945.

Earlier, Gouzenko's testimony was read to several persons previously named in spy trials.

Hard Labor Faces British Taxpayer For Another Year

—CRIPPS

Prices Higher for Cheese, Butter, Margarine, Meat

London, April 6 — (CP) — Sir Stafford Cripps, Chancellor of the Exchequer, today sentenced the British taxpayer to another 12 months of hard labor.

He presented the House of Commons with a 1949-50 budget denying any substantial tax cuts and raising the basic prices of some kinds of strictly-rationed food.

He defied the powerful Trades Union Congress, one of the Labor Government's principal supporters, by declining to lower the country's stiff purchase taxes. These range from 33 1/3 per cent to 100 per cent on a vast number of things sold at retail.

But Sir Stafford helped the little man by cutting one penny (1 2/3 cents) a pint from the tax on beer.

He also lowered duties on imported wines by two shillings (40 cents a bottle.)

Price of Cheese Up

Explaining his financial proposals for the next 12 months, the Chancellor said he proposed "to reduce the amount of money paid by the treasury in subsidies to hold down the price of rationed foods.

As a result, he said, the price of cheese will go up 16 2/3 pence (about six cents) a pound, meat will go up the same amount, butter will rise two pence (slightly less than four cents), and margarine one penny.

He said the import duty on tea will drop by sixpence and cut by 1½ pence — but it won't help the housewife. The cut would be applied to retail wholesalers on those commodities.

He published the industrial taxfree allowance on wear and tear on plants and machinery, making it 40 per cent of the cost of replacement.

In his budget, Sir Stafford declined to take even a penny off the stiff cigaret tax, which now makes a pack of 20 cost 3s 6d. (70 cents).

This has been one of the most popular hopes for relief.

His worst news for the ordinary householder was the price hike in foods. Sir Stafford said the prices increase was generously any ration allotment it makes necessary — will be borne by the food minister "at an early date."

April Will be Brightest Month For Britons Since Pre-War Days

By ALAN HARVEY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, April 6 (CP) — April promises to be Britain's brightest month since pre-war days.

Conditions have improved vastly during the last year. Controls are crashing down on all sides. Men and women are better dressed and stores are better stocked.

And—the lights of London and other cities and towns are blazing again.

Ten thousand electric street lights went on in London, April 2. Flood-lit store fronts beckoned to people who had walked darkened streets for years.

Still fares will be lowered this spring and there will be more train excursions to summer resorts.

Licences and quotas, permits and restrictions, all dreaded words to private industry, have been stripped off more than 100 items since April 24, children will be able to buy as much candy as they want for the first time since July 1942.

For the next three months milk will be off ration. Instead of 2 1-2 pints a week, Britons will have all the milk they want.

Eggs are no longer golden nuggets. Sometimes—if you're lucky —you now can buy as many as five in one week. Fresh vegetables are plentiful and fairly cheap.

Such cheeses as camembert and imported cream cheese are off the ration list and there is no limit to unsweetened biscuits to go with them.

The meat ration is down to 8d (about 16 cents) of fresh meat a week, but it looks as though Britons would rather be angry about the "meatless days" than about inadequate protein intake. A newspaper poll showed opinion to be 30 to 1, in favor of holding out against paying Argentina more money.

These improvements have considerable significance. Already the Conservatives claim Labor is facing up to preparation for the next general election, expected in 1950.

Another Conservative convention is that none of the improvements would have been possible without Marshall Aid.

Nobody put it quite as fiendishly as David Low, the London Standard's cartoonist. He pictured a United States Senate pointing in frozen horror at a group of British parliamentarians whose most conspicuous feature was a set of false teeth provided free under the national health service.

"Look at them!" the Senator says. Gnashing their teeth at us!"

DIVISION MAY COME TODAY ON CHARITIES BILL

Legislature May be Able to End Present Session by Friday Night

Toronto, April 6 (CP)—The Ontario Legislature may vote today on the government's charitable foundations bill.

Attorney-General Leslie Blackwell said in an interview Tuesday night that in his opinion the prolonged debate on the charities bill might end today and that the proposed legislation would be taken up in committee Thursday.

In that case, little else on the order paper, the house may vote to give the bill final reading Friday and end the 1949 session by Friday night. The session by Friday night. The session will be in its eighth week—normal for it in 11 government sessions—and the legislature this week is holding morning, afternoon and night sittings to end prorogation.

There were signs Tuesday night that debate on second reading of the charities bill was petering out. Members, speaking to a chamber which at times held only 12 opposition and 11 government supporters, were warned by the speaker against repeating arguments given earlier.

MELANCHOLY TASK CONTINUES OF REMOVING BODIES

Death Toll in Hospital Fire-Mounts to Estimated Eighty

Effingham, Ill., April 6 (AP) — The toll of 74 dead, and reported missing in the nation's second most tragic hospital fire was placed at 80 today by hospital officials.

They said 55 bodies have been recovered—two still unidentified — and 14 persons are listed as missing in Tuesday's fire at St. Anthony's Hospital.

National Guardsmen (militia) patrolled the hospital area and huge searchlights during the night flinted up the blackened rubble which believed to be covering the bodies of many victims. Only the metal walls of the 3½-story brick building stood. The hunt for additional bodies was retarded Tuesday as fire officials feared the walls might fall upon them.

Hospital Records Lost

Identification of missing was completed by Associated Press reporters at the scene, with the aid of official sources.

Records at the hospital, the only one in this south-central Illinois community of 8,600, were lost.

STONE THROWN THROUGH WINDOW

Stone and firecracker-throwing gangs of small boys were on the prowl again last night, according to complaints received by the police.

A stone zipped through a window on Catherine Street but the gang had disappeared by the time police arrived.

A firecracker hurled at a house on Chatham Street burned a hole in the verandah but the small blaze was extinguished before any serious damage was done.

Chief of Police Probert stated today that the boys responsible for these actions will be severely dealt with,when apprehended.

Eight Fire Alarms Answered, Two Fires Caused by Sparks

Bonfires, grass fires and burning leaves gave members of the local fire department a really healthy workout on Tuesday when no less than eight alarms being answered during the course of the day.

Two of the alarms were for buildings which had caught afire from sparks from bonfires set by residents who had the spring cleaning urge. Two other alarms were to the C.N.R. and C.P.R. railway tracks where creosoted ties had been set afire by burning grass.

In the morning firemen were called to 131 Station Street where the roof of a barn was ablaze, presumably from a spark from a bonfire. Also on Cedar Street on a roof of a residence caught afire, again from a bonfire. Small damage resulted at both blazes.

The eight calls for firemen included one to the city dump where garbage was ablaze; to the Bakelite plant on the Kingston Road where a grass fire got out of control, and to the city tourist camp for a grass fire.

In the early evening they were called to the home at James Street where a pile of ties along the C.P.R. track had caught afire from grass burning on the railway right of way. A blaze of exactly the same nature occurred later along Station Street.

And to top off the day's activities by firemen some busy body set fire to a long pile of leaves which had been raked to the street on Victoria Ave. The resident had raked the leaves awaiting the garbage man, when it is thought some passerby set fire to the pile.

Exhibition of Handicrafts At Public Library Enjoyed

The recently formed Belleville Ceramics Club has come a long way since its formation. They have at the present time a display of their handicraft at the Corby Public Library and it is amazing to see the amount of articles that they have produced in such short a time.

This is just one of the many displays, that will be held at the exhibition of handicrafts at the library. One of the larger displays is the work of the Arts and Craft Club of Belleville. They have on display examples of almost all the hobbies that are commonly known to the public. Another is the displays of the Hobbycraft Club, The president of the club is Mrs. Gelatly,and has a display boat that is a very excellent piece of craftsmanship. Along with this he has a three-quarter inch scale model of the Hudson type of New York Central coal-fired live steam engine that is capable of hauling two or three people. With this display there is a large assortment of displays of all descriptions both with and without motors, and a wide number of miniature houses to be in models.

Hand-Made Plastic

Ron Ward has a display of handmade plastics that are very good. One of the features of the exhibition is a card table that is loaded with wood from every continent. Wm. Gorham, also has some excellent inlaid woodwork. Fred Beeby has a very good silk screen house that is complete with furniture and two-car garage. Alec Gordon is displaying a hand-made model of a log cabin that is composed of 602 pieces of wood. There is also a balsa wood replica of the Eiffel Tower, that was planned and built by Tom Collyer, J. W. Hodgson has in the library silhouettes of wild life scenes, that were cut out with razor blades.

On display in the Corby Library are a number of dolls that were made by a Miss Young from across the bay, who is also a very good hand at wood carving. Miss Young not only made the clothes for these dolls but also made the shoes which the dolls are wearing. W.W. Sproule is exhibiting a large number of handcarved ducks that are excellent right down to the last detail. E. A. Greenleaf is also showing his collection of stamps.

Waxed Flowers

One of the outstanding articles on display is the large bouquet of waxed flowers that were made by Mrs. H. C. Argue. Others among this show are a Damascus bed spread that is woven in silk, some Mountmellick embroidery as taught by nuns in the convent at Mountmellick Ireland and a Chinese straw linen table cloth that was hand drawn by Mrs. R. A. Wyatt.

Other articles among the display that are too numerous to mention are needle work, dolls, a large collection of spearheads, that were found in Hastings and Prince Edward Counties, portraits and paintings of all sizes and designs, a number of books on hobbies and old museum articles such as candle moulds, dresses, candle lanterns and yarn winders.

All in all it is a very good display and the people who contributed to this fine exhibition deserve great credit for the work that they have shown in their hobbies and collections.

Fire Chief Warns Of Danger By Bonfires

Following yesterday's epidemic of grass fires and bonfires, four of which might easily have developed into major conflagrations, Chief Gerald Vance today warned residents against bonfires and that they may be held responsible for any damage resulting.

The Chief asked many persons had a habit of lighting a bonfire in a grass fire and then going away and leaving the blaze. He urged that extreme caution be used when bonfires or grass fires are set out during a dry period.

"Persons setting out bonfires may be held responsible for all damage resulting from the fire if it gets out of control," stated the Chief.

Church Filled To Capacity For Final Service

St. Michael's Church was filled to capacity last evening at the solemn closing Forty Hours devotion. Solemn Benediction was given by Dean Gerald Garvin P.P., assisted by Rev. C. C. Gabriel P.P. Batawa and Rev. J. Buckley, Tweed. Sermon was delivered by Rev. I. Donoghue P.P., Marysburgh. Rev. Gabriel congratulated the congregation on the large number that attended these spiritual exercises.

The procession was held and the Fourth Degree Knights of Columbus were the Guard of Honour.

2nd Belleville Scout News

Scoutmaster Eric Smith investigated the other evening three boys Robert Hallman, Kenneth Bedford, and Ronnie Philp into the 2nd Belleville Scout Troop. These three new boys were brought up into the Troop last January at the annual Going Up Ceremony from the Cubs.

Robert Owen, Ronnie Fox, John Bedford, Robert Gilhen, Russel Carter and Ronnie Philp, all made progress in their tests and by passing their Kim's game.

The Troop has already made great steps forward having an excellent Scout Camp this coming Summer.

GERMAN AIRLIFT WORKERS DECORATED

Hundreds of little emblems are now in circulation among the workers of the Berlin airlift. They are worn proudly on the lapels of hats. Usually the little decorations show a plane encircled by an inscription "Luftburcke" (air-bridge). Others have the British and U.S. flags suspended underneath. This photo shows the effect of the emblems when worn on the lapel.—Central Press Canadian.

Red Cross Drive Well on Way To Objective

"We are well on our way to our objective"—said Mrs. Stanley Bird this morning, "Notwithstanding the unfavorable weather when the Canvassers had been under a handicap of canvassers confined to their homes thermals and influ we are making good progress.

"We have a wonderful group of workers and their time volunteerily in the support of Canadian Red Cross work. We still have some sixty canvassers to bring in final returns and we are quite confident," repeated Mr. Riggs, "that when all returns are in we will meet our objective. Workers who find it inconvenient to get to the office at 224 Pinnacle St., may telephone 2233 —2152 or 753 and the Red Cross representative will call for any returns that are ready."

The exact figures to date are $9,467.44 and the campaign committee would like to complete the work this week if at all possible.

PICTON

Minstrel Show Given by Legion Much Enjoyed

Picton—More than nine hundred attended the opening performance of the Variety Minstrel Show, staged by Picton Unit No. 72 of the Canadian Legion in Picton armories last night. It was Ontario's night and they gave the artists a vociferous reception. The show continues Wednesday, Thursday and Friday nights, with a thousand expected to attend each night, as reserved seat sale for each night has resulted in a full house. Admission is 50c and sale of general admission tickets has been heavy. Many from Kingston, Belleville, Napanee, Trenton, Deseronto and other points have made reservations.

Elaborate Setting

The show is presented in an elaborate setting with tiered seats for the 80-voice chorus and the 15-piece orchestra. Two pianos and an electric organ are also used by musical director A. A. Bennie.

Theme of the show is based around a railway station and its characters, whose stories are carried out in song and story, and specialty acts.

The chorus gives an exceptionally fine rendition of such numbers as "Gotta Get Goin'," "Clap Yo' Hands," "Dixie," "If You Know Dixie", and "Swanes", along with choruses for specialty numbers.

A highlight is the number "Dry Bones", by chorus and orchestra, with Gordon W. Bayley as the bones in the darkness. This is done by John Collins.

Another unusual act is the Maharajah of Magadore" (Barton Bayly) with his retinue of dancers.

Many Soloists

Soloists include Woodrow Blakely, Mike Finnegan, John McCaw, Mrs. Cecil Lobb, Vernon Lockwood, Miss Gabrielle Gentile, Dave McNamee, Dorothy Nourse, Jim McCaw, A. G. McCollum, Lee Bishop, Miss Betty Cuthbert.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Dayton star in dance numbers, Miss Carole Lee Bell in ballet numbers, Herb Hyatt in feats of magic; Bill Wright, formerly a professional, in juggling; Harry Rawlins in club swinging to a song sung by Harry Bonnyer, and Miss Christine of Belleville in trombone solos.

Other excellent numbers include the Wellington trail quartette, specialties by A. A. Bennie, a comic number by Art Miller; a blizz dance by John Collier and Donna Cajon; comic song, Noah Trumble.

Plenty of Comedy

Plenty of comedy is supplied by end men Vincent Gentile, Vernon Lockwood, Howard Gorsline, F. J. MacKay W. Bayley.

The Pickering Trio, Patsy Perkins and Marilyn Frankin, dance team, a group of singing railway porters are other numbers that contribute to an outstanding show.

CHARGED WITH ASSAULT

Toronto, April 6 — (CP)—Andrew Moore, 74, of Fort Erie, was charged with assault Tuesday night after he had taken his 78-year-old sister, Mrs. Rachael Kelley, to hospital in serious condition with head wounds. Police said she was injured during a quarrel with Moore, who had been visiting her.

Prices Levelling Off in Florida Says W.S. Gordon

Prices Levelling Off

Mr. Gordon says it may not be a sign of an impending depression, but it probably does indicate a levelling off of prices that retail men in Florida this winter were trying to get rid of their stocks at reductions ranging from 35-50 per cent. He says that prices are slightly higher in Florida stores and restaurants than they are here, "perhaps 20 per cent" and there are quite a few men out of work and heading north to find employment.

Building Going On

There is a great deal of building and street improvement work going on in Florida but the labor market is overcrowded, mostly by people from the northern part of the continent two come down in trailers and continue to live in these vehicles.

All the buildings are painted white and the sand is also white. Mr. Gordon says he believes that by the buildings were painted that way but no one seemed sure, except that it helped to keep out the heat.

Actually the heat we have here in July and August is more severe than what they are having in Florida now.

A 95 degree temperature there is almost equivalent to 80 degrees in Tweed, because the ocean breezes seem to cool the air.

RAWDON

Springbrook L.O.L. 442 Enjoys Oyster Supper

Rawdon—On Friday evening last Springbrook L.O.L. No. 442 held a very successful oyster supper in their hall, for members and friends. The W.M. Harry Colton and others had the tables catered for over two hundred guests and all enjoyed oysters and other appetizing food.

At 8 p.m., Mr. Fred Bateman as master or ceremonies presided over an interesting program. The guest speaker was Mr. H. Graham, of Kingston, who gave a historical address on "The Days of Pre Protestantism."

Mr. Bill Reynolds of Stirling, gave a vocal selection with Mrs. Harry Monroe as accompanist and Mrs. Percy MacMullen, Mount Pleasant, contributed two readings.

Other speakers were Mr. Jim Nicol, Mr. Gordon Jones, Mr. George Fox, Mr. Will West and Rev. Wilfred Wilson.

The orchestra composed of Mr. and Mrs. Lorne Terrion, Mr. Melvin Kenneth Belcour, Delbert Sine and Roger Hagerman, played for dancing. All enjoyed a delightful evening.

IN MEMORIAM

LIVINGSTON—Mrs. Martha Living-ston, who passed away April 6th, 1948.
No one knows how much we miss you
No one knows but those who
We have suffered since we lost you,
We have only been the best.
In our hearts your memory lingers,
Sweet memories we hold dear,
There's a memory fond and true,
There's a token of affection dear,
There's a heartache day and night,
Remembered by daughter Elma and Jack. Ad

LIVINGSTON—Mrs. Martha Living-ston, who passed away April 6th, 1948.
There's a face that is haunting us ever
There's a voice we're longing to hear,
There's a smile we'll remember forever,
There's a heart that is breaking to-day
There's a sad yet ever remembrance
There's a memory fond and true,
There's a token of affection dear,
There's a heartache day and night,
Remembered by son and daughter-in-law and grandchildren. Ad

In loving memory of my dear sister Martha, who passed away April 6th, 1948.
What would we give, her hand to hold
Her patient face to see.
To hear her voice, to see her smile,
As in the days that used to be.
Dearest sister, we loved you best,
Beyond the trial and strife,
Memory keeps you as you were,
Dear sister.
In Heaven and happy life.
Sadly missed by her sister Alice Haley and family. Ad

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, April 6 — (CP) — Golds climbed steadily into higher ground as key senior producers showed modest fractional gains. Western oils were ahead in early dealings but receded and in mid-session under pressure of profit-taking — gains chalked up in two previous sessions. Base metals continued their downward trend and industrials mixed gains and losses.

The exchange's 1 p.m. index showed volume for the first three hours was 701,000 shares, about 163,000 shares more than yesterday's similar period.

The gold group climbed to the best levels this year as Lake Shore and Hollinger added small fractions. A wide list of junior producers showed gains.

Okalta featured western oils in opening action, climbing 15 cents to a new high at $2.60 but then settling back under pressure of profit-taking, to $2.45, yesterday's closing price.

Several base metals sagged to new lows as the list backed down from early steadiness.

PRODUCE MARKET

Toronto, April 6 (CP) —Produce prices on the spot market were today quoted as follows:

The egg market is firm at unchanged prices. Receipts have improved slightly, but supply still is short of demand. Country shippers quoted graded eggs, cases free: Grade A large 43-44; Grade A medium 42-43; grade A pullet 40-41; grade B 39; grade C 34-35. Wholesale to retail: Grade A medium 45-46; grade A pullet 43-44; grade B 44; grade C 37-38.

Tenderable butter solids, unchanged at 38 with some fine grade butter being offered at 56. The market is quiet.

Medium to good light steers and heifers were $19.50 to $20.50. Medium quality weights were $18 to $19 and $20 to $21. Plain steers and heifers sold downward to $17. Medium to good cows were $15 to $16.50 and canners and cutters sold at $12 to $15.

A few bulls sold at $16.50 to $18.50 with feed yearlings at $19 to $22.

Calves steady at $21 to $29 for choice with plain to medium lightweights at $18 to $25.

Hogs were steady at $21.25 for Grade A and $20.75 for Grade B1. Sows were $24, dressed.

Some good feed lot lambs sold at $26. No sheep were offered.

HOGS

Toronto, April 6 — (CP) — Hog prices were steadied at $21.25, monday's price quoted, for all grades delivered this morning, but receipts were not definitely settled. Other markets unreported.

HARD LABOR FACES

Rationed by Value

Meat is rationed by value in Britain. The current ration is lowest in history — a slight piece worth a week to each person. It was not clear whether the price rise would mean in effect a new cut in the ration or whether the ration value would be increased slightly along with the meat price.

Telephone calls will be more expensive, the Chancellor announced. A surcharge of 15 per cent levied on local calls will be raised to 50 per cent.

The tax levied on football pools — weekly bets on soccer games — will go up from 20 to 30 per cent of winnings.

Sir Stafford dismissed expectations of income-tax deductions with the brief statement he could see no room for any substantial down-grading of taxation.

However, he exempted from taxation unemployment, sickness and maternity benefits paid under the National Health Insurance scheme.

Watch Tax Increased

Income tax credits for payments into these funds—which amount is to 7d. (32 cents) a week—will no longer be permitted.

The tax on matches is being raised by 5s 5d. ($1.08) a gross of boxes, said the Chancellor. These boxes, the size of the familiar one cent box in Canada — now sell for 1 1-2 pence. The new price will be two pence (3 1-2 cents) a box.

He exempted from taxes gifts of money and property up to a limit of £500. The previous limit was £100. The tax on gifts above that is the same as the death duty or inheritance tax, which ranges up to 85 per cent.

Sir Stafford repealed the license taxes on real estate agents and auctioneers, and an old 1892 land tax which yields only £600,000 a year.

JUMP IN EXPORTS OF CANADIAN RYE IN THE MAKING

More Sent to U. S. Since First of Year Than in Full 1947-48 Period

Ottawa, April 6 — (CP) — A big jump in exports of Canadian rye to the United States is in the making this year.

Although the export year does not end until July 31, considerably more Canadian rye has already been sent to the U. S. than in the full 1947-48 period.

Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures show that up to the end of February — covering the first seven months of the crop year— Americans took 2,000,000 bushels of Canadian rye went to the U.S. This compared with only 41,460 bushels for the whole of the previous year.

In Washington last Monday Senator Milton Young, Republican, from North Dakota, said in an interview he felt imports from Canada account for the fact that American rye selling at prices below the support levels set by the U.S. government, and the Canadian government does not support rye prices.

He stated that imports of rye from Canada be reduced but his question was: "How can we get food than is the custom in North America." He said that the U. S. most of it is used for distilling.

Last year Canada sent more than 10,000,000 bushels of rye to the European market, compared with the 1,460 bushels that went to the United States.

Sharply Reduced

This year the difference has been sharply reduced, up to the end of February about 4,500,000 bushels had been exported of which slightly more than 2,000,000 was directed to the American market.

At present approximately 4,000,000 bushels of rye are reported at lakehead terminals for export.

While detailed distribution was not available, it was known that a large amount of the rye was headed for Europe.

The big increase in rye sent to the U.S. this year ties in with a large increase in the production of rye in Canada. The 1948 harvest — now in the process of being distributed — was 25,340,000 bushels compared with 13,217,000 the year before.

Reason for the increase was said to have been larger acreages sown in the prairies would be an advantage of the high prices which have prevailed during the last few years.

The price of rye — which, unlike wheat, is sold on an open market and without export restrictions — reached to a record peak of $4.83 last May 21.

CHILDREN MADE WARDS

Timmins, April 5 (CP)— Louis Landry, 6, and his pregnant 28-year-old wife were each sentenced to 18 months in jail today and their four children made wards of the Children's Aid Society because the couple was convicted of neglecting the children.

15 in Training With Hasty Pees At Madoc

Tweed — Fifteen young men of Tweed are training with the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment at Madoc every Wednesday night and in addition three men are taking the N.C.O.'s course at Belleville Armouries. The Tweed squad of the regiment is in charge of Lieut. Ollie Miller of Sulphide. It is understood that the Department of Defence is planning to equip the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment with a number of mechanized units. Recruits will be welcomed for the summer training program. The trainees are taken to Madoc via Emerson's Coach Lines but it is understood that army trucks may be made available shortly. Commencement Coc is zergeant of the Tweed detachment and Ron Fritzke and Bert Cornell, were recently named corporals.

To Resume Operations

The Billie Construction Company will resume operations on the highway south of Tweed about April 15th. Last Autumn the contract was completed to Martin's Hill and the firm has retained such possibly to Roslin this year. The new road will proceed east of Thomasburg and west of Bells, reducing the mileage to Belleville by a considerable amount and eliminating some dangerous curves. With the present mild weather, the contracting firm should be able to get an early start this year.

Child Walks Backwards Against Vehicle

Seven-year-old Kenneth Blackburn, 97 Catharine Street, suffered minor injuries yesterday when he was run over by a milk wagon while playing near his home.

The small boy, police stated, was walking backwards in his play and tripped between the wheels of a Montrose Dairy vehicle. He received a bruise when hitting a cut on his head and tearing off a heel of a shoe and ripping clothing.

The driver of the wagon was exonerated from any blame in the matter.

MARMORA

CATHOLIC WOMEN'S LEAGUE

Marmora — The March meeting of the Catholic Women's League was held in Sacred Heart School on Tuesday evening, March 29th. Owing to the inclement weather, the attendance was smaller than usual. The meeting opened in the usual manner with the president, Mrs. Charles Cook occupying the chair.

Following the correspondence and reports, a discussion was held and it was decided to hold a party in the school on April 19th. It was also decided to entertain the card parties in the homes after Easter.

A nominating committee was appointed to draw up a slate of officers for the annual meeting to be held in the school on Sunday evening, April 10th. Members of the nominating committee are: Mrs. L. P. Hughes, Mrs. Charles Crawford, and Mrs. J. McCrone.

Mrs. W. A. Shannon gave an interesting reading on "Lent" which was enjoyed.

It being the anniversary of his birthday, the chaplain, Rev. H. J. Farrell, was presented with a birthday gift by the president, for which he expressed his thanks and appreciation.

Father Farrell then addressed the meeting on the keeping of the holy season of Lent.

Group No. 9 were requested to supply refreshments for the March day evening meeting, and the meeting adjourned.

Mr. and Mrs. David Nixon, of New Toronto, spent the weekend with his sister's mother, Mrs. Harry Phillips.

Messrs. F. Everard, T. Cousins and W. Mumby are attending the annual convention of the Industrial Accident Prevention Association in Toronto as representatives of Deloro Smelting and Refining Company, Limited.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Jennings spent Tuesday in Peterborough.

HAD REASONS FOR SHOOTING

New York, April 6 (AP)- A gunman who killed a rush-hour crowd on a Staten Island street Tuesday and shot and seriously wounded a former Republican representative had reasons for his shooting spree, police said.

The gunman was identified as Charles Van Newkirk, 57, former carpenter and engineer from Amherst, N.H. Van Newkirk was quoted by detectives as saying "I had my own personal reasons" for the shooting.

DISTRESS SIGNAL CHANGE

Before the letters SOS were adopted generally as distress signal at sea, the letters CDQ were used.

INSPECTOR

but had not resented his assistance.

He said the Crown Attorney had never instructed the investigation be stopped.

Mr. Donnan told of two instances of alleged interference by Kenneth Carefoot with investigations started by him. In one instance a cheque was presented to him bearing what he identified over Bowen's signature, he said.

He had not known of the changed report until he had come to Belleville and the Royal Commission hearing.

Questioned by King regarding his own investigation of the Carefoot matter Mr. Bowen said he had not been told that the investigation because he had not known where he stood. Dr. Keays would have made the inquiry.

Keays contended that Bowen's notes on the investigation were the result of information gained by Keays.

This was denied by Bowen.

Keays referred to Mr. Bowen's allegations that Keays had interfered in investigations and admitted that he had been acting under instructions from the then District Inspector Harry Thompson.

"If Keays was acting under instructions from Inspector Thompson would Thompson be interfering?" asked Keays.

"No," was the reply—"But it is not here to testify."

The end of the long drawn out day's proceedings was punctuated by inquiring into charges of Constable J. E. Keays against Constable B. C. Donnan, and seven provincial police officers appeared briefly in night today for the first time since the inquiry got underway back on March 7th.

Since then 30 witnesses have been called as Commissioner Mr. Justice Keiller Mackay has investigated charges made by Keays against 68 separate allegations made by him, which he tendered his official resignation on last Oct. 20.

Tuesday afternoon Constable Harry E. Donnan presented his story refusing the allegations of interference and protection of fraud against the general public, which was revelled at him by Constable Keays.

Acted as Lawyer in Civil Capacity

He admitted that he had acted as Mr. Carefoot's lawyer in civil practice but asserted "there could be no conflict of duty, any time insofar as I was concerned."

He admitted that Mr. Carefoot started back in 1934 when he had been engaged to look over similar transfers for other business matters. He pointed out that he was unable while his duties as a crown attorney in accepting private practice.

The Carefoot proposition had been that he had a device which was supposed to avoid skid and other metals in the ground. He had purchased shares in Fox-boro and had sunk drill holes which produced nothing but air-lock water.

Mr. Donnan, still suffering from wrs wounds received over-seas in the first world war, remained seated while giving his testimony.

Analyze Made

Some time in the spring of 1938 it had been discovered by Mr. Carefoot that the artesian water was not just "ordinary" water and an analysis was stated to have shown it contained certain mineral qualities.

"Proud started drinking the water, but it was not exploited," stated Mr. Donnan. "It couldn't be exploited at 25 cents the gallon."

However, Mr. Carefoot formed a company for the purpose of selling the water, the firm of Donnan and Butler having agreed to take their fees in stock. For their services in setting up the company the firm had accepted $500 worth of stock valued at 25 cents per share.

"We had absolutely nothing to do with the administration of the company," went on Mr. Donnan "and I fail to see how it can be suggested there was any indication of fraud."

That the Belleville Aqua Vita Company was not the only one suggested by Keays when he alleged the public had been fleeced out of $500,000, was indicated by Mr. Donnan when he produced the annual financial statement of the company from 1937 to 1943.

Loss Paid by Carefoot

He showed that receipts from the sale of water in 1937 had been $7,037 with a loss of $603 which had been paid by Mr. Carefoot. "Not one dollar of public money ever went into the company," he stated. "It was sold to the public, or to anyone else," he stated.

In 1938 receipts of the company had been $378 and from then on dwindled rapidly until in 1943 receipts had totalled only $158. The same year there had been a loss of $199.

Mr. Donnan said he knew of people who claimed they had been assisted through use of the water. He also said that Mr. Carefoot had told him he had some special method of diagnosis — some sort of a blood test — but he had no knowledge of how the test was made.

He denied that he had ever taken cancer patients to Mr. Carefoot and referring to an instance when Keays and Inspector Hayes had gone to the doctor said the visit had been suggested by Keays.

Troubled With Ulcers

He said Keays had been troubled with stomach ulcers and during a conversation in the Crown Attorney's office Keays suggested going to Mr. Carefoot. As neither Keays nor Inspector Hayes had a car at the time Mr. Donnan said he offered to drive them to see Mr. Carefoot.

The crown attorney stated he had frequently discussed the Carefoot against practising until he secured re-instatement from the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

He was not practising—that he was engaged in research work—and permitted only to conduct the research," he said.

When they had first mentioned an investigation of Mr. Carefoot, Mr. Donnan said he had told the minister was one for the college of physicians and surgeons to handle such investigations.

The Carefoot matter had been investigated and two charges of fraud had been laid. Mr. Donnan said he had told Inspector Monaghan of the College of Physicians and Surgeons that as he had done civil work for Mr. Carefoot he felt it would be better for him to conduct the prosecution and the matter had been turned over to Assistant Crown Attorney S. Gordon Robertson.

THE ONTARIO INTELLIGENCER

Not Opposed to Search

He said he had not been opposed to a search of the Carefoot home. He admitted Mrs. Carefoot had called him after the arrest of Mr. Carefoot but denied he had suggested a lawyer to act for the Carefoots.

Later he said Malcolm Robb had called him asking if he had been retained by the Carefoots, and asking if he had any suggestions for bail. "I told Mr. Robb I was prepared to recommend bail of $2,000 and added that if anyone I would call Miss M. Butler, the Justice of peace.

He termed as "entirely untrue" the statement by Keays that he had ever advised Mr. Carefoot to have his medicines analyzed before he had any discussion regarding the matter with Mr. Carefoot.

Cross-Examined On Car

Keays crossed examined Mr. Donnan with respect to a "gift" car, but admitted he had traded cars with a friend and client, turning over a Nash for a 1941 Buick, the car which he presently drove.

Also there was an instance when he had borrowed money to buy a second car to keep while his own was being repaired. He had later sold this car.

Keays was persistent in his questioning of the witness with respect to the prosecution Peter Lee at Kingston and this drew a sharp objection from Mr. Donnan.

The crown attorney related some years ago Keays had not been just sure of the year—there had been a number of Vol meetings operating in Bville, le.

He said that under the existing regulations the authorities were given little opportunity to get the evidence necessary for conviction of persons operating the machines.

No Anti-Gambling Squad

"We had no anti-gambling squad in the city so we created one of our own and called it them," said the crown attorney. He went on to say that two constables had been used in this and with funds supplied by the crown attorney had gone out to get the evidence.

As result every machine but one in the city had been seized and carted off to the police station and the operators were charged. The owner of the machine, had been Peter Lee of Kingston. He had come to Belleville and was told his machines would be confiscated by the authorities.

Later he and Mr. Lee had become very good friends said Mr. Donnan and claimed he had acted for him in civil matters. He had pointed out to Mr. Lee that unfortunately that in working the slot machine game he was playing a losing battle. Mr. Lee had contested at all times, that I was still the crown attorney, said Mr. Donnan.

Bought Car With Borrowed Money

As recent as March 1943 a slot machine had been discovered operating at Shannonville which was believed to be owned by Mr. Lee. Mr. Donnan had left a letter with Mr. Lee about a letter pointing out that he was still carrying out his duties as crown attorney.

"Didn't you purchase a car in 1947," asked Keays.

"Yes," was the reply. "With borrowed money."

"And from whom did you borrow the money?" pressed Keays.

"From Albert Lew," was Mr. Donnan's answer.

Keays claimed Albert Lew was a brother-in-law of Peter Lee, and acted as the Belleville district representative of the Kingston Music Company owned by Mr. Lee. Keays went on to claim this firm distributed pin ball machines and punch boards in Belleville.

"I'd like to have some evidence of that. I don't believe it exists," replied the crown attorney.

Mr. Donnan denied that he had ever instructed Keays to discontinue investigation of the Carefoot matter. This had been alleged by Keays in his evidence in chief.

Cross-Examined Briefly

The crown attorney was cross examined briefly by two other counsels in which there were allegations.

These included the Frank Bertrand case in which a charge of dangerous driving and been withdrawn; James Stewart plane accident in Thurlow township; the Gerald Hubbard accident, and the Jean Badgley case.

In the latter case Keays had alleged there had been interference by Crown Attorney Donnan in the investigation of the shooting which caused the death of the Frankford girl in Nov. 1947. Mr. Donnan said all the available evidence had not been presented at the inquest.

This was flatly denied by Mr. Donnan who asserted that all the evidence before him had been presented at the inquiry. Keays had claimed the shooting was murder but the coroner's jury in their verdict stated the girl had come to her death by suicide.

LIGHTS GO ON AGAIN ALL OVER ENGLAND

For the first time in 10 years the lights of London are fully lit and Piccadilly Circus is jammed with happy Londoners who revel in the light—which was a marvel to children who never remembered such a sight. The lights dimmed by war and austerity glitter as brightly as before the war. — Central Press Canadian.

FOREST COVER AND GAME

The forests of any country are of the greatest importance in the nation's economy. Woodland World in an article on the havoc caused by fires refers to the disastrous ravaging of forest cover by fire which is blamed in part for a declining furcatch, according to Dominion Government sources.

This fact prompts the World to comment, "forest values go far beyond the mere volume of wood involved. Common practice is to reckon fire losses in terms of stumpage. Last year, however, the Canadian Forestry Association estimated national fire losses to be $50,000,000 for wood and labor values only. Indirect losses from forest fires such as those experienced in the fur trade and tourist industry, would boost the figure much higher."

A forest and wildlife organization has been set up with headquarters at Fort Smith in the Northwest Territories, the superintendent being assisted by a mammalogist, a forest engineer and about 20 park wardens. Field officers are equipped with boats and modern fire-fighting equipment. During the fire hazard season, boats patrol the Mackenzie river and other streams.

In the same paper is a suggestion as to the use of moored balloons to spot fires, these balloons being similar to those which were used in the defence of London during the blitz. Groups are said to be studying the proposal. Prevention of fire saves forest wild life.

SAVE WILD LIFE

The Canadian Army recently came to the aid of deer which in search of food had been wandering on the tracks east of Camp Shilo, Manitoba. The Shilo Observer says that the animals had been near starvation due to the depth of snow and were foraging afield with the advent of mild weather. Eleven does, all in calf, had been reported killed up to a short time ago. Shilo Fish and Game Association soldier-sportsmen learning of the situation contacted the Manitoba Federation of Game and Fish Associations which donated two tons of hay while the army hauled it from Winnipeg to the camp and over the weekend distributed it by tanks and self-propelled guns at strategic spots to entice the animals away from the danger of the railway tracks.

Not so long ago when the winter storms were covering the western states of the American Union, wild life and cattle and sheep suffered heavily from the plight which had befallen them. Planes poured in and dumped large quantities of hay to feed the domestic animals and the elks and other wild life.

A fairly safe guide to the character of a people as well as of an individual can be found in the reaction to the misfortunes and sufferings of both human and animal life. Man's sympathy has unlimited scope for the true lover of humanity and of God's creatures will do his utmost to relieve misfortune and suffering. In the words of Coleridge,

"He prayeth best who loveth best
All things, both great and small:
For the dear Lord who loveth us
He made and loveth all."

HOUSING IN BRITAIN

Numbers of nations have programs of house building on their hands and have been watching the work done in Britain not only in building new homes but in repairing the homes which suffered in the air bombardment by the Germans during the war. Britons have almost completed the work of repairing the blitzed houses which suffered damage and have been at work on a program of especially prefabricated houses for emergency shelter. Her work on new housing is imposing, about 240,000 new housing units having been constructed each year. This work will be carried on.

Now the Britons are thinking over repairs and renovations to many of the older houses to make them suit this modern age. The plan with these houses is to extend old to local councils and private owners to make these older style houses more comfortable.

U. S. ARMY DAY

U. S. Army Day commemorates today, April 6, the anniversary of the entry of the Republic into the First World War. In the year 1937 the day became official by act of the 75th Congress through the untiring efforts of the Military Order of World Wars which was patterned after the Society of the Cincinnati which was founded by Gen. George Washington at the close of the Revolutionary War. There have been prominent military leaders in U. S. history who have been honorary commanders of the Military Order. The day is observed across the United States and in many other parts of the world wherever there are United States soldiers or citizens.

"Happy birthday, mother dear!"
Once again has come the day
When the children, who are being,
Think of you, so long away.

Gifts cannot be given now,
Hug and kiss we can't bestow,

These the Lord does not allow
'Til shall come our time to go.

Still we love you as of old,
And we pray that you may hear
As once more our love is told:
"Happy birthday, mother dear!"

LOOKING BACKWARDS

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 YEARS AGO

April 6th, 1929.

Mr. M. C. Reid of Shanghai, China, is visiting his brother, Armour Reid, Harriet St.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. McKeown have returned home from Woodstock, Ontario.

Maple syrup was offered for sale in considerable quantities on the market today and sold at 80 cents per quart and $2.25 per gallon. Maple syrup will be more plentiful this week. Eggs sold at 25 cents to 27 cents per dozen; butter 35 cents per pound; dressed chickens $1.25 to $1.50 and ducks $1.40 each.

Applications for the position of treasurer for the city will be received by the chairman of the executive committee of the city council up to five o'clock on the afternoon of April 11th.

30 YEARS AGO

April 6th, 1919.

At a meeting of the members of the Belleville Rifle Association preliminary steps were taken towards making a church cenotaph in Belleville under the home visiting plan, which has been used with great success in other places. The Belleville Ministerial Association is heartily in accord with the movement.

Members and friends of the Belleville Curling Club will hold their opening party at the rink this evening.

Mr. William Lingham of Sydney, Australia, is here on a visit to his mother, Mrs. Joh. Lingham, George Street, and is being welcomed home by many old friends.

Mr. William Robins of the Graham Company has resigned his position and will accept a position in Toronto.

40 YEARS AGO

April 6th, 1909

How is the city baseball league coming on? Get in the game boys.

The tender of A.S. Large for the city market tells has been accepted by the city council.

What about the new school? Considering that it is imperative that the Board of Education provide more accommodation, there is no apparent haste on the part of the authorities to get things going. Two new schools, it is reported, will be built in East Belleville, one on Pine Street and one on Dundas.

At the annual meeting of the members of the Belleville Oddfellow Band the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, John Weese; manager R. H. Kotcheson; treasurer, William Givens; secretary, Charles Hanna; executive committee, Walter Aselstine, Wesley Weymark, and Charles Ridley; auditors Charles Ridley and Frank Gile. The band is in good condition financially, and has several impressive engagements for the coming season.

50 YEARS AGO

April 6th., 1899

Mr. A. G. Farrellyea spent yesterday in Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Johnson have returned home from Woodstock where they visited relatives.

Mr. H. Parker Thomas has been appointed a judge at the dog show at the Toronto Fair this fall.

Capt. Montgomery is fitting out the schooner D. Freeman for the coming season. W. Keenan has been engaged as mate for the season.

The schooner Echo, which has been given a new bottom, was launched here today. Capt. Keegan will be in command during the season.

Capt. Smith is superintending the outfitting of the schooner Ballou.

The dredge is being overhauled preparatory to resuming work in the local harbor.

At this time this morning there are 21 loads of hay on the market.

ATOM PIG GETS ZOO HOME

Probably the most famous porker in the world, Pig 311" makes herself at home at the Washington, D.C. zoo. The 500-pound animal, who was exposed to atomic blasts in 1946, had been under observation since she was found swimming in the radioactive waters of the Bikini lagoon after the first A-bomb test. Pig 311 will be housed at the zoo until her death, when an stoupay will be performed. — Central Press Canadian.

Mackenzie's Column: 12 Western Allies Sign Pact to Prevent War

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press News Analyst)

On this date 32 years ago the United States took her place among the Allies in the First World War with a declaration of hostilities against an aggressive Germany. Basic cause was greed.

Approximately 32 years later the globe was torn by even more terrible a conflict, and again the basic cause was greed.

The day before yesterday, 12 western allies, meeting in Washington, signed the Atlantic Pact aimed at protection against the aggression whose evil spirit again is hunting trouble. President Truman said in an address regarding this historic treaty:

"It is a simple document, but if it had existed in 1914 and in 1939, supported by the nations who are represented here today, I believe it would have prevented the acts of aggression which led to two world wars."

It's easy to believe that this might have been so. However, one has the feeling that even if the two wars had been prevented then, the world still might have had to endure the agony of an uprising.

Adjustments Needed

There were great political, territorial and economic problems to be adjusted. There were imperial revisions which inevitably must have come. There was racial freedom to be established. These reforms could only be achieved by major operations.

Many of these things were brought about by the two world wars. Perhaps in the course of many generations they would have been accomplished through the peaceful development of mankind. Who can say?

Were it not for the great ideological struggle between communism and democracy, the world today could chalk up tremendous progress in many branches of activity since the first global conflict.

As the signs now read, there is a fair chance that a general world war shooting war can be avoided for a long time and perhaps can be averted altogether. That would give us a chance to profit by the readjustments which have come about in the two world wars.

This column, while recognizing the grave dangers, doesn't believe that war between the democracies and the communist bloc is inevitable.

It just seems, Williams said, that rabbits are easily bored.

HOW TO QUIT SMOKING

Among the helps suggested in an article in some magazine a few years ago, on how to give up the smoking habit, was a mouth wash that would make a cigarette taste bitter. Will he be good enough to tell us about that again? I know it takes a lot of will power and I am trying to train myself of this awful habit, but I'm afraid I succeed unless I get some help. (Mrs. J. L. P.)

Any one who wants to quit smoking can quit. The trouble with you, Ma'am, is that you don't really want to break yourself of the habit. You want some one to do it for you.

But quitting the habit is not like doing the family washing, or nursing, cooking, housecleaning or nursing your baby. It is more like having a baby. You can hire some one to do all of these things for you, except having a baby. That you must do for yourself—though your doctor, nurse, husband, sister, kind neighbor, mother or even mother-in-law may help you in various ways.

The mouthwash or gargle I suggested one who wants to quit smoking should be used night and morning is a weak solution of silver nitrate in water—about one-fourth of one percent strength, approximately five or ten grains of silver nitrate in a pint of distilled water. This must be kept in a dark bottle in a dark place, for sunlight turns it black. Even a weak solution is sometimes used to mark the skin. It leaves a black stain on any dry surface it touches, if the surface is exposed to sunlight. When used as mouthwash it makes cigarette smoke taste bitter.

A better plan to follow is moderation in smoking. Do not smoke before or after a meal, but only after the meal. Do not smoke within an hour or two after the work or the stint is finished. Do not smoke in bed. Do not smoke.

The correspondent says she knows a lot of will power to break the habit. Not with cigarettes. Will you please tell me how you know it is right, what you think is right, and what else or what conscience tells you is right, for me to refrain from doing something that you know is wrong, something that is bad for me, and to do what—that later — just a little good sense, character or independence.

Some smokers have found portable cigarette holders to regain their independence. That is to say, postpone the first smoke until the usual time for the third. This plan will cut the smoking half. After several days on half ration, self-imposed, they begin to feel better and stronger. Presently they decide on a further cut—again postponing the first smoke as before.

This dot only proves easier than the first step but they feel so pleased with their success that many smokers decide to postpone the next smoke s!ne die.

One trying to quit smoking should exclude from his diet meat soups, broths or extracts, and seasoned sauces and gravies. He or she should eat freely of spinach, baked with meals or raw the first thing for breakfast and the last thing at night.

Keep some candy or gum on hand and chew it or chew on it when you feel the desire or retard the automatic impulse to light a cigarette.

Walk at least three miles daily or get the equivalent exercise in one or another form of play or physical work.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Brown Eyes and Blue

Is it possible for husband and wife who both have blue eyes to have children with brown eyes? (Mrs. O. W. F.)

Answer—Yes, and vice versa or dos-a-dos.

Salicylated Collodion

I have secured a bottle of your salicylic acid and Flexible Collodion, but have degenerate instructions. (T. R. C.)

Answer—You accept or use such stuff at your own peril. I do not recommend it, nor use my name on anything. I recommend a single dusting powder (corn or bunion) with a solution of thirty grains of salicylic acid to the fluid ounce of collodion for a week or two days, when the corn or callus should easily wipe away. Of course it will need the friction or pressure that caused smoke which I suppose by now it's not corrected. See my stamped self addressed envelope for booklet Care of the Feet.

Cold When It's Warm

Even when the room temperature is kept up to 77 degrees I feel cold in bed and not only have to wear sweaters and robes. (Mrs. S. M. B.)

Answer—Better begin taking an iodin ration and see that your temperature is higher than 76, not lower than 66—somewhere between will be most comfortable if you evaporate at least a gallon of water into the room every day. Send stamped self addressed envelope and ask for instructions for taking The Iodin Ration. Do not use a slipping. It will only chill you.

N.S. Considering Setting up Prison Farms

(By The Canadian Press)

Nova Scotia is considering ways of improving the lot of prisoners in its jails.

A few months ago the province took part in negotiations aimed at establishment of a Central Maritime Penitentiary to bridge the gap between the common jails and the big federal prison at Dorchester, N.B., and that at Prince Rupert, B.C. The effort fell through and the idea of a penitentiary was turned to doing something on its own.

Attorney-General L. D. Currie told the Legislature at Halifax that his department, seeking $10,000 for prison reform this year, is considering setting up a prison farm, possibly in conjunction with the Nova Scotia Agriculture College at Truro. Meantime, the province is trying to encourage the municipalities, which control the county jails, to improve facilities.

Federal prime minister of federal prize support policy for New Brunswick potatoes was sought in a motion of motion given in the legislature at Fredericton. It suggested that the support be given potatoes in frost-proof storage as well as to potatoes now covered by the program.

A suggestion that trade unions in Canada should be free from United States control was tabled in the Manitoba Legislature. L. St. George Stubbs, Conservative member for Winnipeg, wanted the House at Winnipeg to go on record as supporting that type of legislation may vote today on second reading of the bill.

MELANCHOLY TASK

However, the hospital believed there were 1,000 persons — patients and staff members — in the 62-year-old institution operated by the Roman Catholic Order of St. Anthony, when it got the blaze.

The number of survivors was established at 535 by the Red Cross. Firemen said most of the survivors suffered in some degree from fumes and shock, but only one was reported in critical condition.

Among the known dead were Sister Cecily, the hospital's chaplain, and three nurses.

Regina Nurses Survivor

Among the survivors was Sister Cecily, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Jordan of Regina.

Reporters from the Illinois State Fire Marshal's Office investigated the cause of the blaze. Fire Chief Fred Effingham said he discounted a report that leaking gas caused the blaze.

Williams said there was no explosion preceding the fire. The blaze was believed to have started in a laundry chute. It spread to an elevator shaft and quickly enveloped the entire structure.

There were many heroic rescues. Scores of persons rushed to the hospital to aid nuns and nurses in attempted rescue of patients. Firemen carried them from their attempt to get patients from the burning building. An unidentified number died in leaps.

Effingham, stunned by the disaster, planned a day of mourning tomorrow.

The most tragic hospital fire in United States history was one which killed 124 persons in the Cleveland, O., clinic hospital of Dr. George W. Crile May 15, 1929.

Strength for the Day

DR. EARL L. DOUGLASS

THE PATTERN MAY BE REPEATED

All Bible students have been struck by the fact that the patriarch Abraham lived 2,000 years B.C., that King David lived 1,000 years B.C., and that 1,000 years A.D. David was the founder of a spiritual kingdom of which the Bible assures us there is to be no end. Jesus gave us the imperishable gospel, and history is dated from his birth.

Nothing of unusual consequence happened in the year A.D. 1,000, although many people believed that the world would end at that time. We are now approaching the year A.D. 2,000. May it not be that the pattern of significant spiritual events happening once every 1,000 years, such as Abraham, David and preceding the birth of Christ, may obtain again?

In other words, there appears to be some reason to believe that within the next 50 or 100 years events may occur which may be epochal in the spiritual history of the human race. This, of course, is only conjecture, but it is based on a pattern which obtained at three important times in ancient history. Some great spiritual future for the whole human race may be more imminent than most people are inclined to think.

THE PACKSACK

OF GREGORY CLARK

When Naples fell to the Americans late in 1943, we Canadians were on the other, or Adriatic, side of Italy. Jam Cook of the Hastings Free Press and I persuaded Major Placide Labelle of Montreal to be commander one of the public relations men from the army, and after a hair-raising trip across the bridge-blown and panicked mountains of Italy we reached Naples when it was still dizzy.

The real prize we had offered was to visit the fabulous Isle of Capri, a few miles off the Bay of Naples; which, a day or two before, had fallen. But giving Jam Cook the slip, I sneaked off with Major Labelle and we drove around the fine Italian Naples through Torre del Greco, the famed home of cameos and coral, to Sorrento, where we found the most beautiful old Italian hotelier, Benedetto Croce, occupying the villa of one of the absent Vanderbilts.

He was then 78 years old, and only a few days earlier had been kidnapped from Sorrento by a party of British intelligence officers in motor launches for his own security, until the attack had passed. With two of his colleagues, Croce was captured in Bella and me in the library of the villa and proceeded to give us—via Labelle, who spoke both French and Italian — an outline not merely of what was immediately to happen in Italy, but what was to happen to Italy subsequently, over the years. Every word he did actually uttered has turned out to be a true prediction. It was a very expectation, in seeking him out, that he would admit he was to be the president of an impending Italian republic. He told us he was too old.

His historical belief was that the Germans had stolen his entire library, of 60,000 volumes, and his 60,000 volumes, all neatly boxed, were received, not one missing, in the Vatican.

Teddington, Middlesex, England — (CP) — Newest cure for boredom: A machine which turns doughnuts and crosses with you and won't stand cheating.

It was demonstrated via television from the National Physical Laboratory here whose staff perfected it for spare-time relaxation.

The electrical machine lights up noughts and crosses on a screen. In the demonstration it beat commentator Richard Dimbleby by immediately seizing an opportunity to get a row of noughts when he made a mistake.

Then Dimbleby tried to cheat, marking in two crosses without waiting for the machine to move. He got his three crosses on the screen, but a moment later the machine hummed, clicked, wiped out the cheating move and replaced it with a nought.

Philadelphia — (AP) — Dr. Roy Williams of the University of Pennsylvania wishes his brown rabbit would stop snorting in the middle of cancer experiments.

Williams said today that for the last year he has been observing cells in the ears of a big brown bunny with the aid of a microscope. The rabbit has become so used to the routine now that as soon as the microscope is moved into position he dozes off and starts to

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

WONDER AND SURPRISE

One reason why we get depressed in spirit oftener than we should is because we fail to note the everlasting wonder and wonder about us. No matter where we go, no matter how far we roam there it can be!

I am in my library, with colorful books all about me. Each one of these books was once a living tree — and other chemical elements have been resolved into compounds of wood and paper and ivory. The woven rugs, once wool on the backs of sheep, are now goals. The leathers that cost so many books are now transformed cows were living, moving, roaring animals. And in so many articles there are the unseen examples of the products of the earth, put to use by human beings in their daily homes for all.

Here are my pencils and pens, ink, glasses, copper trays, radio, telephone and hundreds other things full of wonder and surprise. And out in the open — endless wonder and surprise. Every day we tread upon miracles and pass them by as though we were blind — as many of us are!

Many of you must have read that exquisite piece of writing by Anne Morrow Lindbergh that came out several years ago, which she called "The Gift of Sight." Both wonder and surprise are in the skin. Sensitive fingertips! The sunlight has a voice. And in the skin, there are myriad strokes of light wherever it touches the earth — a master blaze.

Wilkins said there was no explosion preceding the fire. The blaze was believed to have started in a laundry chute. It spread to an elevator shaft and quickly enveloped the entire structure.

There were many heroic rescues. Scores of persons rushed to the hospital to aid nuns and nurses in attempted rescue of patients. Firemen carried them from their attempt to get patients from the burning building. An unidentified number died in leaps.

Effingham, stunned by the disaster, planned a day of mourning tomorrow.

WEDDINGS

WEYMARK—SPAFFORD

A very pretty wedding was celebrated on April 2nd at St. Thomas Church, which was decorated with calla lilies and ferns, when Venerable Archdeacon F. A. Smith united in marriage Miss Joan Spafford and James Thomas Weymark.

The bride, in white silk lace over slipper satin, with heart-shaped neckline, and full net train with matching heart-shaped headdress and fingertip veil. She carried a cascade bouquet of red roses.

She was attended by her sister, Mrs. Lorraine Graham, as matron of honor, gowned in sheer blue, over blue satin and halo headdress of lace, trimmed with blue tinted rosebuds. She carried a bouquet of sweetpeas and pink roses.

The bride's younger sister, Ella, was her bridesmaid, in primrose yellow sheer over yellow satin, with matching headdress trimmed with yellow rosebuds. Her bouquet was of sweetpeas with yellow rosebuds.

The bridegroom was attended by his brother, George Weymark, as best man.

The bride was given away by her brother, Jerry, who flew from New York. Her younger brother, Leon, also of New York, acted as usher.

The bride's mother received at the Golden Acre Inn, in grey with a corsage of orange rosebuds, assisted by the groom's mother in navy blue, with a corsage of red roses.

The happy couple left for a wedding trip to Algonquin Park, the bride wearing a black figured dress with silver fox jacket and black accessories, and a corsage of red roses.

They will return to reside in Belleville.

DUNN—BARRIE

Central Presbyterian Church, Galt, was the scene of a pretty marriage of Miss Margaret Louise Barrie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Barrie, Galt, to Wesley Clement Dunn, eldest son of Mrs. and Mrs. J. A. Dunn of Hilton. Dr. M. B. Davidson conducted the service and Mrs. W. H. Barrie was soloist.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a floor-length satin gown with a fitted lace top and a slight train from the full skirt. Her headdress was a coronet trimmed with pearls and her mother's veil of Brussels net. She carried a crescent bouquet of sweetpea and pink roses.

Attending the bride were, Miss Hazel Franklin, maid of honor, and Misses Eleanor Barrie and Ruth Tandilands, bridesmaids. They were gowned alike in lace, matching caps and carried bouquets of mixed spring flowers.

The groomsman was Mr. Ross Beattie and the ushers were Mr. Geo. Atkins and Mr. William B. Barrie.

Upon their return from their honeymoon, they will reside on the groom's farm, near Wooler.

Presto Music Club

The April meeting of the Presto Music Club was held at the home of Miss Lavina Biggs on Monday evening. A very enjoyable and varied program arranged by Mrs. H. S. Robbins was presented:

Vocal, "The Lord, Most Holy", Franck, "Life's Lovely Things", Tamblyn, (Mrs. A. C. Locke).

Violin, "Sonata in D Minor", Spross, (Mr. D. LaFrance).

Vocal, "Since First I Met Thee", Rubenstein, (Irene Brown).

Vocal, "When Jesus Came", Hoffmeister, "Christ Went Up Into the Hills", Stanford, (Gladys Templer).

Piano "Rhapsody" Dohranyi, (R. Unwin).

Vocal, "The Legend of the Robin Redbreast", Teresa Del Riego; (Helen Cook).

Violin, "Unfinished Symphony —Second Movement", Schubert; "Adagio Cantabile" Beethoven's Sonata; (Dr. A. C. Locke).

Vocal, "Such a Green Hill Far Away", Gounod, (Leona K. Biggs).

Delicious refreshments were served by the hostess and a very enjoyable social hour completed an evening of fine music.

SUFFOCATED IN OAT BIN

Manson, Ia., April 6 — (AP)— Virginia Wiese, 10, was suffocated yesterday when she fell into an oat bin on her father's farm near here. Her cries for help were drowned out by a fan mill which was blowing oats into the bin.

Victorian Order Shows Increase In Nursing Visits

The monthly meeting of the local board of the V.O.N. took place Monday night in the Y.M.C.A. The new president, Mr. T. D. Ruston presided.

Mr. Ruston thanked the members for the confidence placed in him and pledged his services throughout the coming year.

Convenors and Delegates Appointed

Convenors of committees were appointed and delegates appointed to go to the annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the V.O.N. for Canada, being held in May in Ottawa. Delegates nominated were, the president, Mrs. G. W. Anderson; Mrs. Ray Grant with Mr. Douglas Burr and Mr. Geo. Wishart as alternates.

Report of Visits

The report of the nurse dealt with the nursing activities for the months of February and March and 133 new patients having been admitted to service in the two months. There were 934 visits made, an increase of 67 visits over the same two months of last year.

Miss McGeary noted that the greatest increase in visits were those to chronic patients, 81 more having been made this year in February and March than last year. Second in increase were visits to cancer patients, here the increase was 44 visits in the same period of time.

The trend of increased service to these groups has been held during the past year and when the visits to medical and surgical patients were included there was an increase last year of 706 over the year before to patients requiring bedside care.

Baby Conferences

There were 7 baby conferences held and 2 toddl clinics also 2 infant and pre school dental health conferences in the two months.

29 visits were made to St. Michael's and Cannilton schools during the two months.

Reminder to Board Members

Miss McGeary closed her report with a reminder to the board members that the chief aim of this organization is to supply bedside nursing on a visit basis to the sick in their own homes. This includes, not only care of the patient, but health teaching and demonstration of bedside care to those in the home.

EUCHRE PARTY HELD

On Monday evening, an enjoyable euchre party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. Addy, 47 Chatham East, sponsored by the Ladies' Auxiliary to the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Prizes were won by Mrs. Waite, Mrs. White, Mrs. Durvell and Mr. Savage.

The lucky chair prize was won by Mrs. Waite.

Refreshments were served by the hostesses.

Mrs. Quinney, president of the L. A. to the B.R.T., tendered a vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Addy for the use of their home.

Mrs. W. Donaldson Chairman Community Nursing Registry

The annual meeting of the Belleville Community Nursing Registry was held recently at the home of Mrs. Wm. Donaldson, Bridence, with a good attendance of graduate nurses from Belleville and district.

A summary of executive meetings for the registry since Monday, Feb. 28, was read by the Secretary, Mrs. E. Linscott.

Mrs. Newman, presented the treasurer's report and in the absence of Miss V. Gross and Miss Olive Bush, their duties, financial and educational, were given by the president.

Mrs. Alice MacDonald, director of Nursing, Belleville General Hospital, thanked the registrars for their co-operation and assistance to the hospital in supplying general duty staff nurses, as well as private duty.

The registry staff nus been completely changed during the year. Much regret was felt, when through illness, Mrs. Jay Glenn bell, registrar since the Belleville Community Nursing Registry started in 1941, resigned at the end of the year. Mrs. Mary Newman was appointed to fill the vacancy. Mrs. W. Donaldson is assistant registrar replacing Mrs. Tinney.

Chairman of the nominating committee, Miss Esther Lang, presented the following slate of officers who will serve for two years: Honorary Chairman, Mrs. Alice MacDonald; Chairman, Mrs. W. Donaldson; 1st Vice Chairman, Mrs. V. Armstrong; 2nd Vice Chairman, Mrs. J. Campbell; Secretary, Mrs. E. Linscott; Treasurer, Miss Mary Newman.

Committees: (first named convener chairman):

Finance—Miss M. Morton, Mrs. M. Newman, Mr. T. Dolan, Dr. R. Bird.

Credential—Miss E. Lang, Mrs. A. MacDonald, Miss M. Brown.

Public Health—Mrs. Watt, Miss H. McGeary.

Private Duty—Mrs. H. Winter

Publicity—Mrs. E. Linscott, Mrs. M. Newman.

Nominating—Miss G. Fox, Miss V. Gross, Mrs. A. Smith.

Educational and Welfare—Miss Pigden, Miss Lough, Miss O. Moore.

Twenty-four Hour Service

Mrs. Newman, registrar, 296 Charles Street and Mrs. Donaldson, assistant registrar, supply a 24-hour service to the public and receive calls for registered and practical nurses—2,224 calls were received in 1948 for registered nurses.

Emergency general staff duty is also supplied by the registry and there were 168 calls for this. Many calls are having to go unfilled due to the shortage of nurses on call. At the present time there are 47 active, 16 supplementary, two associate and three practical nurses members.

Calls for nurses are taken by telephone through No. 1125 a 24-hour service and are in answer to requests from doctors, hospital, or private individuals. All calls for the local Victorian Order of Nurses are taken by the Community Nursing Registry.

A petition was read signed by several of the nurses requesting an increase, to seven dollars per night hour of nursing service. This is the rate which has been in effect in many cities since early in 1948. Following much discussion, it was voted on and the results were almost unanimous. The new rates to become effective May 1, 1949. Shared nursing will be carried on as at present.

The executive are sending two delegates Mrs. Newman and Miss Armstrong to the Registries Conference in Hamilton, next month.

Mrs. Donaldson, president of the Belleville Community Nursing Registry, thanked the members of the executive with whom she had been associated during the past term, and asked the co-operation of the new executive. She stressed the fact to all members of the Registry, that as nurses, it was their duty to care for the sick, anytime during the day or night, whenever the need arose.

Beta Sigma Phi Holds Meeting

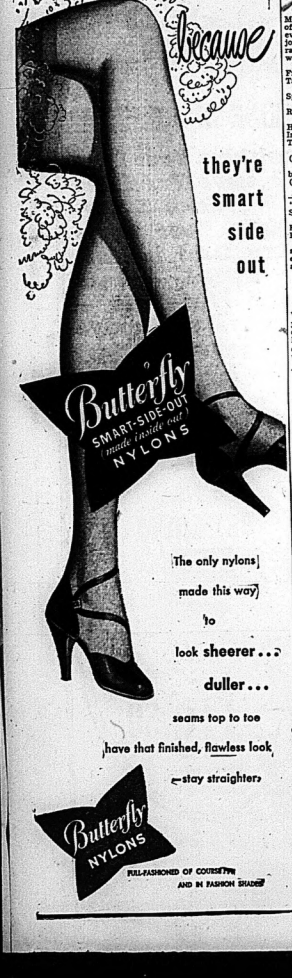
The open meeting of the Alpha Lambda Chapter of Beta Sigma Phi was held at the home of their social sponsor, Mrs. William McCutcheon, on Monday. The following were guests for the evening, Mrs. G. B. Scott, Mrs. A. M. MacDonald, Mrs. Doris Powers, Mrs. Eleanor Price, Misses Olive Casselman and Marion Brenan.

After the business meeting was completed, Miss Jean Sills, who was introduced by Gwen Bennett, addressed the members and guests, her subject being "What is Beta Sigma Phi". Margaret Brenan then introduced the next speaker, Mae Smith, whose topic was "Nature Themes in Music".

Before the meeting adjourned the hostess served tasty refreshments.

Friends Honor Miss Ruth Muir Bride-Elect

A delightful miscellaneous shower, sponsored by Miss Jean Rump, was held last evening at the home of Mrs. George Graham, 68 St. Charles Street, in honor of Miss Ruth Muir, bride-elect of this month.



Twenty girl friends of Ruth's were present, and passed an enjoyable evening playing euchre and bingo, after which a prettily decorated basket in pink and white was brought in and the lovely gifts unwrapped. In her usual gracious manner, Ruth thanked the givers, for the tangible evidences of their esteem, and for their good wishes for her future happiness.

Later, dainty refreshments were served by the hostess, Mrs. G. Graham, assisted by Miss Jean Muir.

Shower Held In Honor of Bride-Elect

A dainty personal shower was given on Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. Stanley Amo 156 Church Street, by Marion Brennan, in honor of Miss Marilyn Donovan, bride-elect of this month. Fifteen girl friends of the bride-to-be were present. During the evening, Marilyn and three of her friends played bridge, while the other girls were engaged in making a bride's book. After its completion, the lovely gifts were presented from a beautifully decorated basket, in pink and white, sheltered by a pink umbrella, from whose tips to the window sill above cascaded narrow streamers of pink and white, which extended to the handles of the cedar chest upon which the basket rested.

After the gifts were opened, and each complimentary thanked for her lovely gift, and also for the kind wishes expressed upon the pretty card accompanying it, refreshments were served by Mrs. Amo, assisted by Miss Marion Brennan.

GOOD MANNERS

Housewarming Plans

Dear Mrs. Beekman:

1. We recently moved into our new house, and sometime this Summer we would like to give a housewarming ... when we have finished, or practically finished, our furnishing. Is it correct to invite the guests by telephone, or should I write notes of invitation? However I give my invitations, would it be better not to use the term "housewarming", if this would mean that guests are expected to bring presents for the house? I definitely don't want them to feel any such obligation.

2. However, if some guests do bring presents and others do not, should I open the presents when they are given to us, or should I wait until later when those who haven't brought gifts are not present?

3. Do you suggest we have the housewarming on a Saturday evening or on late Sunday afternoon?

4. Is a buffet supper the most suitable thing to have? And what menus would you suggest?

Marie

1. Telephoning your invitations will be all right, but for such a special occasion a party I think should be more gracious and appropriate. Perhaps, as part of your new-home equipment, you're going to have Reformals with your new house address, and these would be perfect to use for your invitation notes. Or use small-size notepaper. If I were you I'd write the pleasant word "Housewarming" in the invitations, giving the happy reason for the party ... then leave it to the guests to do as they wish about bringing presents. (Guests aren't necessarily "expected" to bring gifts to a Housewarming.)

2. Although it may be a bit embarrassing to those who haven't brought gifts, it certainly would not be fair to those who did bring them not to open their gifts when they hand them to you. The givers will expect you to register your appreciation by opening their gifts at once, and saying enthusiastic things about them, and particularly about special features of each gift.

3. I suggest Sunday afternoon, say from four-thirty to seven, in the Summer, would mean that you could "show-off" your new house in both daylight and early evening hours.

4. Yes, plan to have a buffet service, either for tea-time or for supper, if an evening party. (And here's a way, with an attractively set table, to "show off" your new dining-room!) Your menu, for either tea-time or evening, may be as simple as tea (for afternoon) and /or coffee, with, for Summer, the cold-alternative of punch-or-whatever; small, assorted sandwiches, perhaps made of various kinds of bread; small cakes or layer cake. To elaborate this "basic menu" you may serve the always-welcome chicken salad, or tuna fish salad, and serve tea-biscuits or hot or heated rolls (first split and buttered) instead of, or in addition to, sandwiches; serve ice cream or cut-up fruit or fruit compote with cake or cookies for the dessert; and such accessories as celery, plain or stuffed; radishes; olives; nuts; candies. (And, as deputy hostesses, to preside over the tea-table, or buffet-supper-table, invite two or three women relatives or friends.) Also, you can "stay put" to greet your guests and make them welcome, ask one or two members of your family, or friends, to take over the delightful responsibility of showing the house to the guests.

Sends Swedish Flag To Stockholm, Sask.

Stockholm, Sask. — (CP) — Sixty-three years ago a group of Swedish settlers came to this northeast Saskatchewan district. Every July 1 they celebrate "Colony" day in conjunction with Dominion Day. A Swedish flag flies on the flagpole at the picnic grounds with the Union Jack.

But over the years the Swedish flag has become tattered. This year however they will have a new one. A response to a request from Stockholm, Sask., to Stockholm, Sweden, a parcel came recently containing a letter from King Gustaf of Sweden, his autographed photo — and a large Swedish flag.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Cold water a skin tonic

In the so-called good old days, when Grannie was a girl, it was believed that nothing but soap and warm water should be applied to the sacred complexion. If Grannie happened to have a little jar of cold cream, it was hidden away ... where Grandpa couldn't see it. His wrath would have been mighty. Cosmetics were sinful.

We know now that, while soap is necessary for daintiness and cleanliness, the epidermal cell needs more than that to keep it youthful, fine of texture, we good coloring. It has plenty of enemies—changes in the weather, harsh winds, atmospheric dust, physical upsets, loss of sleep. Soothing creams help it to combat these disturbing elements. Cold water and ice frictions play a large part in the treatment of the skin. They are marvelous stimulants and tonning agents.

Grannie hid her cold cream where Grandpa couldn't see it

The health and coloring of the skin is dependent upon the blood streams that bring nourishment to every cell, and rebuild and vitalize the underlying tissues. Splash on cold water or frick-an ice cube over your face and it will have a fine time. Look in the mirror. Red roses in your cheeks. Goodbye rouge compact. You are growing your own blushes. Fine business.

The girl who suffers from enlarged pores and oily skin—and the two conditions seem to be pretty pally—should pin her faith to cold applications. They cause the fibres around the tiny glands to contract, help to correct faulty secretory functions. They will, in time, produce a finer texture. The excessive use of oily cosmetics sometimes causes the pores to expand; they won't do that if the flesh has a brief refrigerating treatment every day.

Astringents are helpful when these conditions are present, also if the underlying tissues have started to soften. But they work with greater speed if applied when the flesh is cold. Put them on with pledgets of cotton. Then give the flesh a brisk tapping and slapping, being careful not to pull it up in folds around the eyes, a practice that may result in tiny sun rays around the eyes.

Plenty of cold water, inside and out, is a good beauty rule. Have your warm, soapy bath, using a heavy brush to remove dead skin scales and to invigorate against unpleasant odor, but do not omit the cold shower afterwards.

Some beauticians recommend an alternating hot and cold shower—hot while you count five, cold while you count three and repeat. Then for a brisk rubdown with a bath tonic.

Rouge, Lipstick, Incorrectly Applied Enphasize Your Age

The clean-cut outline of the lips is very important, says Movie Star Janis Carter, who likes to so ply her lipstick with a brush

By HELEN FOLLETT

AT a recent convention of beauty specialists one of the speakers said that a survey showed 90 per cent of American women past forty-five were employing the age by incorrect selections of make-up items and careless application. The commonest error seems to be the use of vivid rouge and lipstick. Subdued tints are more flattering.

Some women are using no rouge at all. That is particularly true of those who have a little natural coloring and are addicted to pinky-purple powder that imparts a delicate glow.

Outline Lips

It is something of an art, this business of reddening the mouth and laying on the rouge. Never must it be done before a mirror that is not well lighted. The clear-cut outlining of the lips is necessary, the pigment must be pressed into the creases; a lipstick brush will distribute the coloring evenly. Putting too much coloring on the inner surface so that it is picked up by the teeth, is a good looks crime. One sees the result of that all too often.

Nature, of course, is the perfect make-up artist, knows precisely what should be done. Blushes do a slick fade out, leaving no sharp lines. Think of that when you lay on the cheek rouge. Have a special lamb's wool puff for the purpose of blending rouge and powder.

The usual practice is to form a circular spot in the centre of the cheek. This is wrong. The rouge glow should start under the eyes, sweep to the temples, come down over the cheek forming a sort of triangle. The higher the application the more it will glorify the eyes that are the most interesting feature.

ADVICE to the LOVELORN

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A husband with two problems

Two quite unrelated problems have driven a reader, who signs himself "A Discouraged Man", to write me the following letter:

"Should a father and mother be loving and guiding, or do they receive no return affection?" is his opening question.

"In 1943 our son went into the service and two years later was captured by the Germans. He went away a loveable boy and came home with a chip on his shoulder and a world-owes-me-living attitude. After his discharge he ran away and got married to a girl who is making him a poor wife. Their home is a mess, and so is she, with untidy hair and clothes that need buttons. My son has grown so, too. They have two darling babies, and she is a good mother in her way, but she is never at home after lunch; always on the go.

"This is one of the problems. The second concerns the living conditions of this man and his wife.

"He says that a few years ago for reasons which he does not state, they "took over" her aunt's home. The aunt lived, he says, husband, who is apparently senile, has been there ever since, and they have become a considerable burden on this couple. Because of the uncle's condition, friends do not like to come to the house, and they now have little or no social life.

"My wife is in tears from morning to night and is becoming a nervous wreck. I've spoken to her, but she says, 'I love her so dearly I am hurt to see her this way.' I was able to give her very much and she hasn't had a decent dress or coat in more than two years. Still, I am amazed how well she keeps herself, and how beautifully she keeps our home.

"Aunt and Uncle have others who can care for them for awhile. Would it be right to suggest that they leave, and would it be best to ignore anyone who has lost all love for us and who is ruled completely by his wife?"

It seems to me it would be perfectly reasonable that the saying uncle and aunt should be looked after part of the time by others who are in a position to do so, so that this man and his wife might have a chance to live a more normal life. If this can be arranged, surely the husband could afford to get his wife a few new clothes so that she could go out and have some good times and keep up with her friends. It is hardly to be wondered at that a woman whose son ignores her, who never gets out of her house and whose only associates are a feeble old couple and a discouraged husband should be depressed.

As for the son I am afraid these parents can do little to improve that situation. It is a bitter thing for a father and mother to lose the companionship of a son in such a way, but I see nothing for them to do but put up with it as patiently as possible and keep hoping that things may change. After all, if he was "a loveable boy" before he went to war and came home with a chip on his shoulder, it is quite possible that he is suffering from an emotional upset due to his war experiences which may in time wear off as he gradually readjusts.

Pete the Hippo Wants Place to Lie Down

By JOHN O'REILLY
In The New York Herald Tribune

Construction work began Friday to repair the well worn concrete steps leading down into the hippopotamus pool at the New York Zoological Park, the Bronx, so that Pete, more formally known as Peter the Great, the world's oldest captive hippopotamus, will not slip and slide as he goes in and out of his bath.

The construction marks another step, or flight of steps, in the placid career of one of the last descendants of a historic family. Pete is 45 years old, which makes him a hippopotamus Methuselah. Dr. Lee S. Crandall, general curator of the zoo, explained that Pete is so old that he hates to lie down because it involves getting up again.

Dr. Crandall explained that, instead of lying down, Pete has developed the habit of sleeping in his pool. He goes down the steps into the water and just floats there while he dozes. His movements are as slow and careful as those of an aged man.

But he has gone up and down these steps so many times over the years that their once sharp corners have been worn smooth and round. Not being as agile as he used to be, Pete has been slipping on the steps recently. When he does he hits the water with an undignified splash.

Zoo officials feared that during one of these ungraceful belly-whoppers Pete might break a leg. So it was decided to repair the steps so that they wouldn't have rounded edges and would be skid-proof. The pool was drained and workmen started on the job Friday. It was estimated that it would take them a week.

But now comes the rub. Pete can't get in the pool and won't lie down. He weighs 4,500 pounds, and Dr. Crandall said you can't blame him for not wanting to strain his old muscles heaving all that weight. At last report he had been standing there for two days and nights. Sometimes he seems to doze off a bit while standing, but most of the time he just stands around looking sleepy.

Zoo officials go by to look at him, and there is considerable conjecture as to whether he will stand up the whole week. It has become a sort of hippopotamus standing marathon.

Many years ago there was a famous and prolific pair of hippopotamuses in the Central Park Zoo. Their names were Calli and Mrs. Murphy, and for years they provided most of the hippopotamuses seen in American zoos. Pete was their fourth offspring and was born on July 13, 1902. It was in the 19th century atmosphere of the old Central Park Zoo that Pete passed his childhood. (Hippopotamus means river horse, by the way, and young ones may be called colts.)

On July 14, 1906, he was bought by the late Samuel Thorne, a trustee of the New York Zoological Society, and presented to the Bronx Zoo. Pete cost $3,000 and was considered a big buy.

When he came to the zoo he weighed 1,705 pounds. He has weighed again on November 1, 1908 and weighed 2,512 pounds. In 1920, when he reached his maximum growth, he weighed 4,500. That has been considered as his weight ever since, although he has lost or gained a few hundred pounds at times.

For all these years Pete has enjoyed a placid life in the elephant house. Indoors he has his own and his pool. In the Summer he has an outdoor pen. In his younger days he used to frisk about when turned out for the first time in the Spring. He would overdo it and get charley-horses in his legs. But now when Springtime comes he walks through his door into the sunshine with his sedate majesty of the elderly.

* * *

Pete is so gentle that anybody can go into the cage with him. He has received generations of newspaper reporters with easy tolerance and has opened his great mouth wide in traditional pose for hundreds of news photographers. He has always avoided the pitfalls of adulation and remained his simple, solid self. He will cooperate to a reasonable point, but he won't fall for any foolishness. For example, on his thirty-eighth birthday they tried to put on something special. The keepers made a birthday cake of bran, ground carrots, oatmeal and hay. It was embellished with shredded cabbage, and carrots stuck out of the top to resemble candles. Next to the cake was a placard which said, "Happy birthday, dear Peter."

Pete refused to eat it. He took one look at the repelling masterpiece, snorted daintily and began to munch ammia grass.

There have been other things which easily could have made Pete disgusted with the human race. Once a scruffily unthinking visitor dropped a lighted cigar butt into his open mouth. The burn took a long time to heal. But, despite three experiences, Pete has always remained placid and unrebellious. In Summer he likes to watch the dusk families pass through his cage on their way to the park ponds. In Winter he likes to float and doze in his pool.

Leaves Mauritius For Home in B.C.

Vancouver (CP)—A 25-year-old dream will come true in May for 58-year-old Sir Donald Mac-Kenzie-Kennedy, British colonial administrator, and his wife, when they become "real Canadians."

Sir Donald, former governor and commander-in-chief of the island of Mauritius—800 miles east of Madagascar on the east coast of Africa—plans to find a small property near Victoria or Duncan to raise bulbs "and some breed of dog."

The MacKenzie-Kennedys are returning to Mauritius until May and then move to their new home, Canada first intrigued them when they spoke to and entertained R. C. A. F. men who supplied Mauritius with food and arms during the Japanese invasion threat of the Second World War.

"We intend to be Canadians — not English people living in Canada," Sir Donald explained.

New Zealand Waters Mecca For Fishermen

Auckland, N.Z. (CP)—After a wartime lull, New Zealand's fishing is again attracting anglers from all parts of the world.

Pre-war reports by anglers visiting New Zealand were often dismissed as fish stories abound. Indeed, the facts of New Zealand fishing read like an angler's dream.

Rainbow trout, introduced from North America, grow in New Zealand to sizes unknown in their native waters. Fish of over 20 pounds have been landed and trout well over 10 pounds are caught frequently.

Fishermen can land trout from a mountain stream and plunge them into a boiling pool alongside to cook. Though few anglers would choose to cook their trout in this way, it is feasible in thermal boiling springs that occur in the most unexpected places, some of them bubbling up from the beds of cold-water rivers.

The government is conserving New Zealand's trout fishing as a tourist asset. Limit bags are prescribed and day's fishing in the various acclimatized districts and the winter closed season is strictly enforced.

Millions of young trout are bred annually in hatcheries for restocking streams.

Big Game Fishing

The virtual cessation of big game fishing during the war has resulted in many fine catches in recent years. Big game fishing areas are in the warm-waters off the northern coasts.

New Zealand's northern waters are the home of giant tiger and threshey sharks and black marlin swordfish which grow to over 800 pounds, make sharks weighing up to 900 pounds and true striped marlin which go up to 450 pounds. An average catch is 200 to 300 pounds.

Fish above the 400-pound mark have been caught since the war. One claim for a world's record has already been made this season with a 459-pound striped marlin. Fishermen are keenly chasing the 1,000-pound mark for the king of big game fish, the black marlin. The record stands at 976 pounds, established in New Zealand over 20 years ago. Several over 900 pounds have been caught in recent years.

Both trout and deep-sea fishing are rich men's sports in many countries, but not in New Zealand. Trout fishing is within the reach of anyone who can pay the nominal license fee. Few waters are reserved for private fishing; almost all the finest areas are free to all comers.

UNEXPECTED CONTRIBUTION

Toronto, April 5 — (CP) — An unexpected contribution of $6 in nickels and dimes was made Monday to the Toronto Red Cross funds campaign. The donors were 45 persons — Toronto relatives of patients in the Hamilton Tuberculosis Sanatorium — who travel each Sunday to the hospital in a big chartered bus, the Red Cross. Occasion for the collection, made in the bus on Sunday, was the lowering of the round-trip fare from $1.25 to $1. Passengers plan to make the collection regularly every month.

PARACHUTES BEFORE CRASH

Reed City, Mich., April 5 (AP) —Maj. Ralph Johnson, 29, escaped death Monday night by parachuting a few minutes before his F-80 jet fighter crashed two miles west of here. He notified United States air force authorities at nearby Selfridge Field that he was unhurt.

Mother's contribution is a painless "Don't, baby!" Doesn't it simmer down to this answer? Which do you value most, your home or your friend? No mother takes kindly to even casual criticism of her children. If you want to keep Mother, it looks as if you will have to put up with Bobby.

SELFISH HUSBAND: "I have a husband who does not give me enough to keep my family of four, does not like me ever to go out of the house at night and is in a poor state of the time. Can a woman, feeling born with two personalities, end free, make her own way in Toronto?"

Before you do anything drastic, why not take the problem to your minister or the Salvation Army, 20 Albert Street? He deals with determination and strength you could make your own way in the world. But you would rob your children of a normal home life and father. Say the wise lads: "Try everything else before you break up your home."

Smouldering Labor Troubles May Set Back Season's Plans

(By The Canadian Press)

Over Canada's ocean ports, throbbing with preparations for the spring and summer shipping season, there's just one cloud in the sky.

It is the possibility that smouldering labor trouble may set back plans for a season generally expected to be as good as last year's.

Strife is developing between the Canadian Seamen's Union (T.L.C.) and the Seafarers' International Union (A.F.L.) and several deep-sea shipping companies may be caught in the crossfire.

Barring the disruption that could be caused by a long-drawn-out struggle, port activity is expected to be as great as in 1948 —and that was a good year — in Saint John, N.B., Halifax and St. John's, Nfld., and down a bit from last year at Montreal and Vancouver due to an expected drop in shipments to some foreign markets.

Figures Not Available

R. W. Hendry, port manager at Halifax, said he expects the spring and summer shipping season to be "as good as last year's or better."

Figures for last year's shipments at Halifax were not available but at Saint John import and export cargo last year amounted to 2,800,000 tons, with 1,092 arrivals and departures of ocean-going vessels. Port Manager Russel Yuill termed 1948 "fairly good."

Some of this summer's activity on the Saint John waterfront will be devoted to construction of facilities for next winter's shipping season. A pier is being rebuilt on the east side of the harbor at a cost of $3,350,000 and both the pier and a new immigration and customs building are expected to be completed by December.

Helps to Swell Cargoes

Newfoundland's entry into Confederation as Canada's 10th province is expected to swell the volume of cargoes handled at the island capital of St. John's. Shipping there was below normal last summer after the union referendum because merchants, uncertain how the impending political changes would affect prices, avoided stocking up on merchandise.

Normally, St. John's is nearly always a busy port, as it is the centre of nearly all the island province's commerce.

Montreal enjoyed a boom year in 1947, but since then the export traffic has fallen off. This year exports are expected to be less than last year but imports and domestic traffic likely will be about the same as in 1948. More than 2,000,000 bushels of wheat— in all, 27,000,000 bushels was exported last year — now is in port awaiting shipment.

Wheat Biggest Cargo

Wheat will be Vancouver's biggest export cargo this year, say West Coast shipping men. Much of it will go to South Africa. Volume of canned fish and of flour exports will depend on the markets. Last year, Russia was at the top of the list with wheat second but now there is little foreign market for Canadian lumber. Indications are that fewer ships will put into Vancouver this year than last but they are expected to take heavier cargoes.

Manitoba's ocean-shipping port of Churchill on Hudson Bay may be busier than usual this year. The Hudson Bay Route Association will ask at a Wheat Board meeting in Winnipeg April 23 that 16,000,000 bushels of wheat be shipped to Britain through Churchill this year.

Some 8,000,000 bushels of wheat were shipped by the northern route last year. Association secretary Frank Eliason says the Hudson Bay Railway from The Pas, Man., to Churchill and the port facilities would pay their way with an export of 16,000,000 bushels but will always show a deficit when no more than 5,000,000 bushels are funneled through Churchill.

Hungry Hopper Will Eat Lumber in a Pinch

From the Calgary Albertan

Saskatchewan is girding itself for battle. The worst grasshopper outbreak in the province's history is feared. Farmers in many parts of Southern Alberta are also mobilizing.

Those who have not lived through a grasshopper plague can have no conception of what it is like. The devastation is more complete than that of a 100 per cent. hailstorm, the desolation can be as oppressive as that in the wake of a flood.

Eggs are laid in pods in the top half inch or inch of soil in the Fall, usually in sod or on stubble or weed land, sometimes on bare summerfallow. By counting the number of pods in a square yard of ground, experts can tell whether the infestation is liable to be severe or not.

Spring weather always qualifies their prediction. If the weather is hot and dry the eggs will all hatch and the young hoppers all survive. If it is damp and cold most of them will die and there will be little damage.

Granted favorable weather, the ground will appear to quiver on a hot day in late May or June of the eggs break and the young hoppers, perhaps an eighth of an inch long, pop out and stretch themselves. The insect goes through no larva or pupa stage.

From the moment he is hatched the grasshopper has an excellent appetite. In a day he eats three times his own weight. The critical period for the crop is when the grain is small, perhaps just emerging from the ground or at most just a few inches tall. At that stage the hoppers may be no more than half an inch long but they can blacken and kill a field in a day. They relish most garden vegetables, too, and will chew holes in clothing. They have been even known to eat lumber.

They are born travellers. When they clean up one field they will move to another, although they hesitate to make a long trip when a short one will keep them in pasture. On a windy day, however, they may take to the air and travel miles.

If the weather fails to keep them in check they must be killed if possible. There is no other way to save the crop. Farm experts have devised a standard system and this is being publicized thoroughly in Saskatchewan. It is usually successful on stubble fields that are going to be summerfallowed, and since most of the grasshoppers hatch on stubble fields, infestation of a wide area can be greatly reduced.

First a black strip is plowed around the field. Then a narrow band of weeds or grass is left just inside the plowed strip. Then the rest of the field is blackened, leaving one or more narrow strips of weeds. The hoppers concentrate in these weeds and hesitate to move off because of the black earth on both sides. Before hunger gets a chance to drive them off, poisoned bait is spread on the strips. Already more than 350 carloads of sawdust have been shipped to Saskatchewan towns ready to be mixed with poison and fed to grasshoppers.

A new method of control is also now in use. A chemical is sprayed on the young crop. It kills all grasshoppers it touches, and also acts as a stomach poison. The cost will be about 20 cents per acre, equal to half a bushel of wheat in the yield.

There is emphasis, too, this year, on community rather than individual control measures. In Saskatchewan there is one responsible person in each district. If any farmer refuses to co-operate and thereby endangers his neighbor's crop as well as his own, his grasshoppers will be poisoned for him, but he will have to pay the bill.

FRANKFORD

Lions Club Pledge $500 to Trenton Hospital

Frankford—At the last directors' meeting of the Frankford Lions' Club, a donation of $500 was pledged toward furnishing a room in the new Trenton hospital. It was felt that this would be a very fine way in utilizing the profits of the arena. It will be used in a cause that will benefit many Frankford people, as everyone knows the difficulty being experienced in the overcrowded Belleville hospital.

The Lions plan to go to work in the very near future, on the Memorial Park, to restore the playground which was destroyed in the fire of the community hall during the war.

CHILDREN AFRAID

Oshawa, April 6 — (CP)—Police yesterday charged Philip Drux, East Whitby Township farmer, with allowing his animals to roam at large following complaints from residents there that two bulls and five heifers had been running loose. Police said that some residents had been afraid to let their children play outdoors for fear of the bulls.

Religious Liberty In East Europe Subject For U.N.

Hungary Raises Protest Over Placing Subject on Agenda

By NORMAN ALTSTEDTER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, April 6 (CP)— Consideration of religious freedom in Eastern Europe today was the scheduled subject of the first east-west clash in the reconvened United Nations General Assembly.

Australian and Bolivian requests asked that the 58-member "Town Meeting of the World" decide whether any human rights were violated in the Communist prosecution of Joseph Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary and 18 Protestant church leaders of Bulgaria.

Shortly before making the opening address Tuesday, Dr. Herbert V. Evatt, Australia's External Affairs Minister and President of the Assembly, received a protest from Hungary.

Hungary Charges Violation

The Communist state contended that the attempt to place the subject on the Assembly agenda was a violation of international law.

Evatt devoted his 15 minute speech to a spirited defence of the U.N. which he said is not responsible for post-war international difficulties.

Instead, Evatt claimed, "nearly all these difficulties have been caused by great power disagreements outside and independent of the United Nations."

He demanded that all regional treaties be subordinated to the U.N. charter.

Evatt did not refer directly to the Atlantic treaty, expected to be the object of a bitter denunciation by Andrei Gromyko, top Russian Deputy Foreign Minister.

The current assembly, a continuation of the Paris meeting, is expected to take at least six weeks to clean up left-over problems, including disposition of the Italian colonies and freedom of information, and the veto.

After the 21-minute opening session, the Assembly went into committee of the whole to elect replacements for officers of committees at the Paris meeting who could not attend this one.

George Ignatieff, principal adviser to the permanent Canadian delegation, was unanimously elected chairman of the administrative and budgetary committee.

Fernand van Langenhove of Belgium received a unanimous vote to head the political committee in place of Prime Minister Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium.

EFFECT OF BILL WILL FORCE SALE OF STAR CLAIM

Speaker Says Only One Foundation Affected

Toronto, April 6 (CP)—Eamon Park (CCF—Toronto Trinity) today renewed the opposition attack on the Ontario government's charities bill.

He told the legislature the effect of the bill would be to force sale of the Toronto Daily Star. The only persons who would afford to buy it would be "financial interests who can acquire monopoly control of the newspapers in this city."

The bill requires charitable foundations such as the Atkinson Foundation, owners of the Toronto Daily Star and Star Weekly, to dispose of all but 10 per cent of interest they may hold in any business.

Mr. Park said the CCF's main objection to the bill "stems from the fact that the bill will have the effect of destroying only one foundation," the Atkinson Foundation.

Persons who chose in future to leave their estates to charitable foundations could have their bequests set aside in such a way as to avoid the penalties of this act."

Mr. Park said it was his information that a Toronto lawyer, John B. D. Tory had been consulted in preparation of the bill and that Tory had acted for George McCullagh, publisher of the Toronto Globe and Mail, in the purchase of the Toronto Telegram.

Limits the Right

Ross McEwing (Lib-Waterloo North) said the bill "limits the rights of free people and in its far-reaching effects limits the rights of the free press."

The Progressive Conservative Government had a "definite prejudice" against the Star and its owners' cousin Joseph E. Atkinson.

Former Premier George Drew had referred to Mr. Atkinson as "a very evil old man" and "incorrigible liar," Mr. McEwing said.

Termed Ridiculous

W. G. Hamilton (PC-Wellington South) described as "ridiculous" the opposition's "hypocritical assault" that present directors of the Atkinson Foundation would lose control of the newspapers.

"Only 10 per cent excess shares were widely distributed among a large number of people. It was "reasonable" to assume that charities would not interfere with the operations of a paper by those working newspaper men.

Providing that the business is well run "only a handful of shareholders" would attend meetings or even voted by proxy, Mr. Hamilton said.

Agnes Macphail (CCF-York East) said "One doesn't have to be smart at all to realize that George Drew hated the Star."

"I find no one to think he would do anything he could to frustrate the intent of the owners of the Star.

"I think George Drew had a great deal to do with this bill."

Should Be Given Time

T. N. Foster (Lib.-Bruce) said the Atkinson Foundation should be given "a little time—five years or so—to get rid of five up to the terms of the will."

If the foundation had failed to do so "then would be the time to bring in a bill so drastic in content."

H. L. Walters (CCF-Toronto Broadview) said public opinion was something a legislature should be concerned about.

"In the forty years I have been Provincial Secretary I never met a piece of legislation that was so universally condemned."

G. T. Gordon (Lib.-Brantford) spoke briefly against the bill before the luncheon adjournment.

RESTRICTED HOUR BY-LAW

Oakville, April 5 — (CP) — Dissatisfied members of the Garage Operators' Association have threatened to take legal action against the town of Oakville unless a by-law restricting their hours of operation is declared null and void.

The members expressed the disapproval of the by-law at the Oakville council meeting Monday night. The by-law was passed under compulsion of the Office, Shop and Factory Act. Members said that the by-law didn't restrict two hours opened service stations to specific hours.

TORRID CLIMAX TO MEAT DEBATE IN BRITISH HOUSE

Conservative and Labor Members Nearly Come to Blows

London, April 6 (AP)—Conservatives and Labor members almost came to blows in the House of Commons Tuesday night in a torrid climax to a long debate on Britain's meat situation.

The government received a majority of only 62 votes in beating down a Conservative party motion to censure the cabinet's food policy. The vote was 247 against to 185 for the motion.

Conservative leaders claimed this was Labor's lowest margin yet on a major issue. It compared with the narrow 90-vote majority by which the Parliament recently approved early this year.

The centre of the turmoil was Food Minister Strachey, who was reporting on steps to ease the meat shortage. He said Britain would spend scarce dollars if necessary to get feed to build up the beef-cattle herds.

Conservative Martin Lindsay, apparently aroused when Strachey said the purpose of the opposition showed more political prejudice than patriotism, leaped to his feet and shouted:

"Is it in order for an ex-member of the Fascist party to cast aspersions on our patriotism?"

Roars of protest exploded all over the house. They were intermingled with cries of "Mosley!" The reference was to Sir Oswald Mosley, leader of the pre-war British Fascist party, which has been succeeded by Mosley's "Union Movement."

Nearly every member tried to say something. Strachey's speech was drowned out. It continued an expression of belief that Britain and Argentina would reach a new agreement on meat.

Finally a lull occurred and Strachey said: "I will accept that Mr. Martin Lindsay made the statement in all good faith and ignorance. It has no foundation in fact. I would invite him to withdraw it."

Lindsay said he would and added: "But I am sure he (Strachey) will understand our resentment against reflections upon the patriotism of the members of this (the Conservative) side."

Hon. Russell T. Kelly Must Take Rest

Toronto, April 6 (CP)—Hospital officials said today that Hon. Russell T. Kelley, Ontario Minister of Health, probably will be confined to bed in hospital for three weeks and will have to rest about four months after returning to his home at Hamilton.

The 72-year-old minister suffered a "slight heart attack" in his office Tuesday and was removed to hospital on a stretcher.

BIG THREE MAKE MAJOR EFFORT TO SETTLE POLICIES

Control of Western Germany Major Issue

Washington, April 6 (AP)—The United States, Britain and France are undertaking a major effort to iron out their differences over three-power control of western Germany.

Dean Acheson, Foreign Secretary Bevin and Foreign Minister Schuman held preliminary talks on the German problem last week while Atlantic pact Foreign Ministers were gathering here to sign the North Atlantic treaty.

Having devoted Monday to the treaty signing and Tuesday to the opening of the United Nations Assembly in New York, Acheson, Bevin and Schuman now can set to work in earnest.

Bevin is prepared to remain here until next week, if necessary, for the success of the talks. Each man is reported prepared to remain indefinitely, if need be.

Diplomatic informants said the preliminary talks had pointed up four major issues.

These basically involve the question of what kind of government the Germans themselves should be permitted to set up over the American, British and French zones, and what kind of controls the western occupation powers should exercise.

Issues Involved

The issues, as authoritatively reported, are:

(1) The extent of occupation machinery over western Germany in connection with proposed merger of all three zones.

(2) Dismantling of an occupation statute.

(3) How to vote in the three-power control agencies. Many experts consider this the key question.

(4) Centralization versus decentralization within the proposed new German government system. Essentially the question is whether Germany should have a strong or a weak central government.

One of the problems which German experts expect will have to be worked out in connection with these issues is the extent to which the United States may continue to have a mediating role in western economic affairs. When the British and American zones were economically merged the British accepted the principle that since the United States was supplying the bulk of the money to keep the German economy running, the Americans should have a dominant voice in deciding how the money would be spent. It is understood that Britain would like to modify this American dominance now and presumably the French share that desire.

RUNAWAY TANK CARS CAUSE TWO DEATHS

George, South Africa, April 6— (Reuters) — An engineer and fireman were killed Tuesday night when three runaway tank cars collided with a freight train near this station in Cape province. Onlookers were unable to rescue the men because of the heat from blazing gasoline from the tank cars.

Child Mangled By Dogs, Travels 1,000 Miles

The seven-year-old Eskimo girl suffered serious head injuries March 28 when attacked by a band of dogs in her tiny home village, 90 miles north of Port Harrison on the shores of Hudson Bay.

The child was accompanied by Mrs. B. N. Harper, wife of the federal government doctor at Moose Factory, Ont.

It is not yet known how long the child will be in hospital, but Mrs. Harper said it may be "several weeks." Her head badly mangled when set upon by the crazed animals, Anna was saved from more serious injury due to the fact that her parka was well bundled in heavy Eskimo attire.

Girl was flown from Port Harrison to the James Bay settlement, 500 miles south, and was immediately taken here by train.

Another pupil of Salmo girl, 16-month-old Aupaloo, was also attacked by the dogs but her facial injuries were not serious, Mrs. Dr. Harper and she did not remain to help Anna.

The two children were taken to Port Harrison by dog sled immediately after the attack.

Jolliffe Protests Over Editorial In Globe and Mail

Toronto, April 6 (CP)— C.C.F. leader E. B. Jolliffe today told the Ontario legislature a Toronto Globe and Mail editorial published today was a reflection on his integrity in implying that the Toronto Daily Star was his "client."

Mr. Jolliffe spoke before the orders of the day on a point of privilege.

Mr. Jolliffe said that the only time he had been employed by the Star in any capacity was some 22 years ago "when I received not quite $30 for acting for a few days as a reporter."

The suggestion in the editorial that he had been "able to trap" Attorney-General Blackwell into a "hair-splitting" discussion of succession duties during debate on the government's charitable gifts bill was "entirely unfounded."

The editorial had also suggested that Mr. Jolliffe's speeches were written for him.

"It is not necessary for other people to write my speeches. As most honorable members know my speeches are not written."

The editorial had also suggested incorrectly that the C.C.F. leader was seeking political advantage "potentially" from the Star by opposing the charities bill which will affect the Star's owners, the Atkinson Foundation.

Mr. Jolliffe said the editorial had also suggested that charges he laid in 1945 that the provincial government operated a "vicerect political police force" was "false" when they had been disproved by a Royal Commission investigation.

Two Hydro Men Injured in Blast Of Transformer

Clothing of One in Shreds Other's Nearly Burned Off

Hamilton, April 6 — (CP) — Two workmen caught in the searing explosion of a transformer in a downtown Hydro-Electric substation today lay in hospital in serious condition.

Hospital officials said the condition of Harold Wagner was "only fair," while his fellow worker, Frank Thompson, was in "fair" condition.

The two were working on the transformer, which had developed trouble, when it exploded Tuesday. The blast cut off power throughout the central business section for 32 minutes. The heat melted and twisted copper sheeting on a skylight, 20 feet above the transformer.

Hydro officials were unable to give a cause for the explosion in the 1,500-volt transformer, one of 12 in the building.

Charles Dulcey, working a block away from the sub-station was one of the first to reach the two men. He found Thompson in a dazed condition with his clothes in blackened shreds.

Delsey said Wagner's clothing was nearly burned off and his skin was brown as though it had been "roasted." He was found on the second storey, trying to climb out a window.

All Prisoners Examined by Doctors On Jail Admission

Toronto, April 6 — (CP) — All prisoners are examined by doctors on admission to jail and no prisoner is found to be pregnant she would not be permitted to do hard labor, an official of the Attorney General's Department said today.

His remarks came as the committee on the six months hard labor sentence to Mrs. Louis Lemay-in magistrate's court in Timmins yesterday.

Mrs. Lemay, 38, and pregnant, was sentenced along with her 31-year-old husband and their four children made permanent wards of the Children's Aid Society when they were convicted of neglecting the children.

The blast had ignited pans of oil used for insulating the transformer and both men were enveloped in the sheet of flame which shot up. Firemen extinguished the blaze before it ignited the building.

WELFARE PLANS

hotly accused the presiding officer of calling time before the Commons clock had hit 10.30 p.m.

The debate developed unexpectedly at the afternoon session and ran through night sitting except for an hour devoted to private members' bills. It was touched off by Mr. Coldwell on a government motion to go into supply.

Mr. Coldwell said the country wanted to know if the government favored national health insurance and when it was going to take the initiative to bring it about.

Constant Advance

Mr. Martin said the government's policy had been one of "constant advance," though perhaps it had not moved ahead as quickly as some would have liked.

Health was the responsibility of the provinces, and the Dominion did not want to interfere. The health program now in effect could succeed only if the Dominion respected provincial rights and obligations under the constitution.

Mr. Martin said there was need for a "preparatory state" in getting a national health plan under way, and that was in progress now. All provinces were co-operating fully.

The preparatory steps were necessary, he said, as that a hospital and medical care program could be worked out under the constitution in such a way that it would be efficient and not break down in its early stages.

Making Real Advance

"This plan," Mr. Martin said, "is going to realize the great purpose to which it was dedicated . . . We feel we are making a real advance."

A surprise development of the evening session was the bill of C. G. Power (L-Quebec South) for limiting campaign expenditures go through second reading, approval in principle — without a word of debate except for a brief explanation by former Air Minister Power.

Mr. Power's measure, brought up during private members' hour, would limit election spending in any constituency to 20 cents for each person on the voters list of the riding. It also calls for publicity on campaign contributions and expenditures.

Another private bill — sponsored by Clarie Gillis (CCF-Cape Breton South) — ran into opposition and was "talked out." It would provide for a change in the method of enforcement of the federal labor here. Labor Minister Mitchell opposed it and held the floor while the time for its consideration ran out.

Government announcement's at the House opening included one by Revenue Minister McCann that income tax allowances will be granted for depreciation on farm homes, at one-quarter the usual depreciation rate. The new ruling is retroactive to 1948.

Transport Minister Chevrier said he expects to announce this week the appointment of a consulting engineer on plans for the bridge to be built across Nova Scotia's Strait of Canso with federal aid.

Labor Minister Mitchell, in a review of the shipping strike called by the Canadian Seamen's Union (C.S.U.) on the East Coast, declared that the anti-red International Longshoremen's Association (A.F.L.) had applied pressure to shipowners to have them discard the C.S.U.

Donald Fleming Charges Speaker Time Clipped off

Ottawa, April 6 — (CP) — A stormy scene blew up in the Commons on the stroke of adjournment Tuesday night when Donald Fleming (PC-Toronto Eglington) rose to protest that Speaker Gaspard Fauteux had clipped off his time on the floor.

Amid an uproar from Liberal and Progressive Conservative benches, Mr. Fleming was trying to make a reply to an earlier speech of Defence Minister Claxton when Mr. Speaker declared 10.30 p.m.—adjournment time—had arrived.

The Toronto member, already angered over a forced withdrawal of his claim that Mr. Claxton had "deliberately distorted the record of the Dominion-Provincial Conference, hotly took issue with the speaker.

"That clock does not say 10.30," he shouted.

Then, when the speaker said that Mr. Fleming would adjourn the debate, the member declared:

"I have not moved adjournment. You have no right to put words in my mouth."

At that, Dr. Fauteux sternly told Mr. Fleming to take his seat or "he knows what I will have to do"—presumably, have the member ejected.

Mr. Fleming subsided then, but again told the House it was not 10.30.

As Mr. Speaker once more observed that Mr. Fleming was moving adjournment, the Toronto member said he was not moving it.

"Well, I'll move it," said Stanley Knowles (CCF-Winnipeg North Centre).

Brockville Man Named Honorary Colonel of Regt.

Oakville, April 6 —Lt.-Col. D.N. Lewis, O.B.E., E.D., of Brockville has been appointed honorary lieutenant colonel of the 90th Light Anti-Aircraft Regiment (Brockville Rifles) RCA, it was announced today by Central Command Headquarters.

A former mayor of Brockville and now County Court Judge, Lt.-Col. Lewis served in the ranks of the Royal Canadian Artillery in the Great War 1914-18 until commissioned in the field in 1918. In 1922 he was appointed as an officer in the Brockville Rifles and served with them between the wars until he joined the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Highlanders in 1940 as a company commander. He was appointed to command the Brockville Rifles in April 1942. The battalion served in Jamaica and at various posts in Canada, throughout the Second World War.

London Letter:

Another Link With Wartime Britain Soon to Disappear

By NORMAN CRIBBENS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, April 6 — (CP) — Another link with wartime Britain will disappear when the London Co-Operative Society takes over 200 Oxford Street, headquarters of the BBC's Overseas Service since 1941.

In the darkest days of the war many people came to know a narrow, bricked-in doorway near Oxford Circus with the number 200 painted on a small square board outside.

In and out of it scurried a miscellany of people, suggestive of the Arabian Nights—Indian girls in saris, Hindus in turbans, Arabians in flowing robes, Chinese, Cypriots and Negroes; service men and women wearing the flashes of every Dominion and colony in the Commonwealth.

At almost any hour you might see J. B. Priestly, Leslie Howard, Vernon Bartlett of Canada's Matthew Halton turning in out of the black-out to do a broadcast.

All round the clock transmissions went out to almost every part of the globe. While Britain was beleaguered, blockaded and bombed, her radio voice was calling night and day from underground studios in the prosaic building that had once been a departmental store.

For broadcasters on 24-hour call, or unable to reach their homes, there were rows upon rows of bunks in the basement, safe from the crash of bombs outside.

"Security was the watchword when Number 200 was being adapted for wartime broadcasting," a BBC official said, "and for a long time the general public had no idea where the station was located.

"There wasn't much comfort, but at that time it was more important to be safe, and the spirit of comradeship prevailing among wartime broadcasters would be hard to equal today."

Numerous offices acquired by the London Co-perative Society more than five years ago. Only when it will be taken over and converted into a Co-Op. department store is not yet known, but the change is expected some time this year. Meantime the CBC and some sections of the BBC continue to use the building.

Would Abolish Night Baking

London — (CP) — Britain's bakers have resumed their efforts to have night baking banned in this country.

So far they have been unable to work out an acceptable formula which would free some 28,000 of the 80,000 bakery trade workers from night shifts. Discussions are to be continued with the Ministry of Labor.

Master bakers, giving the employers' viewpoint, have suggested an arrangement by which night workers would be assured of six months' day work a year. Trade unions want all baking between 10 p.m. and 10 a.m. prohibited.

Opposition to night baking has been vigorous since 1948, when the first large-scale petition against it was presented to the government.

In the 1920s the International Labor Office adopted a convention urging national governments to do away with night baking but it was never ratified by the United Kingdom. Eire has abolished night baking except before festivals and holidays.

Ontario Signs Agreement With Federal Govt.

Ottawa, April 6 — (CP) — Ontario has signed an agreement with the federal government under the terms of the National Physical Fitness Act, Health Minister Martin announced in the Commons Tuesday.

Under the act, passed in 1943, the federal government makes available to the provinces $225,000 annually to assist them in developmen of fitness and recreation programs. The amount is divided on a per capita basis with Ontario's share amounting to $76,065.

The federal grant matches provincial expenditures up to the $74,000 maximum.

The agreement with Ontario is on a yearly basis, the minister said.

All provinces except Quebec and Newfoundland have agreements under the act.

"For some years Ontario has had a fitness program under its department of education but outside the scope of the National Physical Fitness Act," Mr. Martin said. "The adherence of Ontario is a step in which we feel will be of substantial mutual advantage."

At Toronto, Education Minister Porter told the legislature the grants will be used by the province in its community programs activities.

Mr. Porter said a department of education staff administering the community programs was trained to deal with recreation, music, rural programs, dramas, citizenship, craft, adult education and radio. The physical fitness branch of the community programs dealt with training of camp counsellors, citizenship, corps training. For this combined activities the department had appropriated this year $682,000.

100 NEW AND ENLARGED BUILDINGS help provide more and better telephone service

IN THREE SHORT YEARS, despite labour and material shortages, we have put up 50 new telephone buildings and greatly enlarged 50 others. Altogether we have added 444,000 square feet of space to help in the big expansion and improvement program which is making your telephone service better all the time.

Building costs have gone up 45% in these three years. Yet, up to now, despite rising costs on all sides there has been no increase in the basic telephone rates established 22 years ago. Few things give you so much real value at such low cost as your telephone.

We've broken all records, but there are still orders we haven't been able to fill. We will keep right on working and building to make your telephone service a bigger bargain than ever — to continue to provide more and better service at the lowest possible cost.

Ottawan Debunks Some Tall Yarns About the Yukon

By MEL SUPKIN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa — (CP) — "Humph!" humphed the debunker. "To think there are people that actually believe stuff like that."

The man doing the talking was Otto Nordling of Ottawa who has set himself up as unofficial debunker of tall tales about the Yukon Territory. And, according to Ottawa, there's plenty of work to keep him busy.

"That's the best I've seen in a long time," he said referring to a newspaper story which he described as "the first big fairy tale of 1949."

The story, related in Sudbury, Ont., was about a "genuine cull-dozer man" named Earl Mitchell, 28, of Victoria, B.C., who was taking time out from his regular duties for a cross-country jaunt by dog team.

Mitchell was quoted as saying he normally runs the mail by "dog sled and horse" from Dawson City to Whitehorse, whiskey, a mere 665 miles.

That's the first time I've heard Whitehorse was in Alaska," said the debunker.

"The mere 665 miles they speak of between Dawson and Whitehorse is 390 miles via the old Overland Winter Stage route and the air passage which Canadian Pacific Air Lines fly is 290 miles.

Authority on Yukon

His latest job on debunking completed, Otto turned to other thoughts on his favorite subject. He has spent the greater part of his 59 years in the Yukon and is a walking reference book on facts and figures about his favorite part of Canada.

For instance, without any prodding he'll tell you that the Yukon has 206 days of winter, 30 days of spring, 87 days of summer and 42 days of autumn.

He'll remind you that there are about three weeks of continuous daylight during the summer, during which folks sleep with the blinds down; that the territory has a population of about 5,000; that Dawson has about 800 people and that there are two banks, five hotels, one skating rink and a curling rink in the town.

He likes to talk about the old timers who, he says, are "the most optimistic people in the world; they always hope to strike it rich."

Among the most colorful are Klondike Kate Rockwell Mallon Stanton of Bend, Oregon, one of the original dance hall girls of the 1896 gold rush days.

Otto may seem young to talk about the famed exploits of the Yukon in the rough and ready gold rush days. But what he did not see, he says he was given first hand.

He arrived in the Yukon 23 years ago to join his father, in 30 years there Otto became an honorary member of the Yukon Order of Pioneers.

It wasn't until 1936 that he first came out of the north. That was a trip to New Westminster, B.C. It provided him with his first view of that strange contraption called the street-car. A few years later he came to Ottawa where he is attached to army headquarters.

GENERAL RATE DOWN

Sudbury, April 5 — (CP) — Sudbury's 1949 general tax rate is down from last year. After weeks of special secret meetings, city council Monday night announced the outline of the 1949 tax structure for Sudbury — with a drop of 1.53 mills in the general rate as a feature. General rate for 1949 will be 28.97 mills, compared with 30.5 mills in 1948.

Because the public school board budget calls for an increase of 4.19 mills this year, public school supporters will pay more taxes this year than they did last. Their all-inclusive rate is 36 mills compared with 36 mills last year.

Separate school supporters will pay the same total rate as in 1948, 67 mills.

Big Game Bird Lost to Ontario

The wild turkey is a game bird without equal in a world once well provided with game birds, C. S. D. Clarke writes in Sylva. He is beautiful as the autumn woods where he is hunted, fast on the wing and afoot, wary to a wonderful degree. On the table he has an aroma and flavor that has made turkey the symbol of the good cheer since the days of the New England Puritans and their first Thanksgiving. And what a steal! A day's bag of lesser game birds can be used as stuffing for one ordinary turkey and some of them would certainly gain flavor in the process.

Turkey's Range

The original range of the wild birkey was eastern United States, the forested part of the Mississippi Valley and some of the southwest, extending into Mexico, where the civilized Indians of long ago had succeeded in the domestication.

A stranger with a view of Canada in its moden proportions and some idea of the southern type of forest with which wild turkeys are associated might be surprised to hear them mentioned as Canadian birds, but they were once very decidedly associated with Canada. Before Confederation "Canada" meant only Quebec and Ontario. Into the latter on its southern fringes, outside the southern hardwood forests of the United States.

The province was still young when turkeys started to get scarce. We don't need to look far for a reason. In the states, as far north as Kenjivania, where turkey still hang on none too scarcely, it has been found that it takes over 1,200 acres of range to produce one bird for the game bag. The requirements were surely at least as large in Ontario where winters can be bad for ground feeding game, and as turkeys travel in flocks, the range per bird needs to be multiplied accordingly.

Needs Woods

Turkeys need woods, not necessarily coniferous, but still substantial. As a matter of fact their decrease marched with settlement. Gourlay wrote in 1822 that they were "now scarce." King's "Sportsman and Naturalist in Canada said the gradual extermination of this noble bird proceeds slowly but surely year by year," in 1896.

In those days, there were temporary natural checks, from which the birds recovered. For instance, in the winter of 1842 they were nearly wiped out by the severe weather. Yet in 1874, Forest and Stream records that visiting sportsmen had good hunting, and there are excellent later accounts in the same magazine of turkey hunts under real Canadian conditions. December was a favorable month and the weather was sometimes very cold.

Somewhat earlier decade the turkeys were gone in most of these counties. This history duplicated that of the wild turkey in the adjoining states. Illinois, they were gone by 1871, Northern Indiana by 1870, in southern Indiana by 1900, in Michigan by 1886, in Wisconsin by 1872. We may say that the turkeys in most of their range near Ontario were gone before 1890.

Western Ontario

Sandys wrote in 1902, "Thirty years ago one could drive in almost any direction through the woods of Western Ontario and reasonably expect to see the birds feeding before their tracks crossing the snowy roads. Twenty years ago the range had narrowed to the big woods of the western tongue of Ontario. Ten years ago the last stronghold had dwindled to the wildest parts of about three counties. Today, there are perhaps a single narrow strip where one might strike a trail and possibly catch a glimpse of a fleeing survivor of the oldtime hosts."

The last bird recorded from Elgin county was killed in 1889, but it was from a flock and the fate of the others is certain but unrecorded. In 1900 Game Warden D. C. Quallins reported a flock in Kent, the last that we knew of outside of Essex county. We wrote that "As our timber is becoming depleted very fast I am afraid the turkey will go."

As a child, I was fascinated by an uncle's description of the wild turkeys on a farm near Maidstone in Essex County in the '90s. On cold mornings they would be scratching at the strawstack, near the barn, plumage iridescent in the first rays of the morning sun, something about their very pose and stride marking them as wild at a glance. As the woodland door opened they raised their heads higher and higher until they seemed to grow as tall as men and as thin as rain, to take off in a flash, on mighty wings, when door was thrown open. Across the road was a large unbroken stand of timber, which was doomed and which vanished in the '90s or earlier. There were plenty of turkeys then — and they loved the stooks and stubble of fall wheat even as pheasants do now, and could do real damage. There were some mighty hunters there, and some notable turkey feasts.

AWARDED DAMAGES

Newark, N.J., April 5 (AP)—Mrs. Evelyn Branden Monday was awarded $2,000 in damages because a car ran and crushed her foot into a too-small slipper. She had said a shoe store because the clerk "failed to use reasonable care, skill and judgment in fitting shoes" resulting in a torn ligament in her foot.

Eight Guests Rescued From Beverage Room

Hearst, April 5 (CP)—Eight guests were rescued Monday night after they were trapped by smoke as fire swept the beverage room in the Queen's Hotel in this bushland community some 140 miles northwest of Timmins.

The guests were in their rooms on the second floor of the hotel and it was 15 minutes before firemen heard their cries for help. The heavy smoke swirled up to their floor and many thought it had caught fire.

Volunteer firemen Bert Buck and Lad Medve were first to sight the trapped guests and they put up ladders to carry the three women and five persons to safety.

Damage, confined mainly to the beverage rooms, is estimated at $5,000. Firemen laid the blaze burst from the furnace room of the frame structure. They are investigating a report of defective wiring.

POLICE SAY SUICIDE

Kitchener, April 5 (CP)— Police today said James Johnston, whose body was found by his common-law wife Saturday lying half-clothed in a bath tub near an unlit gas heater, met death by suicide. They said an inquest would not be held.

Police Monday investigated a suicide note found near the 31-year-old man's body after his brother, Earl Johnston of Guelph said it was not written by the dead man. Today they made no statement about the note nor about whether an autopsy would be ordered.

Detroit Will Meet Maple Leafs In Finals For Stanley Cup By Defeating Canadiens 3-1

Detroit, April 6 (CP)—Detroit Red Wings prepared here today to make their second straight bid for the Stanley Cup against Toronto Maple Leafs.

They earned the right to meet the defending champions Tuesday night when they scored a 3-1 victory over Montreal Canadiens in the final game of a best-of-seven semi-final playoff series.

Last year Detroit lost out in the final round by losing four straight games to the Leafs.

Coming through in one of the toughest series in modern National Hockey League playoff series, the Detroiters battled fiercely to gain the decision over the Montrealers Tuesday night.

Again big Gordie Howe proved the hero. He rapped home his team's first goal after three minutes of play in the first period.

A tower of strength to his team, the 21-year-old native of Sask., scored his eight goal of the series when he unleased a crashing 30-footer at goalie Bill Durnan.

Rearguard Leo Reise rapped home the winning counter midway through the second period after Glen Harmon and Montreal had put the teams back on even terms. Jerry Couture's tally 1:-ite in the same period clinched the game for the Wings.

It was the fourth straight game of the series that was decided by a 3-1 score.

Both Man Short

Both teams were a man short in the first period when Sid Abel sent Horvy through the Montreal defence to score the first goal at 3:17 mark.

The teams were again playing a man short when Harmon tied it up early in the second period on a 50-foot screened shot.

Less than minutes later Reise intercepted the puck in the Montreal end and fired a 40-foot backhander that dropped behind Durnan. Couture notched the clincher with less than two minutes remaining in the session. His goal came while big Butch Bouchard of Canadiens was serving a holding penalty.

Clarence Campbell, President of the N.H.L., announced after the game that the first two games of the final series would be played in Detroit Friday and Sunday.

Coaches Dick Irvin of Canadiens and Tommy Ivan of Wings agreed that their series was decided on "breaks."

"We got them because we made them," added Ivan.

Line-ups:

Montreal: Goal, Durnan; defence, Bouchard, Reardon; centre, McKay; wings, Curry, Blopolle; subs, Harvey, Plamondon, Carveth, Harmon, Richard, Fillion, Bevy, Mosdell, Dussault, Layoce.

Detroit: Goal, Lumley; defence, Quackenbush, Kelly; centre, McCabe, Stewart, Reise, Lindsay, Howe, McNab, Abel, Polle, Podolsky, Dunn, Pavelich, Fogolin.

Referee: Frank (King) Clancy. Linesmen, Sammy Babcock and George Hayo.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE H. CARVER, Sports Editor

Secondary only to the flaming Stanley Cup series which opened last night is this torrid battle at present being waged between the Hot Dukes of Marlborough, Toronto and the equally sizzling Millionaires from Sydney, Nova Scotia. While Toronto was only expected the Mounties to be mere or less pushovers for the haughty Dukes, there are others who have seen sport waged up around the Cape Breton and kiddies' camp Cape Bretoners don't fool whether it is hockey, kiddley-winks, pinochle, cod-fishing or plain barroom brawling. Even the current crop of Sydney Millionaires are not 100 per cent home brews—there's a lot of Ontario hockey talent in the picture, but that's not exactly the theme of this piece.

* * *

There's just three things that will stop a Cape Breton coal-miner or any other resident who's sportsminded in that rugged part of Canada from going to work. They are Navies, a baseball game or a hockey match where the local team is involved. Sydney, North Sydney and Glace Bay were the three squads which lobbed furious battle in the Cape Breton Senior League this season—and if you think that loop is a tea-party, then the Battle of the Bulge was a rehearsal for a spinsters' convention.

* * *

Yep, you can take any Cape Bretoner, or Sydney resident from the Esplanade to the former Maclean Mill (we presume that formerly swank building is still in existence), and they don't fool when it comes to sport. It's a deadly serious matter, and woe betide any upstart soldier-man who takes issue with burly MacDonalds, MacIntoshes, MacIntyres, or any of the hundred and one other "Mac" families who can cuss alternately in English or Gaelic, when the chips are down or a stalwart Sydney or Cape Breton squad is in sports action.

* * *

It was during our enbship with a Halifax paper way back in the early twenties that we had an overseas assignment with a Cape Breton team. It was in those days that we boosted wavy hair, a perfect thirty-six measure, a lot of youthful exuberance, a yen for sea food, and a more than passing ability as a quarter back on a rugby football team.

* * *

In the working days of the week which included the Sabbath at times, we chased VIP's (very important personages) up and down the top decks and cabins of swank passenger liners when they docked in port. In short we covered the waterfront and included everything from the "Queen's of that day to fishing schooners from Gloucester, Lunenburg, and the Grand Banks of lowly lobstermen and mutual man-owners from St. Pierre et Michelon which hauled into port with disabled sailing ships, or shortage of provisions. We saw the banana boats pull from the Indies laden with fruit and sugar, and saw them heave anchor and depart, heavily laden with cargo of fish and potatoes". Dried cod, and pickled herring from Scotia and the "sneaphies" from "Spud Island."

* * *

In the off-moments when the baby was resting peacefully in the press bed we got in an occasional game of rugger. Geo Ahearn, now chief magistrate of Halifax, was then sports editor of the Mail of those days. Joe White, dead now, held down a similar post with the Chronicle, Crack team of the city league, the pet aversion of dear old "Doc" Hare-then Dalhousie's "big house" University was the red-and-black clad Wanderers. The Crescents squad used to have a crack team of rugby players but usually ice hockey and football the college and the Wanderers fought bitter battles for city supremacy.

* * *

Wanderer stars of those days were Jimmy Hunter, diminutive Richie McCue, physically a "Mac," but he's not—he was one, Fred Temple, Smith and others. In this particular year the Wanderers swept everything before them. They took the city league with ease and went on to defeat Acadia University, Mount Allison, St Francis Xavier, and finally, we think it was either the St. John Trojans or the University of New Brunswick, for the Maritime championship and the right to battle for the McTier Cup, emblematic of the championship of Eastern Canada.

* * *

But just prior to the date for the McTier Cup game there came a letter to the Wanderers office. It was signed by the secretary of the Caledonia Football Club of Cape Breton. Caledonia, it appears had swept clean the slate of Cape Breton teams, and wholeheartedly gave Wanderers the right to defend series "Maritime Champions" when as yet they had not met the Caledonia team. The letter exuded a touch of hillarity in Wanderer circles. Who are these Caledonia guys anyway? Someone looked it up and discovered that Caledonia was a small mining village in Cape Breton. Ah, if those cranium-inflated Wanderer youngsters had only known.

* * *

"Sure, let's play 'em," they chorussed. "It will be just a practice game for us. Bring 'em on next Saturday."

The challenge was accepted. The Wanderers' Grounds, nevertheless was packed to the sidelines for the game. The ten light-footed Wanderer forwards and backs trotted on the field to the accompaniment of thunderous cheers. Thus far Caledonia had not put in an appearance. As the ten jerseyed gang swung off the field to the clubhouse, a door opened in the visitors quarters and there emerged something that practically stopped the cocky self-styled Maritime champions in their tracks.

* * *

Fifteen giants wearing blue jersey with a diagonal white stripe, with white trunks knitted out of the door. And as the Wanderers stood and gaped they aped with all the grace of gazelles toward the sideline ropes. As a team they vaulted on to the field and in column of route trotted around the entire enclosure before breaking formation and starting to punt footballs so high to the sky they almost became specks before succumbing to the law of gravity.

* * *

That day, kiddies, was a sad one in the football history of the famous Wanderers. The Caledonians, none under 5 feet eleven, not only knew the rules of rugby to a letter but could recite them forwards, backwards and inside out. Not only that, they knew a lot of rules that weren't in the book. They could run, kick, and beat of all, from their point of view, they could hit. They did not spare the horses. They chewed on large chunks of coal between scrimmages, and spat coke-dust in the eyes of the opposition at every chance. They could heave that ball at least forty feet on the throw-ins and when they started on extension runs their quarters and halves spread out in formation that would give the crack RCAF squadron the jitters. Yeah, there wasn't much to it. It was a matter of time. Oh yes the score. Caledonia 15-Wanderers 0. That was the game score. The physical score was Wanderers 12 more or less disabled, Caledonia 0.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

Regina, April 6 (CP)— The boys in the fight business say a good big man can beat a good little man every time. The same is sometimes true of big cities versus little centres.

Two years ago a new era in Western Canadian curling got its start in the northeastern Saskatchewan town of Nipawin.

Some of the most brilliant names in Canadian curling participated in the bonspiels put on by the little sports-minded centre of 1,400 persons. The richest prizes ever offered in the roarin' game drew curlers from Minnesota to British Columbia. It was the start of the curling craze now called auto 'spiels.

Cam (Saskatoon Star-Phlenix) McKenzie sees the possible end of Nipawin as a promoter of these big-time 'spiels.

"The financial success of the recent Quaker (Saskatoon Hockey team) autospiel seems to prove that big bonspiels of this sort are meant for the larger centres," Cam writes.

"In small centres a similar gate is not possible despite all the fine promotional efforts," he says. "Autospiels at Nipawin and Hosteland, Sask., were just as well organized as the one here, and not nearly so rushed, yet neither of those Dominion events came close to approaching the profit shown by the Quakers."

City Slickers Can Be Beaten

Scotty (Regina Leader-Post) Melville also puts in a plug for the small centres. A hockey team of Indian boys from St. Michael's School of Duck Lake in northern Saskatchewan became midget champions of Saskatchewan by beating a Regina team in the final.

"The Indians boys came out on top in a field of 28 teams . . . the city slickers can be beaten. There is a success story that should make other small centres in Canada take notice.

Maple Leafs Ready to Tackle Detroit Wings

St. Catharines, Ont., April 6 — (CP) — Toronto Maple Leafs today knew who they had to battle to retain the National Hockey League's Stanley Cup, and they took the knowledge calmly.

Tuesday night Leaf players huddled around radios at their training camp here and listened intently while Detroit Red Wings hung a 3-1 defeat on Montreal Canadiens to advance into the final round of the playoffs. The Red Wings won the best-of-seven series 4-2.

The Leafs will leave by train tomorrow night for Detroit to take up the first two games of their best-of-seven series. The first game is slated for Friday night, the second Sunday.

Although there was no visible optimism among the players, there is at least one person who gives the defending champions a better-than-average chance to clinch the series.

Archie Campbell, veteran trainer for the Leafs, claims "It's a long time since I've seen a club as ready to play and mentally alert as this one. Last year's club was just about the best I ever worked over and this one isn't far behind. They're physically perfect and sharp upstairs."

The champs will need everything Campbell claims they have in the semi-final series last Wednesday, had been holding two practices daily here.

Stanley Cup Dates

Detroit, April 6 (AP)— Here is the schedule for the best-of-seven Stanley Cup championship series between Detroit Red Wings champions of the National Hockey League, and Toronto Maple Leafs.

At Detroit, Friday April 8 and Sunday April 10.

At Toronto, Wednesday April 13 and Saturday April 16

At Detroit, Sunday April 17 (if necessary)

At Toronto, Wednesday April 20 (if necessary)

At Detroit Saturday April 23 (if necessary).

Sydney Squad Ready for Marlies In Fourth Game

Toronto, April 6 (CP)— Coach Jack Fritz, still beaming over Sydney Millionaires' 8-4 victory over Toronto Marlboros on Monday, brought his team here today from their training camp at Oakwa, 30 miles away, for the fourth game in their best-of-five Eastern Canada semi-final hockey series.

With the series knotted at one game each, with one game tied, Fritz predicted: "We've got a 50-50 chance of winning. I'd say."

Joe Primeau, Marlboros' coach wasn't quite as happy. Referring to Monday's defeat, he said Sydney "skated and checked and we couldn't get untracked."

Injuries to two defencemen are giving Primeau some worry. Veteran Flash Hollett suffered a bruised and swollen right hand in the last two seconds of Monday's overtime struggle and Hugh Bolton picked up a bruised leg. However, both are expected to dress tonight.

The Marlitmers are injury free are expected to ice the same team that started Monday.

Fifth game in the series will be played Friday with a sixth, if necessary Monday.

Reserve Clause Protects Investment of Club Owners

By TED SMITH

New York, April 6 — (AP) — Baseball is big business with a $200,000,000 to $400,000,000 investment in ball parks and talent. All its top men say it must have the reserve clause to live.

Not since the Federal League challenged the two majors in 1914-15 has baseball been under such heavy legal attack as now. Danny Gardella, a non-star player formerly with New York Giants, started it with his $400,000 suit aimed at the clause, which ties players to their club.

In 1922 the United States Supreme Court finally ruled in favor of organized baseball on the damage suit growing out of the Federal League fight. Ever since, baseball has rested secure on that decision.

The reserve clause has been in every baseball players' contract for 60 years and here is the structure that has risen:

Last year baseball had 60,000,000 paid admissions.

There were 58 leagues operating in 438 cities.

In organized baseball there are 8,500 players. Sandlot, college and informal ball players are not counted.

None Less than $5,000

Of the 400 players in the majors not one gets less than $5,000 yearly. Salaries range up towards $100,000 for stars such as Joe DiMaggio and Ted Williams.

Baseball, although a commercial enterprise, is accepted on a non-commercial basis as important news. Newspapers, radio stations and now television spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to report it, not set millions of words.

Professional baseball operates within a tightly knit organization At the top is Commissioner A. B. Chandler, presiding over all minor leagues is George Trautman. Under the major-league agreement there is unity from the richest big city club down to the humblest class D organization. If ment for Gardella.

Chandler bans a man there is no place for him in professional baseball. That is the basis of Gardella's suit.

Territories Defined

League territories are sharply defined, sals and control of franchises is supervised, and baseball players and club owners who have wavering ideas are disciplined.

The influence of the major leagues reaches down all through the minors. The big boys own or support clubs in the smaller leagues and use them to develop ball players. This is the "farm system."

Baseball men all agree that without the reserve clause this mighty cathedral of sport could never have been built. They is the clause as important; here is a sort of composite argument from the side of baseball management:

"The reserve clause protects the investment of the club owners in the players. It is true it makes a player the property of a club to be sold or traded or even release at will. It is also true that in the event a salary dispute it prevents him from bargaining with another club.

Two Important Things

"But on the other hand it does two very important things: It permits a club to build a team of a solid team and it assumes even competition all through the league. It protects the fans and money the big leagues spend under reserve, and encouraging ball ... .

"It is the reserve clause that protects the brainy planning of the small fellow. When he gets hold of a star he can build a club around him, or, if worse comes to worse, he can sell him for up to $250,000.

"That keeps up baseball. The players don't suffer because baseball wasn't protected by the reserve clause it couldn't pay the big salaries it does. So in the end everyone gains. There may be occasional cases of injustice, but it all evens out."

Tomorrow — The league argument for Gardella.

Contest For all Offices at O.B.A. Convention

Toronto, April 6 (CP)— W. J. Snyder of Hallmton has been re-elected secretary-treasurer of the Ontario Baseball Association by acclamation. But there will be contests for all other offices at the O.B.A. annual meeting in Peterborough next Saturday.

Fred Bradley of Hamilton and Fred H. Young of Chippawa, have been nominated for President and G. F. Krankland of Toronto and W. F. Nickel of Stratford will contest the Vice-Presidency.

Nominations for executive posts include: William Dane Owen Sound; M. L. Gregg, Wingham; F. C. Lannan, Port Colborne; W. F. Nickell, Stratford; L. Fennell, Brantford; Robert Smith, Napanee; A. E. Stirling, Chatham; Albert Walker, Oshawa and C. E. G. Whatley, Peterborough.

Tulsa Oilers Even Series With St. Paul

St. Paul, Minn., April 6 (AP)— Tulsa Oilers and St. Paul Saints were en route to Tulsa today, each with a victory in their best-of-seven United States Hockey League playoffs.

They meet in the third game of the series Thursday night at Tulsa.

St. Paul squared the series here Tuesday night by holding Tulsa scoreless after the first period. The Saints won 4 to 2 on two third-period goals by Harry Bell and Mitch Porter.

Each team scored twice in the first period, Bobby Schnurr and Nick Knott getting the Oiler goals and Scotty Cameron and George Agar scoring for the Saints.

Terry Reardon, Coach of Reds, Plenty Happy

(By The Associated Press)

Terry Reardon, player-coach of Providence Reds for 15 years old today and the popular skipper has plenty of reason to celebrate.

The Reds presented Reardon with a handsome gift Tuesday night by nipping the St. Louis Flyers at Providence 3-2, to move into the final round of the American Hockey League's Calder Cup series.

Winners of the eastern division pennant in a breeze, they take on Hershey Bears Thursday night in the first game of the best-of-seven final series.

Reardon helped his cause by scoring the first goal of Tuesday night's game before a record crowd of 7,450 fans. Eddie Gallagan poked home the winner in the final period of the decisive game of the best-of-seven series.

After losing the first game, and being late in the first stanza, Wilfrid Gregg tied it up for the Flyers in the second. Jackie Hamilton shoved the Reds in front again early in the final, and after Barry Sullivan counted for St. Louis, Hamilton set up Kullman with the winning goal.

Hershey finished second to the Reds in the regular season and gained the finals by beating Indianapolis and Cleveland.

Posture Correction Taught by Pictures

Vancouver — (CP) — Posture correction history may be in the making at Templeton Junior High School here, where straightening of young spines is made a "picture-ful" part of the regular curriculum.

By use of a modern photographic technique, supple teen-agers see for themselves if their sacrolliacs are out of kilter.

Periodic pictures of children in bathing suits as they stand against a metal rod shows them any defects which are straightened by special physical exercises.

All Contenders For Heavyweight Title Classed

(By The Canadian Press)

The National Boxing Association Tuesday classed Joe Louis, Ezzard Charles and Lee Savold as logical contenders, in that order, for the heavyweight title vacated by champion Joe Louis.

In the N. B. A.'s quarterly ratings released at Washington, issued by vice-president Fred J. Saddy, Gus Lesnevich is rated at his own request as No. 1 contender for the light heavyweight title.

Two Canadians were listed as "outstanding boxers" in their divisions. They are Johnny Greco of Montreal, welterweight; and Lt'l Arthur King, Toronto lightweight.

Montreal Royals trounced Inkerman Rockets 8-1 at Montreal Tuesday night in the third and final game of the best-of-five Eastern Canada Memorial Cup semi-final series.

The Montrealers now move against Barrie Flyers in a best-of-seven series for the right to meet the western winner for the junior championship.

Regina Capitals moved to within one game of the Western Canada senior hockey final Tuesday night when they defeated Trail Smoke Eaters 8-4, their third victory in as many starts in their best-of-seven semi-final series. The win was the 15th consecutive game Caps have played without a defeat.

The series winner will meet either Winnipeg Nationals or Fort Frances Canadians for the western title and the right to enter the Allan Cup final.

Sheets cut Serardo's eye in the sixth round and had him helpless against the ropes when the fight was stopped.

Sport Shorts From Britain

London, April 6 (CP)—Jack Parker, Britain's oldest active motorcycle speedway, has splashed out for a new $1,680 his first of replacement after 23 years of racing.

Last summer, while captaining England's motorcycle test team against Australia, he had to borrow a machine. Beanie, his favorite, had run into trouble.

Mike Hawthorn, of Wimbledon, was the owner of the borrowed bike. Jack was pleased with its performance he ordered a replica. And Mike is making it.

Voluble, wavy-haired Jack is the King Clancy of speedway to millions of race fans. He's won everything worth winning in the sport including the World, British and Match Race championships.

One of his greatest achievements was to help launch the Speedway Riders' Association, of which he is chairman. The powerful S. R. A. is a "closed shop." No one rides speedway without membership and it has the backing of the Speedway Control Board and promoters.

Dapper Terry Allen, 34-year-old boxing flyweight, who recently outpointed world champion Histy Monaghan, has a strong regard for boyhood friendships.

He married Joan Crowther, a schoolgirl sweetheart. His partner is a fruit and vegetable business is Jock Jay, a schoolboy friend and the boxer is under the name of his bosom friend, Terry Allen, killed during the war while they were serving in the navy together.

"My name," he said, "is really Teddy Govier, but I changed it to Terry Allen for boxing. Terry was my best friend, and when he was killed I thought I would like to keep his name alive.

"His parents were good to me when I was young ,and I thought in the ring Terry's name would also become popular."

Here's something for the tooold-at-40 boys.

Every Saturday morning 60-year-old John Beresford has a five-mile row with a friend from Putney to Chiswick on the River Thames. And he was no stooge in his earlier days. In 1911, with A. H. Clowtie, he set a record of 3 minutes 8 seconds for the Silver Goblets at Henley Regatta, equalled since only once.

His son is Jack Beresford, whose rowing exploits have gone down in sport history — five Olympic rows: 1920 to 1936 and three gold medals.

The weekly trip over, Beresford senior insists on carrying his scratt back to the boathouse assisted by his companion, Dick Phelps.

You are south as declarer at a small slam contract of six spades. The opening lead from west was the heart king. One good look at the combined hands, and you know how to plan your play.

A trump trick must be lost to the ace. There is a second round of hearts to fear. Loss of the trump trick can not be prevented. So, you would concentrate on saving the heart.

Since ruffing at once is not possible, slaughter must be given consideration. Accordingly, the second south heart can be sluffed on one of the two top diamonds.

So, you win trick one with heart ace. A small club enters the dummy by winning with the queen. One dummy ace or king of diamonds you calmly shed a small south heart and a tear for opponents.

Thereafter you push out the trump ace lead in that suit. You can take any return from west. Then you pull the balance of the outstanding trumps, if any, and your clubs have the rest.

No doubt in your mind that this is how you would do it. Would you expect a title match player to overlook it? He did.

Instead of first leading the club he started working on the trumps. West grabbed the first trump with his ace and took a heart. This, of course, lost the contract.

Asked why, the declarer said he feared clubs would be ruffed on the first or second round. Could happen, of course. But such a person must have lived too sheltered a life.

The Movie Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, April 6 — (AP) — That little party up in Laurel Canyon last September cost Robert Mitchum about $25,000.

This is one of the things the actor disclosed as he returned to work after serving 50 days in jail on a marijuana conspiracy conviction. He shrugged off the sum.

"What's 25 grand?" he said. "I'm broke all the time, no matter how you look at it."

Mitchum at first morning at work was as though he had never been gone. He kidded with the crew as usual. He greeted welcomers with "nothing to it." His first scene for "The Big Steal" had him walking down a long hallway, pulling out a pistol and entering a room.

After he finished the scene, I asked him if he had made any resolutions. "Resolutions?" he said in denial.

How did he think the jail term would affect him?

No Affect

"Personally — not at all, except that I can't act like a nonconvict any more. Professionally — that's someone else's opinion, not mine."

Mitchum has been reading some of his vast mail. He said it is mostly sympathetic.

He seems to be same Mitchum as before, though perhaps a bit more cautious. As for his future plans, he leaves soon for location shots in Mexico. After that comes a film with Jane Russell, to start in June.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.

Atlanta, Ga., April 6 (AP) — Georgia Tech's football team was practicing signals on a field on the other side of a high board fence, the baseball team was drilling and what with the noise, conversation about a kid named Dick Harvin, which Robert Lee Dodd hauled him and a couple of others over on the football side, just about ruining the baseball prospects . . . Harvin, in his first year at college as a football, scored a touchdown against Vanderbilt. In his first college baseball game he scored a homer to beat Rollins College . . . the baseball scouts are the ones who really are on his trail.

Who's Too Smart?

Red Jones, the umpire, figures some batters are apt too smart about trying to wait out pitchers and "when they get that way, they aren't good hitters any more." . . . To show what he means, Red tells about one game when Detroit's Art Houtteman held most of the Yankee big shots hitless but Yogi Berra, then just a rookie, smacked him for two homers and a triple . . . When someone asked Berra how he could hit Houtteman so hard, Yogi replied: "I hit him when I was at Newark and he was at Buffalo, didn't I?" . . . So Jones contends: "Berra didn't have sense enough to know he was in the major leagues and wasn't supposed to be able to do that."

Cracked Dust

Mike Turness, who hasn't been making the winter golf tours, claims the Masters Tournament will be "just a nice vacation" for him . . . One of the finest tributes paid to O. B. Keeler, Atlanta's great golf writer at Monday's testimonial dinner came from Horton Smith. Said Smith: "I tried to be some of the things you suggested that I was."

Training Camp Notes

(By The Associated Press)

Bill Rigney, New York Giants' infielder who has been mentioned prominently in trade gossip lately, will be out of the Giants' line-up for about a week. He sprained his knee sliding home in an exhibition game at El Paso, Tex., Monday.

Manager Casey Stengel of New York Yankees believes he has five starting pitchers ready for action. They are Allie Reynolds, Tommy Byrne, Vic Raschi, Bob Porterfield and Ed Lopat.

The list of Brooklyn Dodgers who are reported to be coveted by Chicago Cubs has grown to are almost certain of starting as- four. Outfielders Gene Herman- signments.

ski and Tommy Brown are the newcomers, joining infielders Eddie Miksis and Bob Ramazotti. Manager Burt Shotto says Hermanski is "not for sale", but made no mention about trading him.

Pat Seerey, Chicago White Sox "Fat Man", is getting back into the line-up. His weight has been a matter of concern but Chicago training camp but now he has shed 17 pounds and is down to 214.

Manager Eddie Sawyer of Philadelphia Phillies thinks he has found his fourth starting pitcher in Ken Trimble. Robin Roberts, Russ Meyer and Hank Borowy

Rinty Monaghan Takes European Boxing Title

Belfast, April 6 — (CP) —Rinty Monaghan Tuesday night added the European championship to his world flyweight boxing title by out-pointing Maurice Sandeyron of France in 15 rounds.

Making his first defence of the world title he won by beating Jackie Paterson of Scotland in 1948, Monaghan lost the French contender all the way, Sandeyron only taken the European title by outpointing Belgium's Rayoud Degrys in 1947.

There was little doubt as to Tuesday night's decision, with Monaghan using his left to advantage throughout, although Sandeyron made a game hard finish. The champion was bleeding freely from a cut over his eye at the end.

Throughout the whole 15 rounds, Monaghan, who weighed 110, continually peppered his French opponent's face, with strong left leads, using hard rights to counter Sandeyron's attacks. The challenger weighed 110¾.

Monaghan ran true to his usual form when he sang "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" from the ring after the decision.

Sacos Roll High Score in Major B Bowling League

Sacos romped home to an easy victory over the ANAF Veterans in the Major "B" (Tuesday) Bowling League at the Recreation Alleys last night, defeating the ex-soldiers by 60 count with the high aggregate score of 3537. The veterans rolled 2356.

The "Our Gang" crew blotted the Ontario Intelligencer Inkspots by a 3-1 score while Blacks Meats took the measure of the "Just Us" crew by the same count.

Next Tuesday night will see the end of the regular schedule. Playoffs will follow immediately.

Al Hilborn rolled the high triple of the evening with an 834. He had a single of 300. M. Moreau was high man in the singles rolling 325. He also scored a triple of 791. Others to better the 700 mark were J. Lott 727, W. Moore 730, C. Hardwick 715, K. Peoples 731 and J. Dunlop 700. Lou Cook rolled a single of 309.

The scores:

Sacos (4)	3537
ANAF (0)	2356
Our Gang (3)	3183
Ont. Intell. (1)	3096
Blacks Meats (3)	3221

Sudbury Wolves Defeat Scottish All-Star Team

Paisley, Scotland, April 6 (CP) — Sudbury Wolves, Canada touring hockey team, Tuesday continued their winning streak by edging a Scottish all-star team 4-3.

Placed by Jim Russell who scored two goals, the Canadians led throughout the game. Tom Russell and Johnny Kovich notched the other Canadian tallies.

Chick Mann scored two of the All Stars goals with Andre Gingras getting the third.

The victory was the third straight for the Canadians in their current Scottish series.

Three of the Wolves, Kovich, Barney Hilkuns and Tom Russell, are reported to be considering offers from Ayr Raiders to remain in Scotland after the Wolves embark April 14. The trio are sought to play the rest of the Scottish season which winds up late this month.

At THE CAPITOL — Cutlew Barry Sullivan protects Maricela Barnolds in King Bros.' Allied Artists outdoor triumph, "Red Man of Tombstone," opening Thursday at the Capitol Theatre. Jack Buetel and Crawford co-stars with the pair. Dorothy Patrick and Walter Sande complete the Wells Fargo stage coach action thriller starring Gene Raymond, Sigrid Gurie, Patricia Morison and Richard Rober. Both hits are first city run. Little Benny's Note Book

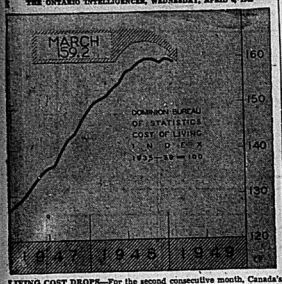
Saturday afternoon I went up in ma's room and started to watch her sewing on her sewing machine, and ma said, Oh drat, oh shaw. If anybody tells me that a sewing machine is a mesanical marvel, I'll tell them to keep quiet and mind their own biznes. Oh dear, the tension must be off again, but I'm not serprized. This entire day has been a continuous chapter of irritations, she said.

Why, ma, what all happened? I said, and ma said, It would take less time to tell you what didn't happen, starting the first thing this morning when a vicious squert of grapefruit jooce hit me square in the eye, and then came the laundry man.



G, what did he do? I said, and ma said, I didn't wait, that's what he did. He rang the doorbell while I was talking to Mrs. Hews on the telefone, and by the time I got to the frunt door he was gone like the morning mist, and to add insult to injury, Mrs. Hews called me back and demanded to know what I meant by banging up on her so sharpltly, and she excepted my explination in a most sulky spirit and I'm sure she's still angry and I've got a bag of soiled laundry on my hands. And as if that wasn't enough, I upset half my bottle of Blue Heaven perfume wurth its weight in gold, and to make bad matters worse it spilled all over a long letter to your sister Fanny that it took me 3 months to get up the energy to write. And then suddnly the house was full of smoke and I rushed to find my wife [illegible] buns bernt to useless cinders, she said.

G, ma, do you want to hear something funny? I said. I came up here to ask if you've changed your mind about me having been too many movies lately, but I couldn't of picked a funnier time to ask you, I said, and ma said, Excuse me if I dont berst into joyous laffter.

Which she didn't.

LIVING COST DROPS—For the second consecutive month, Canada's cost of living declined in February. A drop of three-tenths of a point to 159.3 was reported by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics Monday. This compares with a one-tenth of a point drop during January. This graph shows the trend of the cost-of-living index during 1947, 1948 and 1949. (...Photo)

DIVISION MAY

Only Four Listed

Only four opposition members were listed to speak today on the charities bill. It was expected that when they had spoken, Provincial Treasurer Leslie Frost would wind up the debate, possibly announcing government proposals for rigid policing of all charitable trusts and foundations.

The bill would permit charitable foundations to hold no more than 10 per cent of the capital stock in a business. Opposition critics insisted that it is intended to destroy the anti-government Toronto Star. Mr. Frost repeated Tuesday night that the bill is not directed at any individual or interest.

Up to Tuesday night's adjournment of the house, 18 members, including 14 from opposition ranks, had contributed 21 hours of speechmaking on the bill.

Speaking during Tuesday night's sitting were W. H. Temple (CCF-Thunder Bay Park), J. M. Newman (Lib.-Rainy River), J. D. Baxter (Lib.-Prince Edward-Lennox), Reid Scott (CCF-Toronto Beaches) and W. J. Houck (Lib.-Niagara Falls). Eight other members spoke during the day sitting.

Denies Accusation

Mr. Temple described the bill as an attempt by the government to further the interest of newspapers published by George McCullagh. Mr. McCullagh is publisher of the Toronto Globe and Mail and the Toronto Telegram.

Mr. Frost immediately denied the accusation.

The suggestion that the bill was intended to smash the Star was raised by Mr. Newman. He said the prospect of the Star being operated by 10 different charities was like "10 owners trying to milk one cow that had only four faucets."

Mr. Baxter charged that the fact the bill was aimed at the Atkinson Foundation (which operates the Star and the Star Weekly) was "the only excuse for the retroactive provisions."

Mr. Scott, who spoke for more than an hour, told the government:

"Go ahead and pass it. We haven't enough votes to stop you, but we do have enough votes to tear the cloak of charity you are masquerading behind."

Mr. Houck said he would have to oppose the bill if his conscience were to be free. He said he agreed with a view expressed earlier by another opposition speaker that if the bill were passed, the courts later threw it out, the legislature would be "the laughing stock of Ontario."

Bill Called Threat

Members speaking against the bill during the morning and afternoon sittings were C. H. Millard (CCF-York West), Arthur Calder (Lib.-Brant), William Dennison (CCF-Toronto St. David), J. G. Brown (Lib.-Waterloo North), J. B. Salsberg (Lab-Prog.-Toronto St. Andrew), W. J. Grummett (CCF-Yorkview South), and Aurele Chartrand (Lib.-Ottawa East). The government's spokesman was W. S. Gemmell (PC-Sudbury).

Mr. Millard said the bill was a threat to freedom of the press.

"Whenever the press has come under control of a ruling party, then Fascism made its appearance and its first effects were felt by organized labor...

"This bill was conceived in cunning and born in cowardice. The government is being led down the slippery path to Fascism. The day you force this bill through the house will be the darkest day in the history of the legislature."

Mr. Gemmell denied opposition charges that the bill was aimed at punishing the Star for bad notices.

"If there was any justification on the part of the opposition for maintaining that the bill is directed at the Atkinson Foundation," it would be dissolved by the fact that the bill also affected the Conservative Sudbury Daily Star."

(The Sudbury Star is operated by a charitable foundation set up by the terms of the will of W. E. Mason, former owner.)

Support Bill

"I have no hesitation in supporting this move, which I believe, should be in the interest of the taxpayers of the province."

Opposition members who attacked the bill, time for many years gone up and down the provinces and Dominion attacking big industries, business and monopolies, Mr. Gemmell said.

Mr. Grummett said that the bill would mean "drying-up of some of the sources of charity we have been accustomed to get through the years."

"I am convinced that the hatred of the former Premier of Ontario (George Drew) for the Star has a lot to do with the introduction of this bill," he said.

Mr. Brown described the bill as "a wolf in sheep's clothing."

"Had we seen such a bill as this presented in the Reichstag or the Kremlin we would have raised our hands and said: 'Thank God we live in a free country.'"

There had not yet been any evidence of maladministration of the Atkinson estate or that it was not operating in the interest of charity, Mr. Brown said.

The bill should be delayed until the government could determine whether or not "it is a trust in name only or in fact as well."

A number of relatives and friends of Mr. Wes Down motored to Galt on Saturday to attend his wedding.

Mr. Milton Bryant also Mr. and Mrs. Leland Bryant attended the funeral of Mr. Henry May at the English Settlement on Sunday afternoon.

TURNING THE PAGES OF "CANADA UNLIMITED"

It was 1909. Lurching and bumping over the rough ground at Baddeck, N.S., the Silver Dart rose into the air, piloted by A. McCurdy. It was the first aeroplane flight in Canada—and it made history.

History was written in the air again in 1919, Alcock and Brown flew from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Ireland, and brought Canada to the doorstep of the old world. Then came the intrepid bushpilots, opening new pathways through great wild-spaces to new discoveries.

In 1924, Canada's Air Force was born. Through the years it worked quietly, efficiently. Then came the war, and Canada's men of the air established their names forever in the annals of the world's great.

Now celebrating its Silver Jubilee, the Royal Canadian Air Force is carrying out a work of peace. Lives are being saved by mercy flights . . . the uncharted North is being photographed . . . scientific knowledge of aeronautics is broadened. By opening up many new horizons in this country, the men of the R.C.A.F. are proving there's room to grow in Canada Unlimited!

Just how much room is told in "Canada Unlimited", an illustrated 144 page book published by the O'Keefe's Foundation. You may obtain your copy by sending 25c in cash (no stamps or cheques, please) to "Canada Unlimited", Dept. N-5-6, O'Keefe's House, Toronto, Ontario. Please print your name and address clearly. All monies received will be donated to the Canadian Education Council.

WE'LL MEET AGAIN

By Margaret Gorman Nichols

"I don't think I understand."

He looked away. "We'd be unhappy if we were poor."

She walked away and her nerves felt stretched across the great emptiness in her. Let me be sane, she thought!

She stood very still. Her lashes fluttered but her mouth was tight.

"You've put it very nicely," she said. "Don't be afraid. . . I won't hold you to your promise. . . I wouldn't mind being poor with you, Alan. I'd work and do anything just to be with you."

And yesterday they had loved each other so much! Yesterday she would not have believed that today they would be looking at each other over a chasm of broken promises!

"I love you," he said, "but I don't love you enough to be poor with you."

"Then you never loved me at all."

"But I want to see you again."

She looked at him. "You won't like the little place we'll live in. I'll be different — as a working girl."

"I'll always love you, Gay."

"It would be easier if you hated me." She lowered her head. Don't cry, she thought. Don't use your tears as a weapon to bring him back. "Please — please go now. Don't come again, Alan." She walked to the window, her back to him. "Good-bye. I don't want to see you leave, knowing I'll never see you again."

After a while she heard Diana's soothing voice.

"Darling, don't look like that!"

"I don't mind anything now. I can stand anything now."

* * *

When the editor of a certain paper heard her restrained voice saying, "I have broken my engagement to Mr. Biggs" he turned to Chris Mallory, his favorite reporter, and said, "She seemed pretty cool about it. Wonder what is up. They were to be married this Spring. Have you ever seen Gay Van Avery, Chris?"

Chris Mallory, long-legged, slim, broad-shouldered, with unruly black hair that refused despite his efforts to keep it straight, keen brown eyes, and a mouth that flashed white teeth when he smiled, stuck his pipe between his handsome teeth and said, — "Sure, I've seen her. Who hasn't? She's front page copy. All the newshawks have a yen for her. I hate society girls personally. The only thing that Gay Van Avery and I have in common is a liking for scotties."

"Well, you're going out to see her and find out why she broke her engagement."

"Is that an assignment?"

"It's an order. Hop to it!"

The drawing-room was filled with the fragrance of dying flowers.

Wood, the butler, announced after dinner, "Mr. Mallory to see you."

"Mallory?" asked Gay, wearing one of her many green dresses. This one was heavy silk with a belt of gold. "Show him in."

She was first conscious of the vitality and magnetism of Chris Mallory and of his loose-jointed masculine grace. His tweeds were good but badly in need of pressing, and he carried on old brown felt hat as if it were a comfortable old friend. But Chris Mallory's dark eyes, which swept the dimly lighted room, called Gay back from the lethargy that was consuming her — called her back to life.

Chris smiled. "Miss Van Avery?"

"Yes, I don't think . . ."

"I'm Mallory from the News. I've been sent over to get a statement from you concerning the breaking of your engagement."

He saw both fire and shame in her eyes. Something in him tightened. A goddess on her throne, he thought. These snobbish society girls! He hated them for their extravagance, their conceit, their disdain, and their light regard of love. Marry and divorce, that's all they did. It was like taking off an old dress and putting on a new one!

"I have no statement to make," she said, feeling uncomfortable before the direct gaze of Chris Mallory. "I—I broke it. Difference of opinion." She groped helplessly. "Incompatability."

"Why don't you stop lying?"

"Why should I air my personal affairs to you?" Gay flared indignantly. "You snooping newspaper men! One can't have a private life at all! Everything is dired for the public to snirk and chuckle over. It isn't," she said, "any of your business, but I broke my engagement. Tell your editor that. Good night."

It was evil of her, she knew. What right had she to talk to him like this? But it was either indignation or tears, and she could not burst into weeping under the dark eyes of an impertinent reporter. She had to defend Alan. Where was he tonight? What was he going?

Chris Mallory's eyes mocked her.

"Snooping newspaper men!" he scoffed. "My editor can kick me out but I'm not going to lose the opportunity to tell you what I think of you and your whole tribe! You're parasites and you're cowards. Take you out of your elegant surroundings and you're a tribe of whimpering weaklings! Where did your money come from? You don't know! There's a price attached to all your love affairs. Listen, baby, don't feel sorry for me! I feel sorry for you." He turned and almost shouted at her. "Good night to you!"

When Mallory got to the door, Macduff ran after him, wagging his tail. Mallory stooped, said, "He fells," and gave the little scottie a rough caress and closed the door with a vicious slam.

It was odd, Gay thought, sitting there very quietly, that a certain strength and vitality that had been in the room when he was there was now gone.

Macduff jumped up beside her. Gay pulled his ear and said, "How could you make friends with him when he was so vile to me? You liked him, didn't you? I — guess that makes him all right. The truth," she said, "always stings."

In his own apartment that night, an apartment typical of a bachelor and a newspaper man, Chris Mallory frowned at his scottie, Sandy, and said, "You should see her. She's gorgeous! Her hair and blue eyes. That green dress. I had a feeling that beneath the grand manners and haughty exterior she's a pretty swell person. She was hiding something. But she's not for me. How about a walk, old girl? Get your leash and bring it to me." Sandy obeyed. Chris said, "She likes dogs, too." His mouth was suddenly grim. "Why don't we have a hot revolution or something so I can get that girl out of my head!"

* * *

Gay thought of the week that followed as the first dark blot on her unblemished life. She and Diana were relieved of the embarrassment of an auction when their lawyer found a buyer. They never saw the buyer and to spare themselves the hurt of seeing things they had lived with and loved, things old and new, they moved to a small hotel.

All that Alan had said to her came back during those lonely, dark days. The things he had said to her, her things, she thought inspired by her. And she had thought during the months when her life had been centered around him, everything crystallized in him, that never could she be lonely again because even in loneliness she could remember all he had given her to remember. Their grave moments, their mad moments when they had seen their lives shaped and grown together and made firm by the foundation of their love. Seemingly little gestures more than significant than words his voice on the phone, his eyes across a room, were bitter-sweet memories.

Now was she expected to fling her love away, stamp upon it, forget it? Could you write a finish to love as you did when you finished a book? Could Alan? Would Lucia hear all the things that Gay had felt were meant for her? The thought caused a curious stab in her and then a terrific numbness. Alan. Alan.

Lucia Haring, a tall languid brunette, came to the hotel room one afternoon.

"My house is yours, Gay. Why don't you come and live with me?" Paid companion? Anything but that!

"I saw Alan," said Lucia. "He looks wretched."

But Lucia would sooth his hurt with her great house and her famous parties! Why, Gay thought, he didn't she go and leave her in her toppling world — leave her in the ruins?

The next week she and Diana moved to a small second floor apartment, and they salvaged enough furniture to refurnish a tiny flat. But the Van Avery tea service, the silk bed things and fine lace dinner cloths looked incongruous in the shabby little place.

Gay felt helpless and useless. If only there were some way to escape the hideousness of this life, this gaunt dark house, her starving neighbors and poor Diana's clumsy attempts to cook! And added to those things was the constant thought of Alan, set free, drifting, and in demand wherever he went.

The one spark of brightness, the one human thing that could lift their hearts, was Macduff who felt the change. Now there was no great white kitchen to run to when he was hungry. There wasn't even enough room here for him to kick up his heels when he felt playful. Maxie, the terrier, alternately his closest chum and worst enemy, passed into the limbo of forgotten things. But Macduff kept his tail wagging and his spirits up like the true purebred he was.

It was Macduff who brought Gay and Chris Mallory together again. For Macduff, one night when the door was open, took it upon himself to investigate the strange new house in which he lived.

Starvation Threat Reported in Area Of Labrador

Newfoundland Rushes Food By Air to Stricken Section

By JOSEPH MacSWEEN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

St. John's, April 7 (CP)—The threat of starvation in an isolated part of Labrador was averted today by an International Grenfell Association nurse in a telegram to authorities here.

The nurse, identified only as Miss Jupp, said that "to avert starvation of people food must be got here somehow."

The number of people involved or extent of the area was not known exactly but the location was near St. Mary's River. The nurse said babies "are being fed on flour, water and molasses-water in a thirty lb. tin milk or rolled oats." There was no milk, meat, vegetables, butter or tea.

Newfoundland's new provincial government was making immediate arrangements to fly food into the stricken area.

Miss Jupp said in her message "a large number of expectant mothers and children" are being fed late help. I appeal to you to use your influence to save fishermen and their families, before it is too late."

St. Mary's is about 100 miles southeast of Goose Bay. The message was sent to J. R. Smallwood, who was sworn in as Newfoundland's interim premier last Thursday.

Lake Freighters Collide But No One Injured

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., April 7 — (AP) — Two lake freighters collided Wednesday in Lake Superior, 40 miles west of Whitefish Point, but early reports indicated there had been no injuries.

The Coast Guard base here said the cutter Mackinaw reached the accident scene late in the day and reported neither ship in any danger.

Coast Guard officers identified the two ships as the Fort Wills, Fort William, and the James E. McAlpine of the Brown Steamship Company of Buffalo.

The Willdoc suffered some damage to her bow, but the Mackinaw said the freighter was in no danger.

After the collision, which occurred during a heavy fog, the McAlpine put a line aboard the Willdoc and started to tow her to this port.

Boston Fisherman Once Rescued, Swept to Death

Gloucester, Mass., April 7 (AP) — Mario Rinzi, a Boston fisherman, was swept to his death Wednesday by a giant wave minutes after he had cheated the sea. Rinzi had been knocked into the water from his lookout perch on the trawler San Antonio. Other crew members pulled him back aboard. Then a second wave struck the craft and Rinzi was carried away.

Widow Loses Divorce Suit

Lewes, Sussex, England, April 7 (CP)—An action for breach of promise brought by a 53-year-old widow last heard from in Toronto was dismissed in Lewes County Court today and judgment entered in favor of the 70-year-old man she claimed had promised to marry her.

The widow was Mrs. Florentina Ann Brennan, who left her home in Hove, Sussex, last December for Toronto and has not returned.

The defendant was Lewis Henry Brand of Southwick, Sussex, whom Mr. Lewis, the presiding judge, said he understood had been in a mental institution.

The judge ordered that £30 (U.S. $120) paid into court by Brand be returned to him.

Prince Aly Khan Gains Divorce

Paris, April 7 (AP)—A divorce decree was entered today dissolving the marriage of Prince Aly Khan and his British-born wife.

This leaves the Prince free to marry American film actress Rita Hayworth.

The judgment, signed by court President Marcel Rousselet, said both parties to the case "are responsible for the failure of the marriage. Requests for divorce had been filed both by the Prince and his wife, Joan Yard-Buller, daughter of Lord Charston.

Custody of the two boys born to the couple was granted to Aly Khan, with the consent of the mother.

Miss Hayworth, former wife of actor Orson Welles, told a reporter April 1 that she and the Prince hoped to be married "within four weeks."

Austerity Budget Tumbles Prices On 'Change

London, April 7 — (Reuters) The austerity budget sent share prices tumbling in the London Stock Exchange today.

No taxation relief to the entertainment and radio industries, no change in purchase tax and smaller reduction in the price of beer resulted in heavy marking down in the prices of the shares concerned. Brewery losses were up to 5s. 6d., stores 3s. 6d. and cinemas and radios by 3s. 6d.

When the monetary upheaval has subsided and the process of readjustment had taken place, prices should be steady at a lower levels and occasionally improved from the worst.

31 Ships Tied up by Week-Old Strike Against Canadian Shipping

Halifax, April 7 (CP)—National Officer Eric Atkins of the Canadian Seamen's Union (C.L.C.) said here today 31 ships now are tied up by the week-old C.S.U. strike against Canadian deep-sea shipping.

He said 11 of the vessels were in Halifax, three in Saint John, N.B., two in Louisburg, N.S. and the remaining 15 are "scattered from Sydney to Vancouver."

C.S.U. President Harry Davis is in Montreal. Halifax today and scheduled a press conference for 1.30 p.m. EST.

Members of the Seafarers' International Union (A.F.L.) and Canadian Seamen's Union (C.C.L.C.) sailed here today 31 ships now are tied up by the week-old C.S.U. strike against Canadian deep-sea shipping.

The number of people involved or extent of the area was not known exactly but the location was near St. Mary's River. The nurse said babies "are being fed on flour, water and molasses-water in a thirty lb. tin milk or rolled oats." There was no milk, meat, vegetables, butter or tea.

DREW DEMANDS RESIGNATION OF DEFENCE MINISTER

Says Wrong Information Given About Planes

Ottawa, April 7 — (CP) — George Drew, Progressive Conservative leader, demanded in the Commons Wednesday that Defence Minister Claxton resign because he had given the House wrong information about the storage of R.C.A.F. planes.

Mr. Claxton said he had been partly in error in denying Tuesday Mr. Drew's charge that new R.C.A.F. jet planes in storage had been "inhibited, stored and dismantled." He made the admission after Mr. Drew produced a copy of the Globe and Mail and pointed to photographs showing four R.C.A.F. North Stars in hangars, with the propeller blades "rabbit-ears" and tail pieces off.

Mr. Claxton said the planes were being held in reserve, as planes always were, for emergency use. The air force always had a certain number of planes of each category to replace those lost or being overhauled.

He said legislation he had found that he was in error when he told the House the planes were dismantled. He was surprised, he said, that anyone would suggest that he had sought to mislead the House. It was to be made, he now the first to admit it.

It was not always possible to be up to date with every piece of equipment in the defence department.

Sought to Mislead

Mr. Drew charged that Mr. Claxton had sought to "mislead" the House and demanded that he resign his portfolio if there was no other explanation and if he suspected the parliamentary system.

DREW DEMANDS—Page 5

Approves Annexation Of Small Border Strip of Germany

The Hague, April 7 (AP)—The Netherlands lower house Wednesday passed a bill approving annexation of a small border strip of Germany, It is part of the 50 square miles of West German frontier territory the western Allies decided to give the Dutch as a reward to The Netherlands, France, Belgium and Luxemboprg. The strips are designed to help the next difficulties in communication.

PROPERTY DESTROYED

Bennington, Vt., April 7 (AP) — A storm of near-hurricane proportions spun through parts of Bennington County and New England states Wednesday. Thousands of dollars worth of property was destroyed but no injury toll was light. Winds clocked at up to 100 miles an hour in gusts accompanied a rain-and-snow storm which left some fell in some mountain areas.

C. Banks of the S.I.U. said at Peters' Union members engaged in a brawl Tuesday at McAdam, N. B., with suspected C.S.U. sympathizers, others alleged Sunday to "were nearing" Saint John and Halifax.

Two merchant navy officers, in Halifax, three in Saint John, N.B., two in Louisburg, N.S. and the remaining 15 in Sydney Sun. have been released from hospital, the C.S.U. has denied knowledge of both incidents.

There were minor disturbances in Canadian Pacific ports.

R.C.M.P. have made no arrests in east coast disorders, the McAdam attackers, Saint John longshoremen were held briefly for questioning.

Signing of the S.I.U.-Federation contract came after collapse of Federation negotiations with the C.S.U.

Wide Open General Assembly Debate Ordered of Lives Of Persecution of Churchmen

Lake Success, April 7. (CP)—The United Nations steering committee beat down bitter Russian protests today and ordered a wide-open general assembly debate on the Communist prosecution of churchmen behind the iron curtain.

The Russians thus suffered a sharp defeat in their first major clash with the Western Powers at this spring session of the Assembly which opened Tuesday.

The last vote on Foreign Australian-Belgium proposal that the Assembly act on the trials of Joseph Cardinal Mindszenty in Hungary and 15 Protestant clergymen in Bulgaria. The vote was 11 to 2, with Iran abstaining. Russia and Poland cast the negative votes.

In some of the harshest language heard in the United Nations Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Jacob Malik stripped the imprisoned church dignitaries as "criminals, spies, war-mongers and "warmongers".

He argued that discussion of the case would be a violation of the United Nations charter.

Canada was among the powers named by Malik in making what he called "libelous" attacks against Hungary and Bulgaria.

George Ignatieff, Canadian alternate to the permanent Canadian delegate to the United Nations committee of Canada's "abhorrence" of the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary and the 15 Protestant church leaders in Bulgaria.

The United States, strongly supported by Canada, Wednesday proposed that the trials be considered as possible violations of the peace treaties with Hungary and Bulgaria.

Eight members of the committee urged U. N. investigation of charges of religious persecution but western delegates were confident that iron-curtain countries involved would be denounced by the U. N.

The debate on what to do about Italy's pre-war colonies, was scheduled to resume this afternoon.

Britain was reported ready to back United States proposals made Wednesday recommending:

1. That Libya be placed under U. N. trusteeship, with Britain administering Cyrenaica, the eastern portion.

2. That Ethiopia be granted outright control over Eastern Eritrea, including the Port of Massawa on the Red Sea and the capital city of Asmara.

3. That Italy be asked to administer Italian Somaliland under a U. N. trusteeship.

Italy's new Foreign Minister, Count Carlo Sforza, was expected here to appeal that country's request for control of all three colonies.

Keays Never Lost Status As Police Officer, Testifies Commissioner Stringer

Complaints of Constable J.E. Keays of interference and threats by Crown Attorney R.C. Dancey-Clerk in connection with the Carefoot case, were investigated by the Attorney General's Department for investigation.

This was testified at today's hearing by Police Commissioner W. H. Stringer before the Royal Commission, investigating allegations by Keays against the Crown Attorney and police officers.

The police commissioner is one of the last of a long list of witnesses to be heard by Judge Wells during the investigation which has now been underway nearly six weeks.

Since the hearing started on Feb. 7, 61 witnesses have been called, some of them returning to the stand to clear up points brought out by other witnesses.

There is a strong possibility the Royal Commission hearings will be concluded this week.

Commissioner of Police Stringer said there had been no complaints from various sources as to Keays ever having been drunk on duty. One of these resulting in his removal from the Ontario Liquor squad at Perth in 1943.

Called Good Investigator

However, Inspector T.W. Cousens, Perth, investigating complaints regarding Keays had termed him in reports as being a good investigator but one of the best men in his district.

At one point in his examination Keays asked if in view of Keays' record the witness would consider him decent with people he came into contact with.

"I am not prepared to say," was the police commissioner's reply.

Keays then asked if in view of his status as a police officer having been lost, he had any right to only course left him in resigning. "Constable Keays, you never lost your status as a police officer," said the police commissioner.

The police commissioner stated if a police officer had a complaint regarding another officer he took it directly to his district inspector.

If he failed to do so, the commissioner he would be out of order.

Police commissioner admitted discussion with Dancey-General Blackwell regarding Keays having caused dissension in police ranks. He did not recall having told Mr. Blackwell that Keays had charged Mr. McCullagh in the purchase of the Telegram.

Keays referred to the Dent-Miki shooting at Navan, in 1940, and asked the police commissioner how he had satisfied himself that an unsigned report had actually been written by Sgt. J. A. Dent, Navan.

"I accepted the report as having been written by Sgt. Stringer replied the witness. "but it should have been signed."

Keays then stated that all evidence regarding the number of shots fired during the Miki shooting had not been produced at the inquest.

The responsibility in this matter was ruled by Commissioner Stringer, Mackay to be that of the crown attorney acting at the inquest.

Complaint Turner Over

Mr. Stringer said Const. Keays' complaint of interference by the crown attorney in the investigation of the Carefoot matter had been turned over to the Attorney General's department "because he was in no jurisdiction over the crown attorney."

He said the Keays investigation of the Carefoot affair had been "quite satisfactory" and that there hadn't been any thought of turning it over to the C.I.B.

Keays drew his attention to the witness in the fact that Keays testified at the Carefoot trial on May 2, 1946 that he had been instructed by the crown attorney to cease his investigations.

"Did you not think that as the result of that statement in relations between Keays and the crown attorney would be strained?" asked Keays.

"It is possible," was the reply. "Then would it not have been advisable to transfer this officer?"

"Insofar as you were doing your work I was satisfied and was prepared to back you up regardless of the crown attorney," said the police commissioner.

156 FAMILIES TO MOVE

London, Ont., April 7 — (CP) — A total of 156 London families will have to move into new quarters at the end of the month, at the termination of six months' notice from landlords to vacate, the district Prices Board office said today.

Other forced movings in the area include: St. Thomas 11; Sarnia 14; and Woodstock nine.

VERDICT OF INSANITY

Brighton, Ont., April 7 — (AP) — A jury Wednesday night returned a verdict of insanity in the murder trial of Mrs. Jennie Barker, who shot and killed her husband, Lloyd (Red) Barker of Denver. After the slaying Barker was identified as the last of the four sons of "Ma" Barker, crime leader of the '30s.

BOY PREVENTS POSSIBLE WRECK OF CNR TRAIN

Finds Section of Rail Missing, Gives Warning

Kingston, April 7 (CP)—A 12-year-old boy prevented a possible train wreck near here Sunday, it was learned today.

The boy, John Graham Doran, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Doran of nearby Collins Bay, was coming home from Sunday School when he noticed that a section of rail longer than a yard was missing from the south rail of the Canadian National Railways track at Britt's Crossing. Knowing the Toronto-Montreal pool train was due in a short time, he ran to the station a quarter-mile west of the bridge.

Alex Boswell, C.N.R. section foreman, got a flag and flares and jogged three-quarters of a mile west on the track. There he flagged down the pool train.

When the train had halted, a section crew repaired the break in 45 minutes.

Toronto Lawyer Says He Did Not Draft the Bill

Toronto, April 7 — (CP)—John S. D. Tory, Toronto lawyer, Wednesday night called "completely untruthful" the statements of the Ontario Legislature earlier in the day by Premier Park C.C.F. member for Toronto Dovercourt, that Mr. Tory had been consulted in preparation of the Ontario government's charities bill.

In the Legislature Mr. Park also linked Mr. Tory with George McCullagh, publisher of the Globe and Mail and the Toronto Telegram, in a statement that Mr. Tory had acted for Mr. McCullagh in the purchase of the Telegram.

Mr. Tory said the first he knew of the charities bill was when he read it in the newspapers. "I didn't draft the bill nor help the government draft it," he said. "I was not engaged in connection with it and I did not advise on it in any way."

Destitute Workers Flock to Hearst

Hearst, Ont., April 7 (CP) — This woodland community some 125 miles northwest of Timmins faces an unemployment problem. Destitute workers are flocking here as a curtailment of bush operations went into its seventh week.

Officials say four men have been signed and robbed of about $200 each in the last few days. Many are working for camps and themselves with billets as protection against attacks.

No improvement in the employment situation is in prospect until the week-deep snow disappears from the bush.

Krajina Twice Sentenced by Nazis To Death, Unworried by Prague News

By NORMAN CRIBBENS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Penge, Kent, Eng., April 7 (CP) — Vaclav Krajina, twice sentenced to death by the Nazis during the war, smiled at reports of his trial in absentia by the Czechoslovak government in exile.

"I am not very worried," said the burly, 46-year-old Krajina, who hopes to find peace in the Canadian wilderness as a farmer and biology at the University of British Columbia.

"You see," he said in his slow deliberate English. "I've been through all this before . . . the Nazis sentenced me to death twice during the war when I concupled a radio transmission service in German occupied Prague. But they never caught me.

"Then, the day after the Communists took over in Prague in February last year, I was arrested in the street, but held for only six hours."

It was odd thing is that although I was decorated for my underground work against the Nazis, I was Communist in charge of working for Germany against Russia.

"I was cleared of these charges by the Prague government just after the war ended. Now, it seems, they have been revived."

Dr. and Mrs. Krajina and their two children with three Czech compatriots — also said to be black-listed in Prague—now live quietly in a small residential house overlooking a Kentish woodland. The Krajinas, their visa granted by the Canadian government, plan to sail for Canada in May. The doctor is described as "one of the world's leading young botanists."

Three Teen-Age Girls, Four Men On Way to Dance

One Side of Car Torn off By the Terrific Impact

Brandon, Man., April 7 — (CP) Seven persons — four men and three teen-age girls — were killed three miles south of here Wednesday night when their automobile crashed into the rear of a stopped snowplow.

Early today, police still were trying to identify one of the male victims.

Known dead: Alvin Grieve, 20; Elmer Grieve, 17; Bernice Jackson, 17; Ina Karzen, 17; and Pearl Stevens, 18, all of Brandon, and Jack Hodgins, 22, believed to be of Killarney, Man.

Members of the party were last seen together at 9 p.m. Wednesday night at the home of Miss Karzen, where, it is understood, they planned to go to a dance south of Brandon.

R.C.M.P. early today traced the owner of the car, a 1939 sedan, as Alvin Grieve.

Police said the car, travelling south on No. 10 highway, pulled to the right-hand side of the road as another car approached from the opposite direction. It struck the rear of the stationary snowplow parked on the shoulder of the highway and also facing south.

The vehicle was extensively damaged and all of the victims badly mutilated, making identification difficult. Police said one side of the car was torn off by the terrific impact. The left wheel of the plow also was ripped off.

Miss Stevens was reported to have been a passenger in a passing motorists arrived at the scene of the accident a half-hour later en route to hospital. She suffered severe head injuries and lacerations.

Karen Rebels Lay Down Arms Friday

Rangoon, April 7 (AP)—Karen rebels holding under banners of the Karen National Union, will lay down arms throughout Burma Friday tomorrow morning, the government announced today.

The surrender will be made by Saw Ba U Gyi, Karen president, at a ceremony in Insein, Insein, 10 miles north of this capital city. Insein has been the scene of grim fighting between government troops and the Karens since early February.

Government sources said Saw Ba U Gyi has arranged for a cease-fire by his Karen national defence organization on all fighting fronts.

The Karens went on the warpath last Jan. 31, undoubtedly believing here as a curtailment of bush operations went into its seventh week.

Officials say four men have been signed and robbed of about $200 each in the last few days. Many are working for camps and themselves with billets as protection against attacks.

No improvement in the employment situation is in prospect until the week-deep snow disappears from the bush.

CHARITIES BILL GIVEN SECOND READING 47-33

All Opposition Members Line Up Against Government In Division

Toronto April 7 (CP)— The Ontario Government's Charitable Foundations Bill, approved in principle after hot debate lasting one week, today was to be threshed out in detail.

Altogether 31 members spoke in the 27 hours of debate before the bill was given second reading late Wednesday by a vote of 47 to 33 with all opposition members lined up against the government.

Today the bill goes into committee where Premier Frederick Frost will introduce amendments to the measure, which requires that Charitable foundation may not hold more than 10 per cent of the stock of any one business. Opposition members have claimed, and the government has denied, that the bill is primarily aimed at the Aitkinson Foundation, owners of the Toronto Daily Star and the Star Weekly.

The government's amendments would allow firms three to seven years the period in which foundations must comply with the bill's requirements; provide for scrutiny by the public trustee of such foundations to ensure that a fair percentage of profit is actually given to charity, and provide that present trustees of foundations may purchase an interest in the business when excess stock is disposed of in compliance with the bill.

RUSSIANS LIFT BAN

Berlin, April 7 — (AP) — The Russians lifted partially today their ban on the use of the Westerh mark in Berlin. They permitted certain limited drawings to accept the western marks at locations in the western sectors of the city. This development followed the unexpected appearance Wednesday night of high Russian officers at an American Army reception for the first time since Berlin was divided by halves.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS

Toronto, April 7 (CP)—Synopsis: The storm that swept northeastward along the Atlantic seaboard Wednesday is now centered over Nova Scotia. Friday and Saturday widespread rain and some snow in southern districts. Another weak disturbance now approaching Ontario is expected to have a few scattered showers in southern districts and occasional snow in northern districts tomorrow today. Friday is expected to be mostly clear and mild.

Dream Comes True When New Store, Station Opened

Emerson's trite saying, "Hitch Your Wagon to a Star," became the motto of two of the city's young people, both by dint of sticking close to it, with unity of purpose and objective, have in eight years time, starting "from scratch," built a fully equipped store and service station that is the envy of many. Mr. and Mrs. Ross, and the late Jay Ross North Park, Ont., and his wife, Ruth, have succeeded in doing. Both Bill and Ruth are native born, and both attended the public schools here, Bill at Prince of Wales, and Ruth at King George. Like most young lads in public school, who desire some pocket money of their own getting, Bill faithfully peddled a morning paper.

After graduating from the Collegiate he got a job working for the A. and P. Store rustling groceries and fruit. After taking a special three months course of mechanics under Mr. G.A. Ferguson at Belleville Collegiate and Vocational School.

Three different times Bill endeavored to enlist in the armed forces, undergoing an operation for a facility, every attempt each time was turned down, owing to an injury installing officers to be crowned at the Legion, Bridge Street, he had received in the north Peterborough where he entered the employ of the Canadian General Electric, as machine shop repair man. Getting tired of battling it, he decided to travel a double harness, so eight years ago he married Miss Ruth Ywells, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Wessels, a near neighbor.

Since that memorable occasion they have worked together with but one aim, one objective, and one dream, that of owning and operating their own store and service station, which dream became a reality on the 30th of January last when they moved to their home town, and to their new home on the Foxboro road.

At This Price It Was a "Gold" Fish

Smelt was retailing at one dollar each, or at the same specific, twenty-five cents an inch here last night.

It happened at a local club where the boys were spending a quiet evening.

A chap, of serious mien, approached various members of the club offering "raffle tickets" at a dime apiece. The tickets were 25, of which only one would be proud. He refused to elaborate further.

The tickets were sold, more through curiosity than desire to win something for next to nothing.

Finally the tickets were sold — the draw conducted.

The name of the winner was announced. Then a wee, curly-pated cranium cocked its ears to see what the "prize" was. A roar of laughter arose in the club.

It was delivered to the winner. Swimming in a shallow dish was a lively young fourinch smelt, fresh from the waters of the Moira River.

It was purely a gag, and after the hilarity had subsided the "suckers" were given their investments.

POLICE BLOTTER

John Lewis, Dufferin Avenue, reported to police that two coats had been stolen either from his shop or from his car.

Considerable damage was done to cars involved in an accident at the Bridge Street-Coleman Street intersection yesterday. A car driven by Nelson Kennedy, Enterprise was proceeding west on Bridge Street while a truck owned by Max Marcus of this city endeavored to make a left-hand turn coming out of Coleman. The resulting collision caused damage to the extent of $123 to the Kennedy car while the truck damage was estimated at $25.

'Knights of Road' on Move 528 Transients Get Shelter With Police Since Jan. 1

The "knights of the road" are more or less common sight during the leaner years, are again haunting the highways, by-ways and byways and seeking a night's lodging at various police stations along their beaten route.

This city situated as it is, on one of Ontario's main arterial highways, is a favorite stopping-off place for these knights of wanderlust and generally homeless transients, who migrate, to roam the province in search of existence.

Since Jan 528 transients have sought and received a night's rest at the city police station these since January 1st of this year.

These wanderers of the highways and byways range from nineteen to ninety years of age. Some of them, especially the elderly ones are seen with regular stories behind them. Some of them are devoid of hope. They travel from town to another hoping that a kind fate will throw sustenance their way. They are assured of a night's rest, as long as the station observes a twenty-four hour duty day.

Classifications

Others are just plain "bums." Young and healthy these youthful men are the type that feel perhaps the world owes them a living, after a while when they get rested they intend to make it decide to move on.

Yet others come under the category of "drifters." Saggin, undernourished, faces wearing dead-pan expressions, they seek a night's rest. They arise in the morning, quietly collect their meagre possessions, mumble a "thank you" and disappear in the busy life of the workday world.

A lot of them actually enjoy the life. Theirs not to be tied down to one town, to a job, for that matter. They appear to be happy in their lot and with frankness tell you that the life of the road "is the life for me."

Gift of Clothes

Frequent panhandlers, possessed of glib tongues, they can talk the coldest-hearted townsfolk extant out of a meal, without benefit of payment through the media of cold jobs.

A steady job? Why, the very thought of it makes the life of most places free. Adventure lies ahead — and in a tie-down place, employment.

So, these happy-go-lucky members of the great fraternity of the road wend their way through life eating out an existence as they go and generally complaining about nothing.

Sometimes the knights of the great highways travel in pairs or in groups. The "jungles" of the depression days will soon put in an appearance as members of the clan gather to pool food and bed down in a tie-down place with warm summer skies.

In the present days arrive, police stations of the province will furnish them with a meal or two, a bed, a board and a lot of good advice, to these ubiquitous wanderers of the road.

Ralph Warren Wins 'Supertest' Slogan Contest

Ralph Warren, district sales manager of the Supertest Petroleum Products Corporation here, has been awarded his prize for the slogan has been accepted and adopted by the company for advertising and sales promotion for the current year.

Mr. Warren's slogan "Let's Head the Line in '49" won over several entries in a province-wide competition sponsored by the head office of the company in London, Ont.

The slogan appears prominently atop a drawing of an up-to-date service station.

Mr. Warren, former mayor of Picton, whose office is situated in the Riggs Garage building, Pinnacle Street, in receipt of a letter of commendation and congratulation from Mr. Bruce Brown, general sales manager of the company, London, Ont.

Kitchener Will Build New Rink, Cost $450,000

Kitchener, April 7 (CP)— Architects will be hired immediately to prepare plans for a 6,-000-seat rink and auditorium for Kitchener.

Ratepayers voted $450,000 for the war memorial project in 1945. Increases in building costs and hope that a lower bid could be made to link the project with a proposed new armouries here delayed action.

The auditorium committee said today it has decided to wait no longer for a decision on the armouries. It expects to seek additional money to finance the structure.

City council will be asked Monday night to approve the committee's plans.

Eight Sentenced In Yugoslavia's 'First Spy' Trial

Novi Sad, Yugoslavia, April 7 (AP)—Eight prisoners of Hungarian descent today drew sentences ranging from seven to nine years in Yugoslavia's first "spy trial" against alleged agents of her neighbors in the Cominform and the Communist International Information Bureau (Cominform).

All of them confessed to their guilt on charges of entering Yugoslavia illegally, spreading propaganda, and attempting to collect military information.

The prosecutor Politika said the alleged agents were sent into Yugoslavia with false identity cards on instructions from Hungary's "leading men."

Daily Express Cables Money To Malta Editor

London, April 7 (AP)—Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express has cabled £200 ($800) to the Malta Daily Herald as an official demand for a deposit from the Bulletin for the right to print.

The editor and owner of the Bulletin, Joseph Attard-Kennery, recently was convicted of ridiculing the governor of Malta by reporting he had lost his temper. The paper was suspended for 3 months. The police said Scorey would have to deposit £200 with the treasury as a guarantee for good behavior before he could resume publication.

Scorey began printing the paper again without permission and the public to subscribe the £200 as a token of dissatisfaction with such rulings.

The Daily Express reported it had sent the money because it valued the principles of press freedom and despised petty tyranny in official quarters."

Burglars Get $500 Cash, Bonds, Cheques

Toronto, April 7 (CP) — Burglars on Wednesday night smashed open a large steel vault in a downtown wallpaper company office and escaped with $500 in cash, bonds and cheques. It was the fifth downtown office that the firm had been entered.

Family Refuses To Move Driveway Removes Sand

Toronto, April 7 (CP) — The Ontario Department of Highways spoke up Wednesday night about a feud with the William Moffat family over the Elizabeth Drive by-way two miles west of St. Catharines.

A department spokesman hinted at possibility of court action unless the Moffats put their driveway back to its former position. The Moffats removed fences and sand dunes which now block the driveway to block the entrance. In the latest issue this week Mrs. Moffatt armed with a rake, thwarted an effort by department men to dump sand.

Court action is just what they want in deal with the Ontario Department of Highways, Mr. and Mrs. William Moffat told reporters.

They were commenting on a statement by a police spokesman for the department that the matter would be taken to court because the Moffats desisted from tearing down barricades that the department puts up to block the entrance from their property to the Queen Elizabeth Way.

The Moffats said they have been trying to get their case to the courts but have been unable to do so unless the government issues a flat to make it possible.

Only other possible access to the property, to a side road would entail run over a drainage pond, said Mr. Moffat who denied a remark by the spokesman that the government made a severance payment to him when the highway was built.

"We have never at any time received any money from the government for our property."

15,000 Acres May Cost Ottawa $16,000,000

Ottawa, April 7 (CP)— Annexation of some 15,000 acres in neighboring Nepean and Gloucester townships to the city between $14,000,000 and $16,-000,000.

Mayor E. A. Bourque Wednesday night told a meeting of the Kingsway United Citizens' Association that the cost of providing proper services to the annexed areas of Nepean was estimated at more than $7,000,000.

"If we were to annex part of Gloucester township the cost would be equivalent to what is involved in Nepean," said Mayor Bourque.

SAYS BOYS HECKLE HIM

Listowel, April 7 — (CP) — Dogcatcher Bert Rassman got a raise in pay Wednesday but he's still an unhappy man. He says that since he volunteered for the job last year, boys bark at his wife and heckle him. Officials increased his salary to $50 a year but there's no stopping the heckling. That goes with the job, they said.

Bill to Reduce Voting Age to 18 Denied Reading

By The Canadian Press

Arguments on youth were heard in the Manitoba legislature Wednesday as a bill to reduce the voting age from 21 to 18 was defeated second reading, by a vote of 21 to 18.

The bill, sponsored by Donovan Swailes, Winnipeg C.C.F. member, was supported by many other opposition members. Mr. Swailes said many young men and women of 18 held responsible positions, men went into the services at that age, were permitted to marry and become taxpayers. A government supporter, N. Bachynsky (Lib-Prog.-Fisher), said however it would confer "duties without privileges."

Premier D. L. Campbell said Alberta has reduced the voting age to 18, and Saskatchewan has reduced it to 18. As far as Manitoba was concerned, the government would introduce such legislation when it was ready to do so and not before.

Opposition speakers wound up their side of the budget debate in the New Brunswick House with Hugh Mackay, leader of the Progressive Conservatives, charging the government had increased net liabilities by $85,000,000 while claiming a surplus each year. Premier McNair winds up the debate today.

At Halifax, the Nova Scotia House saw introduction of a government bill to set standards of quality and colour for margarine. It would set in manufacture of margarine.

One of the hottest debates in the Ontario Legislature in many years—a week-long duel over the government's charitable foundations bill ended Wednesday night, but the measure still awaits third reading.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, April 7 — (CP)—Action slowed as prices weakened on the Toronto Stock Exchange today on widely scattered small losses. Industrials held firm while the remainder of the market buckled selling pressure. Golds backed down steadily from early firmness and western oils continued Wednesday's late easier trend. Base metals were in their easier path, prevalent in recent markets.

Volume for the first three hours was 546,000 shares, about 155,000 shares less than Wednesday's similar period.

Industrials showed some moderate gains, led by Winnipeg Electric at a new high.

Senior objectives were strong at the opening but slipped fractions in mid-session. The rate of decline stepped up as the session progressed. Junior producers moved narrowly and a few smaller issues attracted some attention.

Base metals weakened in the face of another cut in the price of lead by a United States producer.

WILL REPLY FORMALLY

Washington, April 7 (AP)—In key words, the United States state department said Wednesday it isn't going to reply formally to Russia's protests against the North Atlantic pact. "It has been made clear," the department said in a statement, "that the Soviet government's interpretation of the pact is erroneous and provisions of the pact is erroneous."

SEASON OPENS

Port Arthur, April 7 — (CP) — The 1949 navigation season at the lakehead opened officially Wednesday night when the vessel George Hindman of Owen Sound, Ont., docked at Elevator No. 1. In command of Capt. George Henderson of Owen Sound, the vessel's trip from there in 52 hours, only two hours more than under the summer sailing schedule.

TO ANNOUNCE LEGISLATION

Ottawa, April 7 — (CP) — Justice Minister Garson said Wednesday in the Commons the government's policy with respect to legislation against Communism will be announced in due course. He was answering Wilfred LaCroix (L-Quebec Montmorency), member of a bill that would outlaw Communism.

Belleville Musicians Augment Kingston Symphony Orchestra

On Tuesday evening in Kingston Collegiate Auditorium the Kingston Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert of this season, and the second in history before a well crowded audience. This newly formed musical group of around fifty players gave a well balanced program of works by Rossini, Boccherini, Haydn, Hubinstein and Brahms under the baton of Mr. Harold Nicholson. James Bini, a teacher of stringed instruments in that city, was concert master of the orchestra and first desk man in the Double A Frenchy, leader of the local office here of the Traders Finance Corporation. Other participants and instrumentalists in this orchestra who are well known musically in Belleville are James Rose (flute), Albert Elliott (clarinet), Miss Hinchey (French horn), Messrs. Esther Dunne and Lewis Lambert (first and second oboes), Mrs. Bertram Wills (bassoon) and Harry Rose (tuba).

Even though in its formative stages as a symphony orchestra, being formed early last fall, the high standard of music was rendered and appreciatively received. Considering that the conductor was born in the near vicinity of Kingston and that the organization can display its talents to the music lovers of Kingston, Belleville and surrounding vicinities.—(E.L.)

Mr. King to Write, Publish Memoirs

Ottawa, April 7 (CP)—Former Prime Minister Mackenzie King today announced that he would write and publish his memoirs under sponsorship of McGill University and financed by the Rockefeller foundation of New York.

The Foundation trustees, at a meeting Wednesday, voted an appropriation of $100,000 to McGill University to be used over a period of three years for this purpose, the former Prime Minister said in a prepared statement.

"His final volume will be used exclusively in the study and preparation of material in my possession by persons specially qualified for such work," the statement stated.

Mr. Mackenzie King said he has been unable to make a beginning on anything in the nature of memoirs because of his illness and other reasons.

Earlier this week Mr. Mackenzie King announced that he had about completed a progressive delivery to the Canadian archives the great accumulation of books and documents of national significance he had gathered during his almost 30 years in office as Prime Minister or leader of the opposition.

Brighteners

Nashville, Tenn., (AP)—Hymenio Silvestain, 65-year-old tailor, was in stitches today—but he wasn't laughing.

Silvestain stuck his head in a rotating fan Wednesday while standing on a box in his shop.

It was one time someone else had to do Hymenio's stitching for him.

Yardville, N.J. (AP)—Even motorists who had a good answer to the question, "Where's the fire?" will start getting traffic tickets here.

Police Chief Robert Waterson has warned violators that summonses for exceeding the speed limit when they answer alarms.

Rochdale, Lancashire, England (CP)—Some slabs were hurled across the room by a gas explosion when 70-year-old Arthur Radcliffe lit the fire in his living room.

The room was shattered, and Radcliffe, who escaped injury, found himself looking down a 12-foot well he did not know existed.

Contents of the well? Why? It contained aging bottles of beer and whisky.

Interviewed when her latest collection of short stories was published under the title "The Bishop of Hell," she was asked what Joseph Shearing and George Preedy—two of her pseudonyms—were doing.

Shearing, it developed, had just completed a biography of Bonnie Prince Charlie's "Flora MacDonald of Albany" involving much research, while Preedy has a novel in the press entitled "Strange City."

Marjorie Bowen, she reported, was doing a novel.

Maintaining that her pseudonyms enabled her to bring new personality to bear in each work, she said that only her autobiography "The Debate Continues," was in her real name—Gabriel Long.

"No, I have no other secret pseudonym," she avowed. But 10 minutes later there was a correction:

"The Debate Continues' was by Marjorie Campbell—my maiden name!"

Tokyo, (AP)—The top moneymaker in Japan last year, the finance minister said today, was money-lender Masamitsu Morikawi.

His income was estimated at 90,000,000 yen (about $226,070).

But, the ministry complained, he hasn't paid his taxes.

"I have loaned 150,000,000 yen to others," Moriwaki said; "I have no cash."

GIVEN 12 YEARS

Montreal, April 7 (CP)—Paul Dufour, 30-year-old father of five children, Wednesday was sentenced to 12 years in penitentiary after pleading guilty to a charge of having had carnal knowledge of his 12-year-old adopted daughter.

BODY FOUND HANGING

Chatham, Ont., April 7 — (CP) —The body of five-year-old Mary Jean Busbey was found hanging today from a window of the outdoor lavatory at her parents' home here. She was found by her father, John Busbey, less than 20 minutes after she had left the house. It is believed an outside catch on the door trapped the small child inside. She kicked out a small window and apparently was reaching through the window to release the catch when she slipped.

REORGANIZE DEFENCES OF FIJI ISLANDS SHIFTING

Wellington, N.Z., April 7 — (Reuters)—Fiji's defences are being reorganized to ensure security for New Zealand's vital shipping routes, Defence Minister Frederick Jones announced Wednesday. Measures include three months full-time army training.

KEAYS NEVER

The police record of Constable J. R. Keays, RCMP, before the Mackay Royal Commission here Wednesday afternoon.

Commissioner H. Stringer, RCMP, head of the Ontario Provincial Police presented Keays record with the police department as he testified at the investigation inquiring into the officer's allegations of mismanagement, police and interference.

The police commissioner quoted from Keays' complaint swashbuckling police officer" who "would be a good officer to deal with gangsters but whose methods were entirely out of place dealing with the general public.

This characterization Keays came from E. A. MacGillivray, former member of the Ontario legislature for Glengarry County, who in 1936 wrote a complaint to the attorney general's department, regarding the officer's behavior while stationed at Alexandria.

Termed 'Galloping Cossack'

Mr. MacGillivray in his letter termed Keays as being "overzealous" and termed him as a "galloping cossack" who drove department cars at high speed and parked on the wrong side of the street.

The police commissioner described Keays as a good investigating officer but with one bad fault—he was tactless when dealing with the public.

He emphatically denied Keays' allegation that he had suppressed evidence at the Dent-Mikl inquest at Gravenhurst.

"That is not true," he said, "it is perfectly ridiculous. I never suppressed evidence at any time."

He said it was a matter of deep regret that Keays had not been permitted before the Royal Commission the Dent murder which had been forgotten by his family. He commended Sgt. J. A. Stringer for his action in shooting Mikl.

Says Keays Not Satisfied With His Lot

The police commissioner related an incident which occurred at the Belleville headquarters office in July, 1946, following the official opening of the police radio.

Keays had come to him in Inspector Page's office and said that he was not satisfied officer and that he was not satisfied with his lot as radio despatcher.

Police Commissioner Stringer stated that he had pointed out to Keays that he was doing good work as a radio despatcher and that he would be invalid continue. He had told Keays that he must obey lawful orders and if he felt he could not, then he suggested his resignation from the force.

He said Keays had immediately changed his tone of voice and said "I was going to be a big explosion around here. There's a letter going in to Farquhar Oliver about this case."

"Disappointed in Keays"

"Following that I felt disappointed in Keays," stated the commissioner. "If felt it was the duty of Keays to be disciplined to the government and to the uniform of the force."

Inspector T. H. Trimbell, head of the police radio commission at Toronto branch, stated he had been present in Inspector Page's office when Keays had his conversation with the police commissioner.

After the interview Keays had jumped to his feet and said to the commissioner, "it is too bad we can't speak with you."

The commissioner had replied "what do you mean?" and Keays had replied: "It doesn't matter, there's going to be a big explosion around here anyway. There's a letter going in to Mr. Oliver."

Keays had referred to the radio room as the "detention barracks" and intimated he had been placed there as punishment. The police commissioner stated the department was proud of its radio communications branch and said some of the best men of the force had been placed in charge.

Inspector Trimbell told Commissioner Mackay that he had recommended Keays for the radio room knowing that he was doing no active police work in order following his return from Niagara Falls. He had done this out of kindness to Keays and because he felt he was a good police officer.

Claims Derogatory Remarks Made

The inspector claimed that while he was stationed at Ottawa in 1943 Keays had made a derogatory remark about him. He said Keays had allegedly referred to him as a "stool pigeon" sent down to Ottawa by Commissioner Stringer to spy on Lem. He said Keays denied the statement.

"Wasn't it common knowledge around Ottawa that you had been sent down as a stool pigeon," asked Keays.

"Only a man with an envious and warped mind would say a thing like that," the witness shot back at Keays. "If there was a stool pigeon or informer in the house it was you Keays."

The inspector said Keays had been one of the informers against an Ottawa police sergeant who had been discharged after 23 years service.

Sgt. Oliver Borland, of the Toronto city police fingerprint department was called to testify in connection with a fingerprint which had been submitted to him by Keays.

Fingerprint Smudged

The fingerprint submitted had been taken from the stock of the rifle which had killed Miss Jean Badgley Frankford, in 1947. However, the print had been so smudged that there was not sufficient detail for identification, he said. Previously in the hearing Keays had said that Sgt. Borland had told him the print could be identified, contrary to the statement of the RCMP. A notation to this effect had appeared in Keays' diary.

Elmer E. Bowen, former provincial police constable at Belleville and now a hotel owner at Port Stanley, Ont., stated under cross-examination by Crown Attorney Donnan that he had investigated the Carefoot matter to ascertain if Mr. Carefoot was practicing for gain or for free.

No Instructions to Discontinue

He said at no time did the crown attorney instruct him to discontinue his investigation. In fact he said Mr. Donnan had recommended to him that "immediate action" be taken in the matter. te reported to his district inspector who turned the matter over to the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Police Commissioner Stringer said he had never been harsh to Keays, but on the contrary had tried to help him. He had arranged to have him transferred back to Belleville from Niagara Falls, when it had been recommended by Dr. J. W. Sturgeon of the department of Health, "but Keays he gives leave of absence and returned to where he could be near his family.

Capt. Bew Irvine and Const. J. B. Driscoll returned to the stand, the former to refute a statement which Const. Siple had accused him of saying in connection with the Holdenbeck accident. Const. Driscoll denied that he knew James D., "Scotty" Wilson until some time after the 1944 liquor seizure.

Commissioner Stringer denied Capt. Hagarman that he had made false representation regarding him to the attorney general's department.

"I never made false representations regarding anyone," I did not and would not do that, and you know it," he told Keays.

STRATOSPHERE FLYING

Aeronautic science continues its advance. The world has seen with the eye the passage of planes, it has seen them in the movies which bring them close to the hearts and minds of men so that travel is really planes conscious. That being so with humans expecting invention after invention and being scarcely even mildly surprised by the latest devices, it does not come as a surprise to learn that there is expectation that soon an airliner will be flying at the height of eight miles above the earth's surface. It is the Tudor VIII now in the experimental stage and claimed to be the fastest airliner. It has already attained a speed of 430 miles an hour. This is a British four-jet machine which will shortly attempt flights at an altitude of 44,000 feet.

Flying at the eight-mile height will be regarded as one of the great strides forward for the present maximum operating height of pressurized airliners with piston engines is 25,000 feet.

The quest for still greater operating heights is considered well worth the time, money and effort for the advantage of smoother air, clear skies, less fuel consumption and higher speeds.

The future seems freighted with possibilities so great that there may be a complete transformation of customs and habits of travel in the years to come. Wonders have been achieved and there is no sign that such wonders will cease.

APRIL'S TEARS AND SMILES

April's smiles and tears are no surprise to anyone. The snowfall which placed a light blanket of white over the landscape while unexpected was all according to the plan of nature. Mother Earth needs moisture and this in the form of snow at this time has its advantages over rain, necessary as that is.

April is on the border line of months and its vagaries are expected now and then. The month has been given the name of "fickle April." But a little slush on the walks as on Wednesday morning is taken in good style for the snow on the land was precious.

Snow with all its drawbacks avoids the unpleasantness of rain. Now with spring it is well to remember that the raincoat may be needed to protect against a sudden shower in this changeable month, for rain is one of the features of April and man's philosophy has created the sentence "April showers bring forth May flowers." If May is to come then April called by one poet "spongy April" must be expected to behave in characteristic fashion.

April brings the first signs of the green grass, now already sprouting on the lawns and soon to clothe in a new dress the face of the earth.

Nature is preparing to shed the faded appearance Old Earth wears in this northern part of the world. There is warmth and the sap has been rising. It is the way of spring and after an unusually temperate and kindly winter, the sallies of April do not cause any irritation.

Some of the birds have already arrived to enlighten the scene with their plumage. They are the heralds of the warming days and less cold nights which will usher in May, that risen flowering of springtime. They are the vanguards of the legions of winged creatures whose songs make merry the coming months.

TELEVISION IN MEDICAL TRAINING

Television is going to make its way into the operating room in Guy's Hospital in London, enabling students to watch from another room outside the operating theatre the intricate details of surgical operations as though through the eye of the surgeon. There will be a camera with three lenses capable of taking full view photographs as well as high shots and close-ups suspended above the operating theatre and worked by an engineer by remote control. The apparatus, incorporated in lights over the operating table, has taken more than three years to design and will soon be ready for tests. It will make Guy's Hospital the first in the world to design and have permanent television as a teaching aid and the first in Europe to televise operation procedure. Advance in teaching operating surgery is seen as a result of the installation.

It is easy to realize the advantage of television in this work as it will provide a great variety of views of the course of operations and should prove of great help to students in surgery.

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST

(Copyright, 1949, Edgar A. Guest)

CHILD'S WORLD

How wonderful the world must be
To any bright-eyed child of three!
All's new and fair; the simplest thing
Enchantment and delight will bring.
As hand in hand you walk along,
The smiling child sees nothing wrong.

A child at grown-up folks will stare
And never see the lines of care.
Too young to sense that difference which
Divides the poor man from the rich,
The fair from ugly, short from tall,
A three-year-old will smile on all.

'Tis well the Lord has willed it so—
That children older have to grow
Before they learn the petty pride
And prejudices which divide,
And can believe this world to be
A place of wonders, trouble free.

THE PACKSAND

OF GREGORY CLARK

Cityward from a fashionable residential suburb, a respectable-looking citizen, a family man if ever you saw one, drove alone in his motor car.

At a corner, a young lady stepped out and signalled him. He stopped.

"Oh, thank you!" cried the young lady fervently. "I'm late for work."

"It's a pleasure," said the family man, kindly.

They chatted about the weather. Suddenly, as they entered the city, the young lady gave her spring coat and began tearing her blouse to ribbons. Ripping it back and down.

"What's the idea?" enquired the family man slowing his car.

"Now," smiled the young lady, viciously, "you give me — or get me — one hundred bucks, or I stick my head out this window and scream for the cop we've come to. Cops don't like young ladies to be attacked."

"I've only got ten dollars," temporized the family man.

"A hundred or I scream," cut in the young lady, loudly but hair. "Stop at the first bank. You can cash a cheque, a guy like you."

"Sister," said the family man, slowing the car, "here's the first cop."

"Hi, Joe!" he called, heartily. "I got her the first trip."

The young lady, baring her torn blouse, tousling her hair, continued to scream.

"Whatsit?" commanded the family man. "You'll bust the microphone."

On the the instrument panel, a small microphone was taped. It was attached to a wire recorder in the luggage seat of the car. The family man was a policeman detailed to catch the young women who are hired by the day on half a dozen genuine family cars in the district too timid to do anything but pay up.

Defence to Cost Greatest Amount In U.K.'s History

London, April 7 (CP)— British will spend £1,760,000,000 (U.S. $4,040,000,000) for defence in the fiscal year beginning April 1, the largest peace-time military expenditure in the country's history.

Sir Stafford Cripps, Chancellor of the Exchequer, told the House of Commons Wednesday in his annual budget message that this sum was necessary because there can be no decrease in defence expenditures "for some years, unless there is a complete change in the international situation."

"Indeed, we may have to face some increase as a result of our co-operation in making the defences of western Europe more effective and efficient," he said.

The 1949-50 military budget is almost 17 per cent greater than '46-49 when total costs were £2,092,000,000.

Britain plans to spend a total of £701,450,000 for her three services during the year, a rise of £27,500,000 as the air force will be £207,500,000, an increase of £18,000,000 over last year. Total spending the army will be £304,700,000, a decrease of £300,000. Navy expenditures total £189,250,000, an increase of £36,250,000.

Whitehall Notebook:

Lord Maenan Looks Forward To Making Speech at 100

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, April 6 (CP)—Fortified by his snuff-box—"Snuff keeps the brain young"—Lord Maenan born in 1854, looks forward to making a speech in the House of Lords when he reaches 100 years.

At the moment he is a "new boy" in the Halls of Parliament and his maiden speech, made last Summer, was a model of brevity.

Although he is part of modern life he is also history in the legal world. Every law student knows he is the judge who made the shortest summing up on record. When the evidence had been heard, he turned to the jury and said, "Well, gentlemen?" He would be quite amusing to make another speech in the Lords when I am 100—if I had the nerve," said Lord Maenan.

The present speech took three minutes.

Rather than speak of his long career as barrister and judge, he would talk about snuff—"It's the thing for keeping one awake after a good lunch."

Then there's his Welsh. He has become interested in his family history and remembers names of ancestors were named Kyffin. When he was Sir William Jones's age—100—he'll be busy at the law he had no time for study of history but now he thinks it is only right he should trace the Kyffins' story with a knowledge of Welsh.

By every method he starts his day with a study of books of Welsh and a Welsh-speaking member of the House comes to see him once a week.

Then there's his memorizing. Every day this silver-haired man picks up a book and commits a passage to memory.

"It strengthens the fibre of the brain."

He was the oldest man created a peer and the oldest to be granted a pension, given at 26 because he was the last surviving member of the Canal Commission abolished last year.

"If the government offers me any post I'll accept. You can see that I will certainly consider it."

Mackenzie's Column: Must Station U.S. Troops as Long As Cold War Lasts

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press News Analyst

Having signed the Atlantic defensive pact, we immediately come up against the impossible: a sensible but unavoidable question of how it is to be implemented if there is aggression.

We have part of our answer in Britain's decision to increase by brass from the United States stationed in establishments. With a unanimity which could only be inspired, they made it clear that one of the reasons troops must be stationed in Europe as long as the cold war lasts.

Does that shock you? Well, it shouldn't, though it could be a disturbing thought. An Atlantic alliance without backing would be just a paper agreement and such would have the hollow sound of hammering on an empty rain barrel. Army secretary Kenneth Royall put it like this in Chicago:

"We could not win a world war in a matter of days or weeks or months. Nor in the foreseeable future could we achieve victory by standing on our shores and throwing rocks or rockets or anything else across the seas."

Royall and other high military officials emphasize that the United States can't afford to let European ground forces bear the brunt of any lightning attack on the continent. Royall said the Atlantic pact powers and banking of an American army overseas, and also the United Nations organization, their own fighting forces. (The supply of equipment is said to be of Washington's immediate objectives.)

Good Education

As a matter of fact, since the United States can't maintain a big standing army anyway, there is also special reason why involved in having some of it stationed in Europe. Actually it would be a valuable peacetime assignment for the men educationally. And, in addition, it would probably be calculated to lessen the chances of war.

We can't rule out the possibility that, once it is clear the cold war is at a standstill in Europe, the east and west may be able to solve their differences. Indeed, it reached this point in our column the following news dispatch was laid up on desk from Berlin:

High Russian officers came to this city today to discuss the question for the first time since Berlin was divided in two. High Russian officials had not attended any such Allied gathering since they walked out of a session in Berlin and walked out of the four-power council.

Members Favor Early Federal General Election

Ottawa, April 7 — (CP) — A "let's go" sentiment in favor of an early general election was discernible Wednesday among Liberal members of the Commons at a party caucus.

This was reliably reported but Prime Minister St. Laurent, who has the final say, indicated clearly that his mind is not made up.

In any event, he told reporters, there will not be a snap dissolution. He indicated his preference is for an election between April 25 as scheduled and there will be a party caucus, probably April 27.

The Prime Minister said he and his colleagues would be "very interested" then to hear the views brought back by the Liberal members from their home constituencies. The choice of an early election date would reflect majority opinion of his party.

If the bulk of opinion presented at that caucus is for a spring election, Mr. St. Laurent would likely dissolution of parliament might be announced within a week or so, would have to be quick if the election is to be in June or early July.

Await Starting Gun

Ontario Liberals are reported to be generally awaiting the starting gun, confident that they can increase representation from 83 seats to 91. Ontario elected only 34 Liberals in 1945.

It is understood the majority of the Cabinet members favor an election in June as a good spring while thereafter.

Cabinet members are divided on the choice of a time and the majority are said to favor June. They put up an everything to gain and nothing to lose by waiting until the last possible moment.

One obstacle to a June election, apart from the press of parliamentary business, including the budget, that would be left in the air, is the need of an issue.

Progressive Conservatives and members of other parties have shown no particular preference and presumably would welcome a test for the test at any time.

Government has almost nothing for them to lose and possibly something to gain if it is put off until fall. In that case it seems unlikely they would risk a defeat in parliament with any sharp issue unless trapped into it.

WIN THEIR APPEAL

Toronto, April 7 — (CP) — Leonard Foster and William Shortt Wednesday won their appeal against conviction for the 1943 armed robbery of W. G. Moorehead in Thedford, Ont., last May 27. Chief Justice R. S. Robertson of Ontario court of appeal in charge under which the two were committed for trial ordered a new detail from the charge on which they were convicted. Foster and Shortt were convicted in Sarnia by Judge E. A. Shannessey.

Strength for the Day

DR. EARL L. DOUGLASS

WATCH OUT FOR TOLERANCE

We live in an age of abundant tolerance. It's the style now to be tolerant. Nothing is so disliked as intolerance.

There is a reason for this, of course. A dozen or more years of the Nazis with their cruel intolerance gave us enough of that evil to last for a long time. And then, again, in this country especially, the abundance of comforts makes us tolerant. With three good meals a day, a roof over our heads, a good job, and an automobile, we are not too anxious to go out and start a crusade against some evil.

Intolerance is a hateful reality. It can twist one's personality into meanness and bitterness. But tolerance is also a deadly vice. If we are tolerant of evils in our community and do nothing but shrug our shoulders and say, "Well, we are leaving undone the things we ought to do and committing, as the Prayer of Confession says, that there is no health in us. If we tolerate mediocrity in ourselves, that's too bad. But if we extend tolerance we can ever exercise is toleration toward our sins and weaknesses.

Life is a struggle. Evil is moral disease. If we are ever going to amount to anything, it will take the best we have to bring us to success. This is true in school, in business circles, in politics, in research. It is even more true in the cultivation of moral character.

A BABY IS NO T A MACHINE

In the 23rd edition of The Brady Baby Book I must have been in a hurry to get to the bowling green on time for the draw for the afternoon game when I wrote The newborn baby should be put to the breast four times a day in the first three or four days and encouraged to nurse. After lactation becomes established, even though this is delayed for a week or ten days, the baby should be nursed on a clock-work schedule at intervals of 2½ hours in the daytime, just once in the night, for the first month or two. The integral may be lengthened to 3 hours after the third month and to 4 hours after the seventh month; and always the baby should sleep undisturbed for one stretch of six hours in the night. These rules apply as well to artificial feeding.

In the current edition of The Brady Baby Book—for copy send twenty-five cents and stamped self-addressed envelope—I regard babies as people, not machines. And just a general plan is all that advisable to nurse or go through the motions of nursing the breast born baby four times a day, for the good of mother and baby. Then after the first week or two, however, if the baby is normal it is just as well to nurse the baby when the baby wants to nurse or to feed the baby when the baby needs the need of an issue.

TODAY'S TALK

BY GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

FAILURE AS CAPITAL

I have been a lifelong reader of biographies, the life stories of those who have left an inspiring name behind them. Mostly, I have noticed, the sole capital of these men and women has been a goodly number of failures. But each one of those failures became a stimulus that led to final success.

The early books of many of our greatest inventors started off with a multitude of failures as their capital. And they went ahead upon them from the incentive to drive them on to success and to greater triumphs. You have but to read of their lives to learn this fact.

Money as capital often runs out early, and those who have depended upon this alone usually acknowledge failure and quit. Not so those who have depended upon failures to spur them on. Failures are nailed and molded in the soul, to come out as fine steel, structural and with the refined touch of permanence to them. Capital bred in endurance.

Trust Bids Debate

Debate in the committee is not expected to be anywhere near as lengthy as the fight on second reading. The debate was ended with a half hour speech by Mr. Frost Wednesday in which he denied charges that the bill was sneaked at the Attorney-General.

Earlier, opposition members had attacked the bill was designed to "isolate a political opponent out of existence," that it "violated the Bible" and "threatened freedom of the press."

Mr. Frost said: "There is every indication of an epidemic of such foundations in which I am quite satisfied the operation of businesses will be primary, and charity will be secondary."

These foundations would create conditions unfair to business, unfair to charities, unfair to taxpayers and would create "chaos in the free enterprise system on which the future of this province depends."

No Discrimination

Mr. Frost said: "The farthest thing from my mind and from the mind of the government is that there should be discrimination against the late Mr. Atkinson because of his political views."

The bill was "not retroactive. It does not change a word or a definition made in any will."

Section 37-hour debate on the bill's principle, opposition members described it as "insidious," and "vicious," that it was inspired by George McCullagh, publisher of the Toronto Globe and Mail and the Toronto Telegram, and by former George Drew, and that it interfered with "sacred wills."

Hard to Find Arguments

As the debate reached its final hours, opposition members were hard put to find fresh arguments and for the most part contented themselves with having their protest recorded in Hansard and with reading into the record editorials attacking the bill.

Wednesday's speakers included Premier Frost, Mrs. Agnes Dodds Macphail (CCF-York West); T. E. Foster (Lib-Bruce); H. L. Waters (CCF-Toronto Bracondale); Dr. J. T. Gordon (Lib-Brantford), ; R. C. Nixon (Lib-Brant); J. E. Fell (CCF-Toronto Parkdale), Robert Thornberry (CCF-Hamilton Centre), G. Arthur Reid (CCF-Sault Ste. Marie), Leslie Wismer (CCF-Toronto Riverdale), and C. Ben Thomas (CCF-Ontario).

Mr. Frost, closing the second reading debate, said the principle of charitable foundations "operating great businesses in Ontario is quite inconsistent with present-day conditions."

"Tremendous sums of money in the exemptions would be paid to these organizations "to create conditions unfair to business, unfair to charities, unfair to the taxpayers and create "chaos in the whole fabric of this province depends."

Inspired by Two Georges Claim

Agnes Macphail (CCF-York West) said she thought the bill was inspired by "the two Georges" —George McCullagh, publisher of the Toronto Globe and Mail and the Toronto Telegram, and former Premier George Drew, now that International Progressive Conservative leader.

Mr. Park said the bill would force sale of the Atkinson Foundation's newspapers and that they could be bought only by "financial interests who can acquire monopoly control of the newspapers and radio."

Mr. Nixon asked that the government remove the "objective" aspect of the bill and would, if so urged, be open to charitable foundations set up at least six months after the bill became law. He also suggested that the period in which foundations must comply with the act be extended from three years to seven years.

"Any government should think very, very seriously indeed before attacking the will of a man who has given his reward," Mr. Nixon said.

The bill made directives of the will of Joseph E. Atkinson, late owner of the Toronto Star, "null and void" and unenforceable to carry out."

If, as the government anticipated, here would be a "rush" of charitable foundations they should be dealt with by general legislation, he said, but existing foundations, whose founders were dead, should be exempted.

The government was "in an unholy hurry" to pass this bill, the bill provides for a fine of $5,000 or one year in jail or both for violation of the act. "Why should we single out people who are interested in charities for these terrible penalties," Mr. Nixon asked.

Motivated by Hate Charge

Mr. McEwing said the bill was motivated by Mr. Drew's "hate" or Mr. Atkinson whom the former "pursued with the very, very evil old man" and "an incorrigible hate."

Mr. Park moved second reading of a bill to increase from one to two weeks the vacation period provided under the vacations with pay act.

He said the "tempo of industry" had increased to such an extent that one week's holiday was not enough.

Liberal leader Farquhar Oliver said he approved the two week vacation principle but thought it was a farmer."

Industrial workers should be given a chance to "sample the wonders of Ontario and return to their jobs refreshed."

He would be forced to vote against the bill because there was already a Liberal amendment on the order paper asking for two weeks' vacation with pay after two years employment. Mr. Park's bill called for two weeks' vacation with pay after only one year.

Ned Pearkes (CCF-Nickel Belt) C. H. Millard (CCF -York West) said if the government did not support the principle of provision of Mr. Park's bill, "we are going to pay a terrible toll." Workers needed more fresh air and more time away from their work.

Labor Minister Daisley said, "if we go too far, if we impose too much on industry in these times we can bring about the result that Ontario industry will not be able to compete with other industries in the world."

He had never had a vacation with pay in his life, Mr. Daisley said. That was why he was happy to have introduced a bill which provided one week's vacation with pay for all workers.

"When I think the proper time has come I will be the first to support two weeks' vacation with pay."

DREW DEMANDS

The exchange occurred during continued debate on the supplementary estimates of the defence department. Speaking for Mr. Claxton, who was ill, G. R. Pearkes, V.C. (PC—Vancouver) John T. Hackett (PC—Stanstead); T. L. Church (PC—Toronto Broadview) and Wm. C. Cody, Lawrence Skey (PC—Toronto Trinity).

The planes in the Globe and Mail protographs were in hangars at Donalde, near Toronto, Mr. Claxton said, removal of wings and tails were necessary to make economies of space. As for the removal of instruments, they were being replaced with modifications because "some troubles had been found."

He would admit, he said that the planes were "inhibited," which meant movable parts were greased and covered with paper to prevent damage through lack of use.

Mr. Drew said Mr. Claxton had himself, by his denial, given the "best possible reason" why a Commons Committee should be established to inquire into the defence situation, with particular

Negro Residents Of Dresden Want Open Restaurants

Dresden, Ont., April 7 (CP)—Should restaurant proprietors be compelled to serve all patrons regardless of race, creed or color?

Electors in this small Kent county town, 13 miles north of Chatham, will vote on the question April 18. The 300 Negro residents among the population of 2,000 are pressing the issue because, they say, some of Dresden's five cafes discriminate against Negroes.

Mayor Walter S. Weese said Wednesday the referendum "may settle nothing."

"Even with an affirmative vote," he said, "I doubt if a by-law could legally be passed compelling a restaurant owner to serve a man, woman or child he does not wish for a customer."

Leader in the campaign against discrimination is William Joseph Carter, who lives with his wife and four children in one of the small modern farms and homes in the Dresden district.

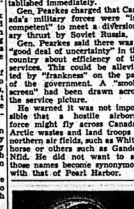
Carter refers to the days of Uncle Tom, when Dresden was a colored community and we were in the majority."

(According to legend, the original Uncle Tom, immortalized by Harriet Beecher Stowe, came here after his escape from Kentucky and established an institute for other runaway slaves with a 300-acre grant from Queen Victoria. Known as Rev. Josiah Henson, he died May 5, 1883, and was buried in a tiny cemetery a mile south.)

Citing several alleged cases of discrimination, Carter said that while recently he took a Dresden hairdresser but was refused an appointment elsewhere and advertiser in the shop said: "she's coloured."

Backing Carter's claims, councillor W. Fry did the land for a park in Dresden was donated many years ago by a Negro.

"And the deed stipulates that white children shouldn't be allowed to play in it."



reference to the state of the air force and navy.

Wing Cndr. Skey also urged that a defence committee be established immediately.

Gen. Pearkes charged that Canada's military forces were "incompetent" to meet a diversion-ary thrust by Soviet Russia.

Gen. Pearkes said there was a "good deal of uncertainty" in the country about efficiency of the services. This could be alleviated by "frankness" on the part of the government. A "smoke screen" had been drawn across the service pictures.

He warned it was not impossible that a hostile airborne force might fly across Canada's Arctic wastes and invade the northern air fields, such as Whitehorse or others such as Gander, Nfld. He did not want to name those names become synonymous with that of Pearl Harbor.

UPSIDE-DOWN BRAN MUFFINS

New, Different. Oh, So Good!

2 tablespoons fat, shortening or salad oil
½ cup milk
1 egg
1 cup Kellogg's All-Bran
2 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup sifted flour
2½ teaspoons baking powder
½ tablespoon melted butter
2 tablespoons apricots or peaches (cooked)

1. Blend shortening with sugar. Add egg; beat well.
2. Stir in All-Bran and milk; let soak 2 minutes. Sift flour with salt and baking powder. Add to first mixture; stir only until combined.
3. Pour greased muffin pan, put ½ teaspoon melted butter and 1 teaspoon brown sugar. Add 2 prunes. Add batter.
4. Fill pans about ⅔ full; bake in mod. oven (400°F.) about 25 min. Yield: 9 muffins (2½ inch size).

Cereals and fruit provide delicious morning nourishment.

WEDDINGS

SNOWE—TURNER

Stirling—On Saturday afternoon, April 2nd, the home of Miss Ruth Caldwell, Stirling, Ont., was the setting for an afternoon ceremony held beside a bank of pink and white apple blossoms when Rev. R. W. Barker of St. Paul's United Church, officiated at the marriage of his niece, Muriel Elizabeth Turner, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. D. Turner, of Whitby, to Mr. Edwin Lister Snowe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fennel L. Snowe, of Arthur, Ont.

Mrs. Harold West, Stirling, presided at the organ. Miss Mae Curtis, of Oak Hills, was soloist and rendered "O Perfect Love", and "I'll Walk Beside You".

Mr. Eldon Turner, of Oshawa, gave his sister in marriage. She graceful gown was of pastel blue brocade taffeta and she carried a bouquet of red roses.

Miss Irene McCann of Oshawa, as bridesmaid, chose a gown of pastel pink taffeta and carried Talisman rose. Both girls wore matching headdress in bonnet effect.

Mr. Allan Snowe, of Arthur, was groomsman for his brother.

Immediately following the ceremony, group pictures were taken, after which a reception for thirty guests was given at the home of the bride's sister. A dainty buffet luncheon was served by Mrs. Harold West, Mrs. R. A. C. Patterson, Mrs. Harold Baker, Mrs. J. B. Thompson and Mrs. Edgar Snowe.

The bride's table was decorated with pink and white snowballs, carnations, candles, and a three-tiered wedding cake, also a white cake lettered "The Bride".

Rev. R. W. Barker proposed the toast to the bride.

The out-of-town guests were—Mr. and Mrs. James L. Snowe, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Snowe and Jane Sandra, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Snowe, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Snowe, all of Arthur, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Snowe, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Carruthers and David of Toronto Mr. and Mrs. Ray Snowe and Donna, of Long Branch; Mr. and Mrs. Eldon Turner, Oshawa; Mr. and Mrs. R. Turner, Moss Road, and Miss Dorothy Phillips, Peterborough.

The happy couple left on a honeymoon trip to points east.

Surprise Tendered 41st Wedding Anniversary

Thomasburg—Last Thursday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Allen Jones were the guests of honor at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Earl Jones, Thomasburg, it being the way, when they were tendered a complete surprise on the occasion of their 41st wedding anniversary by their sons and daughters, and families; two sisters; one brother, and Mr. Jones' all the members of their family, with the exception of Glenn, of Arnprior, were able to be present.

A delicious evening dinner was enjoyed, and the evening spent in a time of reminiscing. After the dinner, Mr. and Mrs. Jones were presented with two arm chairs, one a rocker, and an end table from their sons and daughters. Among several other useful and lovely gifts was that of a beautiful lace table-cloth. Cards from near and far also bore the wishes of friends for many more years of happiness together.

Among the guests from Thomasburg were Mr. and Mrs. Earl Morton, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Bolrick, and family, and Mrs. Mary Morton, McTaggart, and Mr. and Mrs. Earl Jones.

Mrs. Jones' sister, Mrs. Kimmerly, of Napanee, was unable to be present due to illness.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Jones, in this vicinity, join in wishing them many more years of health and happiness together.

Classic Suit

Smart and useful

By VERA WINSTON

A SVELTE SUIT of fine gabardine, cut on classic lines, but with softening touches, is a good choice for that important buy that has to do duty day after day. This one has a three-quarter coat that is convertible, and a single breasted closing. There is a shaped collar, emerging at the neckline, one curved pocket at the hip, and sleeves converges towards a narrow wrist.

A Favorite Formula

By PRUNELLA WOOD

THE SHEATH gown with train and bustle back, and with (or without as in this model) a definite Polonaise front drape, has long been a royal favorite for quiling feminine beauties. Somehow the closely wrapped and elaborated skirt is the perfect complement for a very low-cut bodice, one which appears as a complete fashion plate in every gensation.

Taffeta is the usual fabric, and this model is no exception, being fashioned of imported wary taffeta of lovely weight and rustle, white with huge bouquets of violets printing it. This is a really grand gown, one for court gloves and slippers. Notice the ankle length in front, the perfect balance for the trained back skirt.

ADVICE to the LOVELORN

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Letters and Answers

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been going with a boy for a year, during which time he told me he loved me and asked me to marry him. I told him we are too young, and that I wasn't sure of his love anymore. He answered that he would prove his love for me.

In the next two months he dated five different girls, but even after seeing me he has come back to me and said he was sorry and that he really did love me.

Now I am very undecided as to whether we could ever be happy with each other. Although he always seems sincere when he comes back, I can't help wondering if he would be faithful to me. I realize that I am just starting out on the road of life and I don't want to do anything to ruin it.. M. J. B.

Dear "M. J. B.":

My advice to you is to take a long time to make up your mind about this young man. You could certainly afford to do this, since you are so young. His present erratic behavior may simply be due to the fact of his extreme youth, but it may also be a sign of a very unstable character which no girl would want in a husband.

And I must say B seems a very curious way to "prove his love".

I am glad that you realize the need for caution, and I am sure that if you wait a reasonable length of time before saying yes or no, you will reach a wise decision.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a boy of 16 and a junior in high school.

There is a girl in my class I like very much and I would like to know her better. I am not asking her for a date. I play on the basketball team and would like her to see me play.

"Ralph"

Dear "Ralph":

I think that any girl would be very much pleased to be invited to a basketball game by a member of the team. Don't be shy about your invitation, but a week or so before your next game, tell this girl up, or make an opportunity to see her in person, and just ask her in a friendly way if she wouldn't like to see the game as your guest. After the game take her somewhere for ice cream, or hamburgers and coffee, before you take her home. You'll surprised to find how easy it all is and what a good time you'll both have.

Fashion Flashes

MATCHING hats and scarves is a favorite device this Spring. Navy blue rustic straw braid is used for a little, rounded bonnet cut away at sides and back. It is trimmed with a mauve silk and velvet rose and bound in mauve. With it is a scarf of navy blue taffeta with flower-like ends that are filled in with miniature replicas of the big hat roses.

FIRMLY ENTRENCHED is the costume made up of matching skirt and blouse. After the rush has run wool jersey combinations, we'll be having colorful silk shanty two-some done in such luscious shades as coral, violet, nile green, orange, lemon and sun yellow.

THE VERY BEST blouse, that special for special costumes and occasions, might well be of silk chiffon or georgette, adorned with fine detail such as pin-tucking. Pleated silk chiffon is used for a blouse with a deep off-shoulder yoke to show off rows of drawn-thread work, and lavishly embroidered with satin dots. Long sleeves are very full.

FLATTERING color tones play a dominant role in beautiful evening fashions for Spring. Silk jersey in a delicate shade of mauve-pink is used for a dinner gown with a shoulder-covering, scooped out neckline and long slit sleeves of almost knuckle-length. A huge spray of silk and velvet violets almost fills in one shoulder.

ONE WIT has named 'em "collapsos", those new hats that collapse so neatly for packing. Some are of ribbon, others of straw or straw and felt. They aren't tricky looking at all, but very smart, and some have detachable trimmings.

Afternoon, Evening

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

THE AFTERNOON into evening dress has taken on quite a new and different look this season. The one is pure silk printed in purple and green on a mauve background. The deep square neckline is caught at either side with little purple velvet bows. Cap sleeves form a little cape collar in back. The separate scarf is lined in purple crepe. This is a good choice number for town, resort or travel.

GOOD MANNERS

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Easter soon . . . and Easter greeting cards will be winging their joyful message of "Hallelujah!" When you choose your Easter cards this year be extra careful to choose cards that say what Easter cards should say. Make your cards "speak" lovely things, graceful messages, inspirational words. Your own message, addressed in a friend's handwriting, is the most welcome morning, especially "welcome".

The theme of the card dealing with the most impressive history are the two that reflect the religious spirit of the day . . . the cherished Cross and the glorious Easter lilies. The Cross symbolizes the significance of Christianity; the solemnity of the Crucifixion and the joy of the Resurrection. The lily, illustrated at us, was the yardstick by which the date of Easter was determined by the Council of Nice in 325 A.D., for it was then that the Easter lily blooms in Egypt during the period of the Spring Equinox, at which time the Resurrection occurred. It was there here which apparently influenced the Council when they decreed that the Easter observance be held on the first Sunday following the full moon on or after the Vernal Equinox.

How to Address Easter Cards to the Clergy

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. How should an Easter greeting card be addressed to a minister?

2. To a priest?

E. T.

1. To a minister who is not a Doctor of Divinity, address the card: The Reverend Joseph Wells. If he has the degree of D.D., address it: The Reverend Joseph Wells, D.D., or The Reverend Dr. Joseph Wells.

2. A card to a Roman Catholic priest should be addressed: The Reverend Joseph J. Harris. If the priest has a scholastic degree, write "Dr." after the "Reverend" and it is a minister of a religious order, write the initials of the order after his name: for example, The Reverend Dr. Joseph F. MacDuna, S.J.

Important notes about writing these: (1) Always write The before Reverend. (2) Do not put a title, like "Mr.") it is an solecism of courtesy. (3) Do not taste to spell "Reverend" in full, rather than to use the abbreviation "Rev." (3) It is not correct to write "The Reverend Wells"; that is without the first name.

Easter card signature should be informal names . . . not "Mr. and Mrs."

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My husband and I would like to send our Easter cards, signing them with both our names. We do not will be sending greeting cards together. How should these be signed? I think "Mr. and Mrs." would be correct, because we have been so recently married. But my husband thinks this seems too formal, and that our first names should be signed. Who is right about this?

Janet A.

Your husband is right. In the signature to a greeting card (as to a letter) it is your informal names you should sign. . . never your formal names, names with the titles "Mr." and "Mrs." So sign your Easter cards Jane and John (or John and Janet, if you consider it more polite to write your husband's name first, since you are signing the cards). And probably for some of the cards (for identification) you should sign your last name also: Janet and John Allen. Or perhaps, since you were married so recently, some might need this identification: Janet Allen (includes your maiden name: John Allen and Janet Foster Allen.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Good-looks sermonette to teenagers

Health is a dull subject to youth. To them it is just a tiresome topic that occupies the minds of adults. Young people do not realize that it is vitally important to happiness and good appearance. Mothers protest against late hours and disregard for correct eating habits. A lot of good it does them!

They go skipping through life's summer

Look at the pretties who fare back and forth to school, books under their arms. Every age has its charm, but youth has all the other ages beaten for eye appeal. Lovely buds, and lovely blooms they will be if they are followers of the Beauty Lifestyle.

They go skipping through life's Summer, haven't a thought that autumn may eventually come. Yet how they take care of themselves will have much to do with their adult appearance. The complexion, for one fair, the figure must have certain attentions. Many an unlovely complexion in the twenties is due to neglect during the teens.

Young girls over-estimate their strength and endurance. They don't attend to their studies they have too many social activities. They dance till dawn and cut down the hours of sleep without showing any fatigue. They have a delicate organism known as the central nervous system. It can suffer wear and tear. When that happens a girl can get an early start on her worries.

Exhaustion and weariness show themselves in the lines of the figure, in movements of the body, in the expression of the eyes. It isn't sense to fancy that the young person can't afford a certain amount of rest. If she does not have it, some part of the human machine is likely to protest.

Girls in high school and college who keep up with their studies and have a hectic social life are pretty much under a strain. Some girls of seventeen look twenty. When they are thirty they look forty. That's getting off on the wrong foot, early.

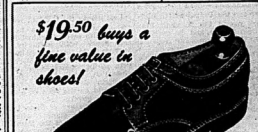
To a girl of fifteen, thirty seems like decrepit old age. She is mistaken. At thirty a woman may be getting a running jump into interesting activities. If she is smart she has learned a lot by that time, developed a pleasing personality, has made herself agreeable and attractive.

She is deeply concerned in preserving her good looks. She wants to keep within finger touch of her youth. She doesn't turn a deaf ear to health suggestions.

If she eats wisely, gets plenty of sleep and takes exercise, keeps a rein on her emotions—unpleasant ones are devastating—her birthdays will never catch up with her.

Look ahead, cuties, look ahead. Don't ruin your looks when mother begs you to keep early hours. Mother knows best.

CASHIER NAMED



Madison, Wis., April 7 (AP)— Officials of the Bank of Madison, whose former assistant cashier is serving a prison term for making false entries, announced yesterday appointment of $15,000. The assistant cashier, John K. Gill 45, was named in a complaint signed by his father, Norman F. Gill, president of the bank.

TURN DOWN ELECTION

New York, April 7 — (AP)— Taxi owners Wednesday turned down a State Labor Board election among striking cab drivers because, they said, the six - day strike is broken. But officials of the union said the strike still is 80 per cent effective and "the morale of the strikers is high." Police said more than half the normal number of cabs were back on the streets.

NO DOWN CARGOES

Cleveland, April 7 — (AP) — Iron ore loaded at upper Great Lakes ports last week totalled 1,217,663 gross tons, the Lake Superior Iron Ore Association reported Wednesday. A year ago, when navigation opened April 4, the first down-bound cargo had not yet arrived at the Soo locks April 6. But by Wednesday night 160 steamers had locked through the Soo with cargoes since the

Pianist Dresses To Music's Mood

York, England, (CP)— Eileen Joyce, well-known London pianist dresses to suit the mood of the music she is playing. She was criticized by some concert-goers here for appearing in three different gowns at a Chopin recital.

She began her program with a group of scherzos and impromptus, for which she wore an emerald green velvet gown trimmed with brilliants. For the more sombre "Funeral March" sonata she changed to a sheer white gown trimmed with sequins. Finally she wore a rich peacock blue dress embroidered with brilliants.

"We thought it unnecessary for such a brilliant artist to waste her brief leisure moments changing when she could have been resting", said one woman concertgoer.

"It took away the stability of art and brought in too much glamor. We are northern people and we know good music when we hear it. That sort of thing might be all right in London, but not here.

A Yorkshire Post critic said: "Eileen Joyce could not have looked more lovely. The delicate colors of her gowns suited admirably the particular mood of the piece she was playing. And she returned from the wings with different-colored gowns, the audience gasped with delight."

SAYS U.S. HELP PROVING SUCCESS IN FREE NATIONS

Marshall Plan Now Year Old; Director Claims Communists Are Losing Ground

By SIGRID ARNE

Washington — (AP) — Just a year ago the United States Congress passed the Marshall Plan to help Europe, and the battle to keep Communism away from the shores of the Atlantic was on.

There was an almost immediate pay-off. The Communists lost the Italian election. No one had known how that election would tally.

Now Paul Hoffman, director of the Economic Co-Operation Administration, tells Congress the Communists have lost ground in every European nation where there is a free vote.

The Marshall Plan has been aimed at several political hopes. Death of Communist strength in Europe has been one. Another hope — perhaps more of a dream, but far in the future in any event —has been a merger of European states into one nation.

Such a merger was first hinted in the speech which set off the Marshall Plan, made in June 1947 at Harvard by then secretary of state, George C. Marshall. Hoffman offered American loans and grants to Europe if it would co-operate to help itself.

It took European leaders exactly 11 days after Marshall's speech to meet the challenge. Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin of Britain went to Paris to talk over with the French premier of the day, Paul Ramadier, what Europeans could do.

Out of Bevin's trip grew the 16-nation Organization of European Economic Co-Operation. In that group western European nations put their cards on the table: what they could produce and sell, what they would need to get from each and from the New World.

Last summer that led to an American demand that the Europeans work out the entire plan through 1952, when U. S. aid is to end.

Significant Move

Last month the O.E.E.C. set up an executive committee to be staffed with men of cabinet rank and hence with authority. Its purpose is to tie together European future during the Marshall Plan period and perhaps even after that. Carlo Sforza, Italy's elder statesman, commented that this could be the start of a true European government.

U. S. Secretary of State Dean Acheson made another overall political estimate of the Marshall Plan when he told Congress the more announcement of American aid to Europe had forced Moscow to reveal its hand.

He said "the Red's true aims came out in the open when they were forced to oppose a plan aimed at improving the lot of Europeans." The Russians not only refused to join in the Marshall Plan but turned their chief propaganda agency, the Cominform, against it.

What help has American aid actually been so far?

Acheson told Congress it has "put end to black markets, an end to hunger, it has given greater security and it has given hope to Europe's youth."

Figures show that Europeans are eating a few more calories each day than they did just after the war. Production rates have jumped, and the continent has finally left the march, turning out more than she did before the war. But there is still unemployment in Austria, Italy and Greece.

None of the nations could yet stay fed and at work without American help. Europe will be off the hook only when all the nations are making enough to feed their people, bills. The O.E.E.C. has said that won't be true even in 1952.

Developments in U. S.

E.C.A. has had some trouble at home:

1. Congress said half the E.C.A. goods must go to Europe in U. S. ships. But American shipping costs are higher than European. As a result, Europeans are spending dollars for shipping that they might use for machinery. So far Hoffman has had his battle to permit Europe to use its own ships entirely.

2. American industries with foreign branches failed to get E.C.A. to bail them out, regardless of whether their goods were necessary to rebuilding Europe.

3. Europeans who get U. S. help must put aside each month of their own currencies to match the help they get. Five per cent of those funds is supposed to buy "strategic materials" for the U. S. That program lags.

4. About a fifth of America's $5,055,000,000 first year's aid was supposed to be in loans to Europe. Europeans took the gifts quickly but lagged on writing loans. Expect here though there were few loan risks over there. Chances are they will start dropping the loan provisions.

5. Very few private American investors have enough confidence in Europe yet to send any money there.

6. One object of American planning is to get Europeans to buy from each other because the more they do, the less they depend on us. But all Europe needs heavy goods like steel, cement and machinery.

They shy away from buying luxuries from France, nations in the E.C.A. finally had to ask the nations which produce wanted goods, like Britain and Belgium, to put other Europeans on the cuff —which means Europeans are still going into debt to other Europeans.

CRITICIZED DEPARTMENT

Yorkton, Sask., April 6 — (CP) —Magistrate S. H. Potter criticized the federal government's Indian Affairs Department Monday when he sentenced a 17-year-old girl of the Crescent Lake Indian Reserve to one month in jail on a charge of drunkenness. "It is a disgrace that such a matter of supervision for the Indian Department who appear to treat these people like a bunch of turkeys or a sack of potatoes, the magistrate said.

PICTON

Several Projects Planned For Crop Improvement

Picton — Prince Edward Crop Improvement Club this week completed plans for several projects to be carried out during the year. Committees will deal with hay and pasture test work, field crop test plots, weed control demonstrations, tomato and corn variety test plots.

Three acres of hay and pasture demonstration lots will be set out on the farms of Barton Cronk, Elmer Collier and Elmer Young.

The association will co-operate with Prince Edward Agricultural Society in an oat-growing competition, and with the County Junior Farmers in plots to test width of drills for seeding newer varieties of oats.

Six varieties of tomatoes on three different farms will be tested. A grain club for boys and girls 12 to 20 years of age will be sponsored. Seed will be provided at one-half the cost, with the association paying the remainder.

Eight Confirmed

Eight candidates were confirmed by the Metropolitan of Ontario, Rt. Rev. John Lyons, Archbishop of Ontario, at the Church of St. Mary Magdalene here on day morning. The Archbishop gave the confirmations of the Lambeth Conference.

X-Ray Survey

A mass X-ray survey was made by Prince Edward Health Unit last weekend. There were 1,679 attending. This is about 70 per cent of the total population of the area covered and exceeds the target set by the Department of Health and not previously reached in the province.

First boat to pass down the Bay of Quinte was the Cement Exporter of Point Anne which left Point Anne where it had wintered, on Monday.

A tenant house on the farm of Howard Anderson, just east of Picton, was badly damaged by fire Monday night. A Dutch family which arrived in this country three weeks ago was rendered homeless. The fire, believed to have started from stovepipe, spread into the walls and ate through the roof. Two rooms were gutted. Contents were removed. Bloomfield fire department kept the blaze under control. Temporary accommodation has been found for the family.

BUYS HOPE DIAMOND

New York April 6 (AP)— A New York City jeweller announced Tuesday night he had bought the Hope diamond and other jewels of the late Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean for "over $1,000,000." The jewel collection includes the 44 1-2 carat Hope diamond, the 100 carat pear-shaped "Star of the East" diamond, a ruby bracelet containing the 16 1-2 carat "Star of the South" diamond and some 70 other pieces.

Bonfires in Dark of Moon

I wonder if they still burn the straw stacks on the prairie when threshing is all over and the grain has been sold or stored? And if they do, do they make a sort of fiesta of it, as we used to do. . .

Of course, with our modern scientific methods of making this out of that, Grace Lockhart writes in the Vancouver Province, I suppose we wearing last year's straw stack on my back for all I know Or in my pocket.

Looked Like Waste

I may not have been born 40 years too soon, but I used to think that, burning an awful waste, but what could you do? True, the range cattle used to eat some of it in the winter when the snow was too deep for feeding. Or they could find shelter in the lee of the hay stacks, once they had gouged out spaces big enough to hold them.

These cattle were not to be confused with the stock that were comfortably fed and housed all winter. Milch cows and fancy heifers and teacher's pets generally, or some puny animal that couldn't take it. But the biggest part of the herd stayed out all winter. They lived on the fat of the land all summer in the hay sloughs and the rolling hills that were the Moose Mountains.

After the first blizzard had swept the stubble land and the summer fallow, drifting the snow into the coulees, and wiping out the trails, those cattle knew where to find shelter.

Settled Differences

They could burrow out caves in the straw stacks and they found together, almost out of sight. When they were out in the open fields, they might not be on even scratching terms, but calamity brought them close, they got along.

We lived a couple of miles from the new little town, which was not beginning to have its presence felt throughout the countryside. Already fences of barbed wire were being strung along on willow pickets, although we used to tie the pickets with buffalo skulls in case we became too civilized. But when the threshing was over, our place was the natural setting for the straw-burning party. Dad always picked out the stacks he wanted for the cattle and we could burn the rest.

I used to lease a general invitation to my teen-age pals in town. I might have been Miss Mavis all so closely did I follow the general motif for the party. I even collected my quota in the hay rack.

Darkness Preferred

It was better to have the party in the dark of the night, because the burning stacks gave a more "lovely light." We used to pretend we were gipsies and powwow around the blaze, but the shadows tempted our dancing somewhat.

Sometimes we had our party in a harvest moon. Away beyond the bleached fields we could see the faint outlines of the farmhouses, barns and the tiny, glimmering pinpoints of the lights in the town. Of course there was always the great canopy of stars. Nature used indeed to make our burning seem puny on such a night, but it was fun anyway.

When the last stack was burned we would go home and have a good feed. Hot dogs—we had never heard of them. It was more likely to be sandwiches and cake and lots of pie, with fresh butter-milk on the side. Sometimes we even had a barrel of apples, if any shipments had come in from Ontario.

When the party was over, we'd drive our guests back to town. The fires would have burned low and the stars came back into their own. Down where the trail dipped down to the coulee, it would be cold with the first hint of frost.

Independents Want Voice in Policies

By WAYNE OLIVER

New York — (AP) — The nation's independent radio stations plan to throw their weight around a little more hereafter in the shaping of policies for the broadcasting industry.

They claim that one-half of the nation's 2,700 radio stations are independents that operate without network connections and affiliations, and that they play a vital role in the industry and in the communities they serve.

The independents have called a special meeting in Chicago April 10, one day in advance of the convention of the National Association of Broadcasters, to agree on a plan of action.

Ted Cott of station WNEW in New York, chairman of the independent's executive committee, says he's opposed to setting up a splinter or rump organization outside the N.A.B., which represents better than two-fifths of the industry. But independent broadcasters feel, he explains, that they should start to "speak with one voice."

Planned for Networks

The independents long have contended that many industry policies — including the N.A.B. broadcasting code adopted last year — were shaped to fit the needs of network stations and often worked hardships on the independent or community station. This has been denied by network stations, but in any event the subject will be thrashed out at the N.A.B. convention April 11-13.

One thing the independents objected to in the code was a schedule of time limitation on commercials. They contended the content and nature of a commercial lasting only 15 or 20 seconds, for instance, might make it more irritating to the listener than another that ran a minute.

Both the independents and the network stations will devote major attention to the increasing competition for business. As one broadcaster put it, "the gravy train in radio has stopped running, and we're in the bread and butter era."

The industry as a whole has experienced a levelling off of business and many individual stations have had declines. This is attributed largely to business conditions in general and to the doubling of the number of stations on the air since the war. Television is a factor to be reckoned with eventually, most broadcasters say it has had little effect on the overall picture yet.

COFFEE'S BEGINNING

Coffee is first known to have been cultivated in Arabia about 575 A.D.

Women's Activities

BRIDGE STREET W.M.S.

The regular meeting of the Bridge Street W.M.S. held in the ladies' parlor on Friday afternoon was well attended. The president, Mrs. W. H. Finkle, was in the chair.

Mrs. Finkle announced the Easter Thank-offering meeting was to be held as the regular church service on Sunday evening, April 10, with the ladies in charge of the service. The speaker, as he is Mrs. Gordon Agnew, recently returned missionary from China. A social hour is to be held in the Sunday school rooms after the service.

The reports of the secretaries and treasurer were read.

Mrs. R. D. P. Davidson, reporting on Christian Stewardship, gave a comparative report of the last two years and stressed the need for systematic giving if the allocation is to be met. She urged all who could to attend the Presbyterial being held in Trenton.

Mrs. John Moore opened the devotional period with prayer, drawing the attention of the ladies to the importance of prayer in their lives.

Mrs. J. Buchanan gave a short paper on "The World's Council of Churches".

Mrs. G. Wishart read the passage of Mark, concerning events following the Crucifixion. The singing of part of "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross" closed this part of the meeting.

A short but very fine playlet was given by Mesdames Hyde, Maguire and Phillips, outlining the third chapter of "West of the Gorges", the study book for this year.

A beautiful solo "The Song the Angels Sing", rendered by Mrs. Ralph Warren, was enjoyed by all.

Mrs. R. G. Balth gave a short talk on medical missionary work. Mrs. Roy Rickard read some interesting facts on phases of missionary work in West China. Mrs. C. Howie showed how medical missionary work brings spiritual values.

Mrs. Amos Sr., closed the meeting with prayer.

The ladies were invited to remain for a social half hour.

MELROSE

Melrose—An enjoyable time was had at the township hall on Friday evening when the Junior Farmers' Association entertained with euchre and dance.

The Melrose W.I. held their meeting and quilting in the hall with Mrs. Arthur English as hostess on Thursday March 31. The next meeting will be the W.I. short course or "Oven Meals" on April 20th and 26th at the home of Mrs. Jno. Blatherwick. These will be afternoon meetings from 1 to 4 and every lady in the community will be made welcome.

Mr. and Mrs. Newton Demille and baby Bonnie had dinner on Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Cross of Roslin.

Mr. and Mrs Roy Badgley and Mr and Mrs Grant McLaren spent Friday evening with Mr and Mrs Leslie McLaren.

Rev. Mr. Lougheed spent the Sunday dinner hour with Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Sexsmith.

Mr. Ken McMechan and Miss Lois Kimmett spent Sunday evening with Mr. and Mrs. Newton Demille.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Sexsmith, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. English and Mrs. Waterson spent Thursday evening with Mr. and Mrs. John Milligan.

Mrs. Waterson and son Buzz, left on Saturday for Scotland, travelling by train to Montreal then by plane to their home in Scotland. They have spent a month with the farmer's sister, Mrs. Jno. English.

Mrs. Thos. Blatherwick and Miss Marion Blatherwick have returned home after spending some time at the home of Mr. Wm. Blatherwick, Belleville.

Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Blatherwick spent a recent weekend with friends in Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. Grant McLaren and Jean and Mrs. Alex McGreen spent Sunday in Foxboro with Mr. and Mrs. Percy Kilpatrick.

90th Birthday Celebrated by H. Jeffrey

A rather unique event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Jeffrey of the 4th concession of Sidney recently when a large number of relatives and friends gathered to help Mr. Jeffrey celebrate his 90th birthday.

Mr. Jeffrey is still in fairly good health for a man of his great age and is a man who is very much respected in this community in which he has passed most of his life and himself and Mrs. Jeffrey have always been ready to help in any good work, both for the church and the community, financially and otherwise.

Mr. Jeffrey was one of the original men who canvassed this district to get the Rural Mail inaugurated years ago, and also the farm hydro.

The relatives present were Mr. Frank Jeffrey (son), Mrs. Frank Jeffrey, Mrs. Wm. Harry (Flossie, daughter), Mr. Wm. Harry.

Grandchildren present: Douglas Harry, Frank Harry, Gerald Harry, Geraldine Harry, Evelyn Harry, James Harry.

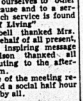
The two sons of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Jeffrey (Roy and Donald) were unable to be present as they are attending the O.A.C. at Guelph.

Also present were Mr. and Mrs. Jordan of Thurlow and Mr. Clarence Jeffrey of West Huntingdon.

The evening was spent with the playing of various games, after which refreshments were served and everybody wishing Mr. H. Jeffrey many happy returns.

Aussie Woman Owns 100-Monkey Circus

Sydney, Australia, (CP)—Only woman money-trainer in Australia, Mrs. Blanche Cell has her own monkey circus. She keeps about 100 monkeys at Aquaflora Park, Sans Souci, 20 miles from here.



Before she married about 30 years ago, Mrs. Cells was trapeze artist in a travelling circus. A young man who had a monkey act in the show told her that no woman could train monkeys successfully. So Mrs. Cells set out to disprove his theory. She has kept monkeys ever since, and regards them both as pets and as a commercial enterprise.

Her two sons go overseas on buying trips for the valuable Rhesus monkeys, for which Mrs. Cells pays about £70 ($210) each.

Mrs. Cells says that her monkeys are clean and gentle. She trains them entirely by kindness, rewarding them with sweets and cakes when they "do their act" well.

"A female monkey, Minnie, wears a smart blue dress and hat, and does a balancing act. Ajay, another of the monkey family, fires a toy gun, or snarls and bares his teeth at a word from his trainer.

Mrs. Cells says that each of her monkeys has a definite personality and enjoys the performance as much as she does.

Aikens, White's, Centenary WMS Are Guests

On Tuesday afternoon the W.M.S. of Aikens', Centenary and White's Church, were guests of Hollister Street W.M.S. at their "Easter Thank-offering" meeting.

The devotional, the theme of which was "A new advance in Christian Stewardship" was conducted by Mrs. Wilson, president, assisted by Mrs. Walters, Mrs. Reid, Mrs. Richmond and Mrs. Beal.

The request solo "I Will Not Be Afraid", was rendered by Mrs. Jeffries.

Each of the visiting societies contributed a number to the program as follows:

White's Church, a reading by Mrs. Young entitled, "Christ on the Cross of Calvary".

Aikens' Church, a piano duet by Mesdames Grills and Hamilton.

Centenary Church, a vocal solo entitled "Alone" by Mrs. Laurenson.

Guest Speaker

At this time Mrs. Kilbank introduced the guest speaker, Mrs. Haggerty of Cherry Valley, who is a past president of the Bay of Quinte branch of the W.M.S.

"The Glory of Living"

Mrs. Haggerty chose as her subject, "The Glory of Living". She said, "the Spring time and this Easter time, with the buds on the trees, the grass shooting from the brown earth is a vivid illustration...of the resurrection. What this cringing world needs is a peace giving faith that combines the substance of the old Biblical times with the light of the new scientific age. Independence with others is not a mere religious idealism but the most encompassing fact of human reality and we cannot afford to forget that the superb charter of kindliness includes everyone".

Mrs. Haggerty here, quoted from Rabbi Joshua Lieberman's book "Peace of Mind"—"Too few of us realize that what the law of gravity is to the sun and the stars, the law of love is to men and women".

In closing Mrs. Haggerty urged that hidden resources be tapped, the giving of ourselves to other people, to a cause and to a service, for in such service is found "The Glory of Living".

Mrs. Campbell thanked Mrs. Haggerty on behalf of all present, for her most inspiring message and Mrs. Wilson thanked all those contributing to the afternoon's program.

At the close of the meeting refreshments and a social half hour were enjoyed by all.

Cupid is Busy At Big Ontario Hydro Project

Rapides Des Joachims, Que. (AP)—Ask Helen Collins how she likes helping turn out 2,000 meals a day and she'll probably tell you, "It's fun."

The North Bay, Ont., girl is one of a small group of women working in the cafeteria, offices and hospital on the site of the big power development near this upper Ottawa valley town.

"It's a lot of hard work, but one thing you never get bored," said Helen, who works in the cafeteria at "camp one" of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission's giant Des Joachims project.

Another North Bay girl, Gisele Lauzon, also works in the big cafeteria which serves three meals a day to the 900 men at the camp, one of three now in operation at the development.

"I like the work," she said during a brief interval. "There also are lots of dances to attend during hours off."

Other women employed at the project include Merval Lawrence of Montreal, who is in charge of the girls in the comptometer section of the construction offices, and Mrs. Susan Agnew of River Hebert, N.S., who is housekeeper in the girls' residence at camp one.

Attracts Girls

Good food and good pay are the chief reasons why so many girls have come looking for jobs on the project, said Anne Boylan, former Bridgewater, N.S., schoolteacher, who is in charge of the girls' residence.

With the men outnumbering the women by approximately 25 to one, the development also holds good matrimonial prospects.

"Diamonds have been flying around here like snowflakes," laughed Miss Boylan. However, she said the number of marriages had fallen off a little from what it had been when the camp opened two years ago.

She paid tribute to the "wonderful spirit of companionship" existing among the girls.

At the time of the visit to this Des Joachims project, one of the cafeteria waitresses, Susan Pretty of Toronto, was in hospital with a broken leg.

"Her birthday is this week and some of the girls are taking her a birthday cake," said Miss Boylan.

The 30-bed hospital is in charge of Dr. D. E. Grant, a graduate of the University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon. Influenza rather than accidents has been keeping the hospital staff busy lately.

"We have been filled right up to the top with 'flu cases," said Maxine Ward of London, Ont., Miss Ward and Mary Shea of Pembroke, Ont., make up the hospital's nursing staff.

WE'LL MEET AGAIN

By Margaret Gorman Nichols

Chris Mallory, reading, heard some one shout, "Mac! Mac! Where are you?" She always alert for the unusual, dashed by the door, with Sandy at his heels. In the hall he came face to face with Gay while Sandy and Macduff proceeded to get acquainted. With none of the hostility that marked the first meeting of their master and mistress.

Gay cried, relieved, "Oh, Mac, why did you run away?"

Chris grinned, looking down on her red curls. This was too much! Gay Van Avery — here! In this house! In the next apartment!

She stopped stoll and looked at him gravely.

"Oh, it's you," said Gay. "Go ahead. Run back to your editor and tell him where I'm living. You directed your anger to the wrong person, Mr. Mallory. I have nothing. I'm your neighbor now."

"I'm terribly sorry," said Chris. "I didn't know." He met those clear blue eyes of hers and smiled that charming boyish smile of his that had melted more than one stubborn heart. "I'll compromise with you, I won't tell the boss where you're living if you'll give me a date tomorrow night."

"You promise?" asked Gay, standing slim and straight beside him, the hall light bringing out all the gold in her hair.

"I promise," said Chris.

He was handsome, she thought, in a careless nonchalant way. He had none of Alan's elegance. Chris Mallory wore an old sleeveless sweater and there was an aroma of tobacco about him. But his hands were finer and stronger than Alan's and his eyes had a searching warmth in them. Oh, this was fantastic to be standing in a murky little hall telling a reporter she'd go out with him tomorrow night! Miss Gay Van Avery, the society girl . . .

She said, "Good night," picked up the errant Macduff, and vanished into her apartment.

Chris Mallory went back to his book but he did not read. On every page was the haunting memory of winger dark brows, a mouth that was red and sweet, and a cap of red curls.

"To whom were you talking?" Diana asked as Gay returned.

Gay smiled and told her:

"But you can't go out with him," Diana said in amazement. "You can't! A reporter!"

"Who are we to scoff at a reporter, Mother?"

Gay thought of Chris that night as she lay awake under the spell of a milky fog that crowded her window. But most 'of all she thought of Alan, the hurt of Alan, and the months before this catastrophe when they had been happy together. "I was flung to earth so brutally," she thought. "I could like this! You should be putting on the loveliest dress in the world and going out with the people you were raised with. I don't know how I'm going to bear it, Gy, I think and think of everything you have lost. I'm going to get a job."

"What could you do, Mother?" Diana smiled and shrugged. "Perhaps I could learn to cook."

Gay wore a dark blue suit, a small blue hat, and the twin fox furs her father had given her for Christmas.

"I'm afraid you look too elegant, darling," said Diana. "Next year we'll have to make over our clothes."

At nine Chris Mallory knocked. Gay admitted him and introduced him to her mother. Macduff, not to be ignored, put himself deliberately in Chris' way to receive one of his rough caresses.

On the stairs Gay asked, "Where are you taking me?"

"To a party of some friends of mine."

"Don't you think I'll be a little out of place?"

"Undoubtedly," said Chris Mallory, flashing a smile, "but if they can stand it, I can."

"You like to be insulting, don't you?" she asked, running from the steps to a cab. "It gives you a perfect opportunity to show me off. I hope you enjoy the experience because you'll never get the opportunity again. Tonight is a compromise."

"Tonight," he said, sitting apart from her and crossing his long legs, "tonight I'm going to meet the smallest crowd you ever met. They are not your kind. They work hard and play hard. They've got their finger on the pulse of life."

Gay's voice was cool. "I paid a big price for your silence, Mr. Mallory."

She wondered why they were quarreling. Chris knew he had drawn her into a quarrel because all day he had been telling himself he would not be a fool over her. He'd take her off her high horse, he thought; pierce her stubborn pride. Chris Mallory had never been a fool over any girl.

When the cab stopped before a brownstone house, she said, summoning her courage, "I'll try to take the best of it and not disgrace you with my bad manners. And since the evening has been forced on me, let's not quarrel any more."

That said Chris, "suits me fine."

And for a moment they smiled at each other.

The studio room where he took her was a mountain of sandwiches ready to topple over any minute. Gay was aghast at the informality. Why — the girls were sweaters and skirts! At no time in her life, except for sports, had she worn a sweater and skirt.

"I want you to meet Penelope Anders, your hostess, called Penny," said Chris of a small girl in a black skirt and red sweater.

"Hello!" said Penny cheerfully. She had short black hair with a fringe of bangs, wide black eyes, and a dark red mouth. "Hello, Chris. Would you like to powder your nose, Miss Van Avery? See you later, Chris. Help yourself to sandwiches. You're always hungry."

In the small bedroom Gay took off her coat and patted her curls in place. This was another world, she thought, conscious that Penny was regarding her gravely. She had had stepped into another world and while she was keeping a promise to Chris Mallory tonight and mingling with these odd friendly people, somewhere in some lovely cool place Lucia and Alan, united again, were probably together. Stop thinking of them! Stop thinking of Alan!

Penny had a lovely voice. She said, "I hope you won't be too bored. We all know one another so well. This is really Mac's party. He's the aviator, Miss Bolton."

Penny loved Mac, Gay guessed. She asked, "What do you do, Miss Anders? Work, I mean."

"Call me Penny. I draw fashions for Marchand's. Let's join the others."

It was a delightful evening. The people were real. They did things. Penny was an artist. Mac was an aviator. Paul Black wrote novels, and Chris was a reporter. There was a dancer in musical comedy and a boy who did radio dramatics. They didn't, thought Gay, talk about somebody's latest divorce, or the new color of Sandra's hair, or the chorus girl that Fred Benton was seeing secretly. They had no small talk. They talked of what they were going to do with their lives!

More than once she met Chris' amused dark eyes in a look of understanding. It was a look that said, "I'm defeated. I admit it. Your friends are charming. They put my kind of friends to shame."

When the party broke up, Penny said, "Come to see us, Gay, drop in any time for tea or a cocktail. I work at the store mornings. In the afternoon I free lance."

"I'd like to," said Gay. Would she make a friend of this gentle, talented girl?

In the hall near the door of her apartment, she lifted her face to Chris.

"Why don't you," he suggested, "go to Marchand's and look for a job? Don't pretend you don't need one. Don't look shocked. They'd probably give you a job as a model."

"A clothes model? Oh, I could not!"

"It's the only thing you're fitted for."

He stood quite close to her. Why had this girl come into his life to complicate it and to show him there would never be anyone else for him except her?

He took her shoulders and drew her close to him. His mouth was stern. "You said I'd better make the most of tonight with you because there wouldn't be another. So — I'm taking something else I won't get again."

Gay felt lifted in his arms. She felt his arms go around her, felt his warm kiss on her lips. Then he was gone and for the second time she heard the vicious slamming of the door after him.

Trembling, with angry trembling. With angry tears suffusing her eyes, she thought, "I don't fall in love with me, Chris. Don't! Because I can never love anyone except Alan!"

Wearing the same blue suit with the fox furs over her shoulders, Gay walked by Marchand's three times the next morning before she had the courage to go in. As ugly memory flashed across her mind. Last summer Patti had bought a dress there, supposedly the only dress of its kind in New York, and that night at a supper club had seen the same dress duplicated in a cheaper material. Gay remembered how shocked she had been when Patti, in a rage, had flung the gown in Marchand's face.

When she went into the shop, a saleswoman, recognizing her, said with professional pleasantness, — "Good morning, Miss Van Avery. Is there something I can show you?"

"No. I'd like to see Miss Anders."

No face had ever looked so good as Penny's bright face when she came out, wearing a pongee smock. She drew Gay aside.

"Chris called me this morning and I paved the way for you a bit," said Penny, putting her arm through Gay's and walking in the direction of the modernistic office of the famous Marchand. "Nothing to be afraid of, Gay. Penny added. "I'll never forget the day I landed in New York fresh from a Chicago art school with only twenty-five dollars between me and starvation. So I'm glad I took the chance. I'd have never met Mac if I hadn't."

Marchand, bald, dapper, with shrewd dark eyes, looked over his desk. Since the day when the supercilious Patti had flung a gown in his face, Marchand had carried a chip on his narrow shoulders.

Gay's throat ached. I can't do it, she thought. I can't humble myself before this horrible, smirking little man!

"So you are looking for a position," said Marchand. "Can you model?"

"I think I could be a model," Gay said tightly. "I've done that sort of thing at charity functions."

"But this is not a charity function. This is business, and you've got to be good."

Penny's face was solemn. Why did he torture her so? Couldn't he see that she was suffering this humiliation?

"Wait away," he said, "and let me look at you." And when she had stiffly walked a little distance, he said, "Relax, Miss Van Avery." He gave a dry laugh. "Too bad that such true aristocracy has to be commercialized."

Gay's face was crimson. "Do I get the job or don't I?"

"No need to get angry. Being a professional model is a trying business. Models are supposed to have neither brains nor feelings." He squinted at her flaming face. "I'll give you twenty - five dollars a week to begin on commissions when you go out with out of town buyers. That's part of the business. Buyers have to be entertained."

"I can't support my mother on twenty-five dollars a week."

"Only modestly, of course. But you're untrained." He shrugged. "Take it or leave it. I can get plenty of models, and they'll be trained."

"I'll do my best. I have no choice."

DIVES UNDER ICE TO REPAIR MAINS BROKEN IN FLOOD

Red River Diver Finds Work 22 Feet Down Mucky, Hazardous

Winnipeg (CP) — A young diver, Man., diver has been working 22 feet under the ice of the Red River repairing water mains damaged in last spring's floods.

Here is his advice to anyone who may have ambitions for the job:

"Don't do it!"

Here are diver Harold Little's reasons: It's cold (35 degrees in the water); uncomfortable (his suit has a slight leak) and hazardous (there's a danger his air line take valves may freeze).

Mr. Little is a diver for the federal government. He has spent some time groping around the bed of the river, repairing breaks in mains.

Holes have been cut in the 10-inch ice surface to allow him to get down to his work.

Pump Aid by Hand

Diving under the ice, in the manner of Sir Hubert Wilkins, famed Arctic submarine explorer, is by no means dangerous. But the inherent hazards increase when the river is on the surface.

Below the surface, with the temperature of the surrounding water 35 degrees, the diver's air-supply hoses freeze. But on the surface the air valves on his helmet have to be heated to prevent them from freezing.

As a further precaution, air is pumped to Mr. Little by hand. Divers do not use electric air pumps because of the possibility of a power breakdown.

Being under water for two hours repairing the three 13-inch pipes on the river bed is no record for Mr. Little. He once stayed down five hours.

But then he is a chip off the old block. His father used to be a diver. He worked in and knew his way around Winnipeg's river beds pretty well. Mr. Little senior spent 20 years as a diver. Now his son has taken on the work.

The son termed the river bed "six feet of indescribable muck." Officials of the Greater Winnipeg Sanitary District say the repairs are necessary in part because of last year's great flood pressure on the pipes.

A relic of the floods has been found on the river bed — a tree 14 inches thick embedded in the pipes by the pressure of the flood waters.

Fishermen's Church Will be Demolished

Hastings, England — (CP) — For nearly a century fishermen have stood among the nets, lobster pots and fishing gear decorating the Church of St. Nicholas, giving thanks for the sea's bounty.

Soon they may have to find another place of worship, for the old church is scheduled for demolition under a town planning scheme drawn up by Hastings Corporation.

The old church was closed during the war. Before then fishermen's services every Sunday morning and, within sound of the grey waves crashing on the pebbled beach, sang old hymns associated with the sea.

The town council of All Saints', the mother church, had hoped that St. Nicholas could be reopened this year, but the Hastings Corporation decided otherwise.

Rev. L. Hook, rector of All Saints, said the War Office had paid only £15 ($60) compensation and it would take at least £150 to make the church fit for use again.

British Explorer Seeks Noah's Ark

London — (CP) — An expedition led by 54-year-old Ageron Sykes, explorer and scientist, will leave London this summer in search of Noah's Ark.

For Sykes finding the Ark "is the dream of a lifetime."

"I'm convinced that traces of it still exist," he said. "Apart from the Old Testament story, tales have persisted throughout the ages of a monster boat, stranded on Mount Ararat in Armenia. The last report was received only last January.

Sykes said the expedition, costing between £3,000 ($12,000) and £ 5,000, would be of a "purely literary and scientific character." He will be accompanied by his wife — also an explorer and archaeologist, a geologist and a cameraman.

"I do not believe that the Ark was stranded right at the top of Mount Ararat," he added. "The Bible says that Noah looked out and saw the tops of the mountains.

"Ararat is really two mountains, and my theory is that the Ark was lifted up and deposited in the groove between the two, probably about 12,000 feet up."

Sykes' answer to scoffers is that a wood preserved with bitumen is almost everlasting — "and the Ark was pitched within and without."

The expedition will travel overland by car from Istanbul to Trebizond where a base unit will be set up as close to Mount Ararat as possible.

While in Persia, where he was once an embassy attache, Sykes said he made several attempts to reach Ararat but was prevented by the presence of troops.

Newfoundland Music Theme of Film Song

Ottawa — (CP) — Howard Cable, young Canadian composer and arranger, has recently completed a unique musical-ing score for the motion picture "Inside Newfoundland" produced by the National Film Board to make that country's union with Canada.

A student of Newfoundland folk music, Cable made a thorough study of it two years ago and has written a rhapsody based on his research. His purpose in writing the film score was not only to lend proper atmosphere to the picture but also to preserve in music a panorama of the country's struggles, legends and achievements.

Some Newfoundland folk songs have their prototypes in the British Isles such as two included in Cable's arrangement. "It's de Boys Dat Builds de Boats" and "Lots O' Fish in a Bonavist' Harbor." They are examples of a humorous, toe - dancing Newfoundlanders from Canada and the United States.

Vote-Attracting Slogans Debated By Conservatives

London (CP)— Conservatives on the issue for a pithy phrase to help them win the 1950 general election now wrestled in talk about "a property owning democracy" does them much good.

Conservatives have liked the phrase and used it up and down the land, but "property owning democracy" they envisage would encourage people to consider every way in the world, enjoy profits and the ownership of homes and other property.

Conservative speakers set forth that socialism does not encourage such enterprise but would be content to have all Britons on the same dreary level, dependent on the state, their ambition surrendered to social security.

"Property-owning democracy," party strategists thought, hit aptly the Conservative ideal well. Now they are faced with the criticism that the ordinary man in the street doesn't know what it means.

Two groups of Conservatives are critical:

One group is represented by T. G. Mitchell of London who wrote to The Times of London that many think the party trots behind the Socialists instead of moving in the opposite direction. His suggestion for a slogan was: "Every man a capitalist."

Robert Boothby Replies

This did not please Robert Boothby, Conservative member of parliament for Aberdeenshire East, and spokesman for another party element. Boothby wrote in reply:

"Property-owning democracy," ... has done good service for the Conservative party during the past 25 years, but, like patriotism it is not enough. With all due respect to Mr. Minshall I cannot feel that the slogan 'Every man a capitalist—only not quite so big a capitalist as Silzard, Carnegie, Krupp or Schwab' is likely to sweep the British electorate off its feet next year."

Boothby said, as his contribution to a rising debate over what tactics the Conservatives should follow, that the "Tory party will not recapture the confidence of the public until it is in a position to put forward a precise policy, in simple terms, based not on dogma but on certainly clearly defined principles.

Boothby said there was confusion of thought in the party, illustrated by "nonsense sometimes talked about 'purchase and long-term contracts.'" It was "indiscreet" to see Conservatives speaking in favor of increased Commonwealth trade and against bulk purchases which Dominion governments favored.

Into the lists then jumped Richard Law, former Conservative minister, and son of former Prime Minister Bonar Law, a Canadian.

Law said it probably would be a good thing for the United Kingdom if fewer impediments were put in the way of free, multilateral trade. It should, not be assumed that the old ways of trade on which Britain prospered were bad in present times, and multilateralism, backed by the United States and the Commonwealth, probably would succeed better than the restricted bilateral agreements entered into by the Labor government.

Organize to Aid Montreal Orphans

Montreal — (CP) — A unique organization came into being in Montreal recently when the men who undertake to improve the lot of the city's orphans banded together to form the Montreal Foster Fathers' Association.

The main purpose of the group is to provide an opportunity for the foster fathers to meet at regular intervals and hold group discussions concerning the problems presented by their wards.

Everyone, the men reasoned in forming the society, knows about the role foster mothers play in the rearing of homeless children, but few, if any, ever consider the part played by a foster father.

And so, 50 of these "neglected" fathers decided to join together to act as representatives of the 891 foster fathers in this area who look after some 1,000 homeless youngsters.

Mrs. Muriel McHae, executive-director of the Protestant Foster Home where the initial meeting of the association was held, told the assembled male parents that their job was an important one.

A friendly name life, she claimed, was essential to the proper development of a child. It prepared the boy or girl to take a proper place in the community later on and become a good citizen.

Mrs. McHae stated that the need for foster parents had been increased tremendously with the forward steps made in child psychology during the last few years.

At one time, she said, children without homes were placed together in a large institution, but now the plan is to provide them with a good home.

Indicative and smiling, living proof — of how well this system works is J. Clarke, A genial, slight man with white hair, he has been father-by-proxy to 20 children during the past quarter-century.

Charitable Gifts Act Passes Thru Committee Swiftly

Bill Has Been Approved Including Amendments

Toronto, April 7 (CP) — The Ontario legislature passed government's charities bill through the committee stage today in less than 1 1-2 hours. The second reading debate which ended Wednesday took 27 hours.

The bill provided that charitable foundations such as the Atkinson Foundation, owners of the Toronto Star and the Star Weekly, may not hold more than 10 per cent in any business.

The committee today approved the bill as reprinted, including amendments described during second reading by Provincial Treasurer Frost. Further minor amendments were passed clarifying particular sections of the bill.

William Dennison (CCF-Toronto East) said it would be well if the bill would force some religious organizations to run businesses to obtain funds.

The bill exempts religious organizations from its terms. Mr. Dennison said, however, that religious organizations which at present are receiving funds from charitable foundations which operate businesses would be able to run the businesses themselves and guarantee a source of revenue.

Mr. Jolliffe (C.C.F.-York East) said terms of the bill in- finded foundations operated for "public" as well as religious, charitable and educational purposes.

He suggested this would hamper operation of private organizations which did valuable work in the public service during the recent war.

Leslie Wismer (C.C.F.-Toronto Riverdale) suggested research foundations such as the Ontario Research Foundation should be exempted from the bill's terms.

Mr. Blackwell said a "charitable research foundation" should not be concerned in "the ordinary commercial operation of a business."

C.C.F. leader E. B. Jolliffe said the bill provided foundations must comply with its terms within seven years "or within such extended period as may be determined by the provincial secretary."

Mr. Jolliffe said the court's authority in this respect would be "very limited."

Attitude of Court

The court would take the attitude "this is not the right court to pass on matters of public policy in this regard."

The only occasion on which the court was likely to extend the period would be to allow the public trustee to arrange a better sale.

C. C. Calder (Lib.-London) suggested this power of extending time might be useful in the public trustee and not the court. The public trustee who is charged with carrying of foundation accounts would be more closely in touch with the circumstances.

Mr. Blackwell said the public trustee was a "very civil servant and must be relieved of "any question for political considerations."

Mr. Jolliffe asked if the Act necessarily left the whole matter at his discretion might without from the charities a proportion of the foundation's profits to the advance of depreciation or expansion.

Mr. Blackwell asked that consideration of this section of the bill be postponed.

Mr. Jolliffe suggested that any person appointed by the treasurer to investigate charitable foundations as provided by the bill be a judge "with the stature of a Royal Commissioner."

On the suggestion of J.G. Brown (Lib.-Waterloo North) the bill was well amended the bill to provide that profits be determined each fiscal year rather than by December 31 and that the trustees may make allowance for depreciation and depreciation before turning over profits to the charities.

Suggestions Not Accepted ..

Mr. Jolliffe suggested the bill might be allowed to become law when proclaimed rather than when given royal assent.

"At least you will have one experience with it," he said, "that looks like the wrath to come."

H. G. Price (C.C.F.-Grant) said "Yes. You could file it away and forget about it."

The bill was passed through committee stage.

Premier Frost introduced a bill "an Act respecting Leslie E. Wismer" (C.C.F.-Toronto Riverdale). It provides that Mr. Wismer shall be allowed to remain a member of the assembly despite the fact he has been appointed by the Labor Minister to a Conciliation Board. Members may be paid no remuneration for his appointment except his actual expenses.

The House also passed through committee stage a bill allowing Cottam Farmers, Ltd., of Essex County to increase their common stock dividends and at the same time pay a higher rate of interest on paid-up capital than the eight per cent now permitted under the Act.

The bill was amended to provide that the company will not be permitted to describe itself as a co-operative. As generally known, the Cottam farmers company "will not be required" to call itself a co-operative.

GREEKS APPEAL FOR PROTECTION AGAINST ATTACK

Allege at Least 3,000 Reds Entered Greece

Athens, April 7 (Reuters)—The Greek government today appealed to the United Nations special committee on the Balkans for "protection against unprovoked attack" from Albania and Bulgaria.

In forwarding the request, the Greeks gave details supporting their charges of Albanian participation in the Communist guerrilla attack in the Grammos area of northwestern Greece, and of Bulgarian support for new bands in eastern Macedonia.

The note conveying the appeal said Greece's neighbors had not respected Gen. N. Assembly's recommendations of last November calling on Greece and her neighbors to establish friendly relations and renew earlier frontier agreements.

Alleging Albanian aid to the guerrillas attacking in the Grammos area, the note said at least 3,000 reformed Communists entered Greece through passes along the Albanian border.

Abducted Greek partisans had been compelled to enlist with the guerrillas, the note stated, and Albanian officers had aided and bolstered the Bulgarian border for Communist guerrilla action in eastern Macedonia.

Freighter to Sail For Britain After B.C. Strike

Victoria, B. C. — April 7 — (CP) — With a crew drawn from members of the Seafarers' International Union (A.F.L.) aboard, the freighter Seaboard Queen is to stay prepared to sail on schedule for British after being strikebound earlier because of picketing called by the Canadian Seamen's Union (C.C.L.).

S.U.U. men were to replace the striking crew after Justice Sidney conflicting reports whether all the 30 S.I.U. men have gone aboard.

Nolan Root, an official of the S.I.U., said 11 of the S.I.U. members had transferred to his union but the refusal was made working conditions similar to those which had turned down.

Replacements for the striking crew were said to be on the dock bus. The strikers, most of whom carried sticks, moved to within a few feet. But none touched the bus, and none of the S.I.U. crew came off.

The strikers left the docks on orders of their leaders. Later the strikers formed a picket line above the dock.

TWO MEN CAPTURED

Toronto, April 7 (CP)—Capt. Constable Ernest Bullard early night two young soldiers will be brought back to Toronto to face a charge of car theft.

Sam Hindmarsh, 20, of Winnipeg, and Ronald Thompson, 21, of Regina, who told police they were on their way to Prince Rupert, B.C. Borden, are accused of stealing a truck from a Toronto parking lot.

Police at Huntsville said they were informed of the theft and spotted the truck.

Banker Paid Debts With Looted Cash And Threw Bonds Into N.Y. Harbor

New York, April 7 (AP)—Before a fore bank official Richard Crowe fled to Florida he paid $100 debts and dumped $690,000 in bonds into New York harbor, a federal official said Wednesday night.

Crowe, 39, former assistant treasurer here, Irving Saypol, chief assistant United States attorney, gave detectives $1,000 in cash—from the vault of the branch bank where he was assistant manager.

Crowe, with only some small change in his pocket, was returned here by plane Wednesday from Florida, 10 days after he disappeared.

Saypol said the 41-year-old Crowe had packed his bag with "as much currency as he could carry"—$193,660

SURVEY REPORTS IMPROVED HEALTH IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Scientific Investigators See Fewer Signs of Malnutrition

By JACK TRACY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Montreal (CP)—Indications of improvement in certain indices of the malnutrition that was impairing Newfoundlanders' strength four years ago have been reported by a group of scientific investigators.

The medical men, who said after a 1944 survey in Newfoundland that widespread malnutrition was causing physical and mental lethargy, a small muscular strength, skin and eye troubles, low resistance to diseases and continued poor health with a high death rate, published the report of their 1944 study in the April edition of the Canadian Medical Association Journal.

After clinical examination and chemical analysis of body fluids of people in low-income groups in St. John's and six south-shore fishing villages last year, the doctors reported that "most of the characteristic signs of malnutrition were less conspicuous in the samples of the population studied in 1948 than they had been in 1944."

"We pointed out that this change had been accompanied by improvement in certain indices of public health," the report said. "Reference was made to the sharp reduction in the reported infant mortality rate, but the same could have been affirmed for the reported rate of stillbirths, the reported death rate from tuberculosis and the reported crude mortality rate."

The medical men, who found in 1944 that Newfoundlanders were getting enough but the wrong kind, said several factors might have contributed to the change for the better.

They mentioned Newfoundland's greater wealth, increases in quantity and variety of foods imported in recent years and heavier emphasis on education in nutrition.

Programs Beneficial

Physicians who took part in both surveys were Doctors N. Jolliffe, director of New York City's bureau of nutrition, O. H. Lowry, professor of pharmacology at Washington University in St. Louis, and E. E. Moore, director of Canada's Indian and Eskimo health services, and W. H. Sebrell, medical director of the U.S. Public Health Service, and F. F. Tisdall, associate professor of pediatrics at University of Toronto. R. M. Wilder, professor of medicine at the Mayo Foundation in Rochester, Minn., and P. C. Zamecnik, associated in medicine at Harvard University.

Assisting were M. R. Aykroyd, director of the Food and Agriculture Organization's nutrition division for the United Nations and a former house surgeon in the St. John's General Hospital, and R. E. Shank, Washington University professor of preventive medicine, joined the 1948 survey. Four of the previous investigators did not participate last year.

August, the month of the 1944 survey, was again chosen for last year's check-up. St. John's and the south-coast villages of St. Joseph's, Terrenceville, Bay L'Argent, and Harbour Mille, were again used for the 1948 study but Bonavista, on the east coast, was not re-visited.

The physicians checked up on 988 persons, the same number as before and re-examined 227 subjects of 1944 survey. None of the subjects included representatives of the "relatively small proportion in the upper economic groups."

As a result of the re-survey the doctors "recommended strengthening and extension of the present educational program in nutrition and distribution of cod-liver oil and milk powders in the schools.

A recent trend to reduce the number of milch cows in shore settlements was noted. The doctors suggested a careful study of the consequences on the availability of milk for children should the depopulation continue the people's ability to buy processed milk.

They also suggested steps to maintain consumption of milk and citrus juices and to make these and other foods of high nutritive value available at low prices.

Protective Foods

The doctors said the government should consider the control of protective foods can be kept down so that low-income consumers can purchase enough of them.

The group noted that Newfoundland's improving economic status, only just apparent in 1944, was obvious in 1948.

Many fishermen and other people of the outports had money to spend freely for the first time in their lives. Store shelves, empty before, now were filled with goods. Several stores had increased in size. The people too were better dressed and homes looked better tended.

Where the 1944 report had mentioned that the money value of the catch averaged only $10 a fisherman in 1935, the investigators were told in 1948 that the occasional fisherman earned as much as $2,000 annually.

"It is scarcely to be questioned," the report said, "that the improved economic status of the population has influenced food supplies and diet."

Because the greater part of Newfoundland's food supply is imported, and since the country's revenue depended largely on import duties until federal union, records of the quantities of foods that have been imported were available.

It was difficult, however, to correlate the picture of the food supply precisely with changes in the people.

Better Food Supplies

The food "pipeline" was relatively empty in 1944 while in 1948 store shelves were relatively well-filled. Also military personnel, in the country between the two surveys, had consumed food included in the import returns.

There was, however, an unquestioned increase in imports of foodstuffs per capita. Supplies had risen by 80 per cent between 1944 and 1948.

Assuming that all the evaporated milk was consumed by civilians, that would have meant the per-head consumption would have increased from 1.9 to 3.5 ounces a day with a proportionate increase in the intake of vitamin A. B1 and G, and calcium.

Imports of fruit, fresh and canned, and of short added fruit juices all showed increases

Rattlers Not Good Company

In my nude, rude boyhood, in the still heat of Interior summer days, I used to sit with my pals at the old swimming hole and torment a rattlesnake by throwing sand in his face. We learned a few things about rattlers and they do not conform to the popular idea of the species, C. B. Bailey writes in The Vancouver Province.

Contrary to belief, a rattlesnake is not vindictive. He'll endeavor to get out of your way.

Sudden Approach

The danger lies when you approach him suddenly. He may be sleeping, peacefully, near a log and you step over the log. He'll give you the warning "rattle," and be coiled with his poisonous fangs into your leg before you can do much about it.

The month of August is the most dangerous time. The rattler is blind, then, and does not rattle, before he strikes.

The hotter the day, the faster he moves. In early summer, when the weather is cool and moist, he is inclined to be sluggish. Which is a good thing for Some University of British Columbia students, who worked with us as Tranquille.

We bidded them about rattlers to keep them on the alert. But to no avail.

In The Bag

One rainy day, my friend, Jimmy Brown and I were on the trail when we met two of these lads. One had a gunny sack over his shoulder. I said, jocularly: "Ill what have you got in the sack? Rattlesnakes?"

He was smiling and there was a gleam in his eyes, as he answered. "Sure, weren't we lucky? We caught five of them, alive."

My eyes darted to the sack and I saw it move.

In the same instant, Jimmy and I shouted: "Drop it, you fool!"

And the startled lad did just that.

They had wanted snakes alive, to send to U.B.C., for study. If it had happened to be a hot day, I'd be telling a different story. But the U.B.C. got its snakes.

Indian Bitten

A lady once saved an Indian's life, years ago. He had been bitten in the leg.

Without hesitation, she cut out that chunk of the flesh, sucked the blood from the wound, and put a tourniquet on. She made him get on his horse and instructed him to keep banging his leg against the saddle, as he rode to the doctor.

A year or two later, she was picking roses from her back porch, when, as she thought, she pricked her finger on a thorn. Her husband told her it was a snake bite and she fainted.

Broadway Amazed At Advance Sale For Latest Shows

By GEORGE TUCKER

New York — (AP) — The huge amounts of money being poured into Broadway box offices this season before some shows even open has the Rialto gulping.

The spectacle of a show coming to town with enough money in the till to insure two months operation before the critics have graded it hasn't been seen, except on rare occasions, since the hog wild days of the late 20s.

But it happened in quick succession with "Red Gloves," "Kiss Me Kate," and "Death of a Salesman." It is happening now with "South Pacific."

If a show has a name pull, if it has a great out-of-town opening, there is a kind of "grapevine" word of mouth — that starts rolling, and it's greater than any publicity campaign ever dreamed of," says George Ross, representing "Kiss Me, Kate."

This, plus Cole Porter's name, was worth a million to us. We began accepting orders three weeks in advance of opening, and when the opening came we had $350,000 in the bank. Since then we have average 4,300 letters a week. The average letter asks for four tickets, we have a $6 top. Figure it out for yourself."

"Death of a Salesman" opened Feb. 10 and had sold more than 250,000 in tickets before reaching town, said James Proctor, the show's press representative.

"Red Gloves" Success

The advantages of large advance sales become evident early in the season with the opening of "Red Gloves." The show had Charles Boyer from Hollywood, a great romantic star, and the advance guaranteed 10 weeks' operation before the critics even had a look at it. Pre-opening sales came to $250,000.

"South Pacific," a new musical based on James A. Michener's "Tales of the South Pacific," seems likely to beat the money-gathering exploits of "Kiss Me Kate."

Some weeks ago the producers called the newspapers with giant ads, opened the box office and sat down to wait.

At the money orders rolled in they sent out for a mechanical letter opener and hired two shifts of girls, eight to work by day and four at night.

Mack Miller, who tabulates each day's orders, says they started arriving at the rate of $17,000 to $19,000 a day. The show doesn't open until April 7.

"Mail orders are on the increase because people are tired of standing in line," he says.

"South Pacific" is being produced by Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein 2nd, in association with Leland Hayward and Joshua Logan. It stars Mary Martin ("My Heart Belongs to Daddy") and Ezio Pinza of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Rail Fares at Top In Great Britain

London — (CP) — Rail fares in Britain cannot be increased further, Transport Minister Barnes said in a speech.

He said it was plain to him "that we have reached the limit of increased charges on the railways of this country."

In order to meet the expenses of re-equipment, railway workers should concentrate on cutting out waste. This included the annual loss of over £2,000 ($8,000,000) through the needless and endless thieving of railway goods.

Young Hopefuls Keen to Crash British Hockey

By SHAUN McQUILLAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London — (CP) — Home-bred youngsters have a fighting chance to crash British hockey, which imported Canadians have dominated since its inception in the early '20s.

Moguls of the eight English major-league clubs, sponsoring ambitious schemes to cultivate local talent, find they don't have to scrape for pupils. Keen young Britons, with pipe-dreams eyes on local rinks, are clamoring in hundreds for a chance to develop their stuff.

The biggest "school" for up-and-coming youngsters is Wembley, main scene of the Olympic Games last year. At the Empire Pool, with its 8,000-seat capacity, six embryo teams regularly take the ice.

And on match night, when the Wembley Lions or Wembley Monarchs are at home, two of the junior teams play a "curtain game" before the main clash. To a lesser degree, other league clubs follow the same routine. The youngsters provide most of their own kit.

More than 200 weekly applications for trials are received at Wembley, entailing much weeding.

"We have plenty of keen lads," said a Wembley official. "But there are not many who will make the grade. Of the six teams we run now, maybe 12 players will eventually be good enough for senior or junior hockey."

A Big Obstacle

Main difficulty in developing British players is lack of ice. There is no natural ice in the United Kingdom and present rink accommodation cannot cope with hockey's increasing popularity.

Whatever the outcome of current training schemes, it is thought several seasons will elapse before Canadian-imported players can be reduced appreciably. A country-wide, home-bred player system might then hold imports to individual stars.

The Canadians have a popular following in Britain but officials say it is expensive to bring them over. Britons playing the major league, on the other hand, would both eliminate transport costs and add local flavor to spectator interest.

A fond hope of British hockey fans is a home-bred amateur national team good enough to hold its own in international events.

There was no Old Country entry in the February world championships at Stockholm, when Sudbury Wolves represented both Britain and the Dominion.

Ace Cartoonist On Front Page Over 53 Years

By HAROLD OLIVER

Washington — (AP) — The dean of the nation's cartoonists sketches some of his old favorites as he reminisced in his tiny, cluttered work room.

Handsome Clifford K. (Cliff) Berryman, who has been drawing front-page cartoons for 53 years — the past 47 for the Washington Star — is now a 80 years old. But he still turns out three a week and wouldn't retire for the world.

Because he dislikes publicity, the white-haired, pink-cheeked 1944 Pulitzer Prize winner reluctantly chatted about old times — how he kept his feet warm in the straw of Washington's horse-drawn street cars, how he took his wife to the theatre for the first time in a two-wheeled, English cab.

And, of course, about the business he loves, and the black and brown Windsor ties he has sported for five decades.

When asked to name the subjects he found the easiest to draw — he has been cartooning since the second Cleveland administration — Berryman picked up a pencil and in less than a minute roughly outlined the faces of Theodore Roosevelt, Uncle Joe Cannon, William Jennings Bryan and Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Never a caricaturist, but always the sketcher of the true likenesses the artist turned out spittin' images of the quartet.

"T. R. was the easiest, with the goggles and teeth," he smiled. "Joe Cannon was the easiest speaker to draw, cigar and short beard. W.J.B. was always a cinch. And F.D.R. — I you missed his lines you always knew him by his gaiest twister."

Self-Taught Artist

Berryman, born in Versailles, Ky., April 2, 1869, taught himself to draw. At 17 the lad saw his first bottle of drawing ink in the U. S. patent office, where he started as a draughtsman. He then went in for general illustrations, and cartooned for the Washington Post for 11 years before joining the Star in 1911.

Berryman is a light satirist, never highly partisan or crusading. He is known widely among old-timers as creator of the famous "Teddy Bear," a little cub that often appears in his cartoons.

It originated during a hunting trip by Theodore Roosevelt in Mississippi in 1902. The old Rough Rider had been hunting for days without any luck. As his train was about to depart, someone hurried up and told him to grab a gun. Two men ran up with a scrubby little bear.

T. R. made a quick decision. He couldn't shoot and face his sons afterward.

Berryman drew the pitiful little bruin in such a way that it got a laugh even from that stern New Englander, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge. It was at Lodge's urging that he continued to draw it. The market for toy bears spurted for years.

Originals of Berryman's cartoons have been in great demand over the years. He has given away thousands. One of his latest, now in the hands of President Truman, pictured John G. Public handing the President the degree of doctor of letters, for his "S.O.B." remark.

Son James and daughter Florence Berryman also are artists. Jim alternates with his father on the Star's front page, while Flore writes an artists' column.

Testing Blueberry In Acid Peat Soil

Edinburgh, Scotland — (CP) — The Canadian blueberry will make Scottish wastelands productive if the dreams of scientists come true.

About 400 plants have been brought from Canada by the department of agriculture with the confident belief they will increase and prosper on acid peat land where other crops have failed. Soil scientists think the blueberry can be made as important in Scottish fruit-growing as the raspberry, one of the most popular sources of British jam.

The Canadian plants, placed in different areas, have taken root well and already agricultural authorities speak of a new industry in the making.

The Canadian blueberry is a relative of the common wild Scottish blaeberry and the English bilberry. Canadian and United States scientists have improved its bearing qualities and Scottish authorities say the cultivated plant runs to a bush six or seven feet high, yielding about 20 pounds of fruit.

They are encouraged by Canadian reports that about 45,000 acres of former barren land in the Maritimes now carry blueberries and their cultivation is being extended in British Columbia.

In Scotland, more than 2,000,000 acres are covered with peaty soil and much of this area will be planted with the blueberries when the Canadian plants have been acclimatized and multiplied. One major attraction is that the land does not require much preparation and the blueberry prospers under moist conditions and will grow under trees.

Authorities said the severest test will be to their patience because the plants will not bear until four or five years have passed.

Marlboros Beat Sydney 4-2, Need Only One More Game To Win Eastern Semi-Final

Toronto April 7 (CP)— Toronto Marlboros are only one tie game away from the Eastern Canada senior hockey finals, thanks to a lanky leftwinger from South Porcupine, Ont., and a coolheaded netminder from Montreal.

The Toronto Maple Leaf farmhands stepped into the driver's seat by defeating Sydney Millionaires 4-3 here Wednesday night. The triumph was largely fashioned by the acrobatic goaling of Howie Harvey, a Montreal product, and the blazing stick of South Porcupine born Johnny McLellan.

The shifty McLellan turned in the hat trick as the all-Ontario champions scored all their four goals in an opening period dash. From then on, it was mainly Harvey who stemmed the tide as the Maritime champions kept play almost constantly in the Toronto zone.

The triumph left Marlboros needing only a tie in the fourth game of the series here Friday night to advance into the Allan Cup semi- final against the Quebec champions either Ottawa Senators or Sherbrooke Red Raiders.

Under Canadian Amateur Hockey Association rules, the best-of-five series is decided on a point basis. One point is given for a tie and two for a victory, with the first team getting six points declared winner.

Have Five Points

Marlboros now have five points by virtue of Wednesday night's win, a 2-2 victory Saturday night and a 1-1 overtime deadlock in the series opener. The Millionaires, who went into Wednesday night could force the series to a sixth game by winning Friday night, however. It would be played here Monday.

Though Harvey picked the puck off Sydney sticks at times, the Millionaires in Wednesday night's game helped beat themselves. Several times they succeed to be in scoring position, only to miss by making one pass too many instead of shooting.

Little Bruce Gallagher, 23-year old Toronto born right winger was the pick of the Millionaires. He scored the game's opening goal at 2:07 of the first period and helped Johnny Arundel set up veteran Paul Plats for the second Sydney goal — the only score in the last two periods.

McLellan's three goal outburst came after Al Buchanan, former Winnipeg Monarch Junior, tied the score at 9:45 of the opening frame. Defenceman Bobby Robertson fed McLellan passes for his first two tallies within 20 seconds during the 11th minute of play. His third came at 19:30, with Johnny McCormack and Alex Davidson drawing assists.

Court Once Ruled Baseball Not Under Trust Law

By TED SMITS

New York, April 7 (AP)—Back in 1922 the United States Supreme Court said baseball was a peculiar business and not under the anti-trust laws.

Now Danny Gardella, Max Lanier and Fred Martin say it is just plain business—and very much under those laws.

Radio and television make the big difference.

Danny and his lawyer, Frederic A. Johnson, are carrying the ball in the legal battles that sent shivers through baseball's vast $300,000,000 structure.

Danny sued for $300,000 damages because he was banned from organized baseball — couldn't work, in other words—after playing in the Mexican League in 1946.

Federal Judge Henry Goodarn dismissed the case July 14, 1948, and baseball once sighed with relief. But Feb. 9, 1949, the United States Court of Appeals in New York reversed the ruling, allowed that case to go to trial on new factors, and opened the way for Gardella's suit.

Lanier and Martin promptly joined in with actions for $2,-000,000 damages. They, too, were under ban for the Mexican League. There was this difference, however. Lanier and Martin had signed contracts and started the season with the Cardinals when they went south. Gardella had not signed.

Attack Reserve Clause

To the baseball club owner, the centre of the legal fight is the attack on the reserve clause which makes players virtually the private property of their clubs for their playing careers. Baseball says it must have it.

Here in non-legal language is lawyer Johnson's argument that so impressed the Circuit Court of Appeals:

He explains he is suing under the anti-trust law—in other words, that baseball is more than a sport. He says it's a big business.

Johnson makes three points in his "appelant's brief."

First, that baseball is "engaged in commerce among the several states and with foreign nations." He backs this up telling about the sale of advertising by ball clubs for their playing careers. Baseball says it must have it.

Second, the Washington club and the American League are immediately engaged in restraint of trade and exercise a monopoly over professional baseball in violation" of anti-trust laws.

Third, "the sale of players under a binding reserve clause by the Major League clubs from other states" is "in restraint of commerce among the several states and with foreign nations."

Tomorrow—the long history of court battles over the reserve clause.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE H. CARVER, Sports Editor

Hockey-mad Detroit will have that added to its already flaming Stanley Cup fires on Friday and Sunday nights when the Red Wings, conquerors of the Montreal Canadiens in the semi-finals, clash with the Leafs in the first two games of the Toronto Maple Leafs in the first two games of the Cup finals series.

• • •

We're long been harping on the mysterious effect the figure "3" has had on the playoff series—and it still holds good. Ten games have finished by a 3-1 score, and Detroit copped six of them. Canadiens by that count are retaining three games along with Les Habs. Magical figure that. Almost as good is the three beating that Leafs got last night in the first three games, and win the fourth by a 3-1 count. All right boys, don't crowd, the line forms on the right—and please bring folding money.

• • •

In any event it should be a honey of a series. There is no love lost between the Olympian hockey gods, and the magician of the Maple Leaf Gardens. Both have tasted the sultry tang of Stanley Cup blood and Wings have not forgotten that memorable series of a year ago when they smashed the Leafs for three straight victories only to have the Smythemen rear back with four straight wins to win the pennywaver. That denied still another Cup to the Detroit Wings and their supporters and you can bet your grandpappies store molare that Tommy Ivan's "Terribles" will be out for sweet revenge.

• • •

But the Leafs, fully rested after knocking off DH Clapper's Rocketeers in the semi-finals series, are full of the old pep, win and wingor. They've been holing out at St. Catharines and getting in some stiff workouts. They'll be fresh as hot cross buns and eager to grab that all-important first win—or perhaps two right in the Wings own roost. The teams come back to Toronto on Tuesday and Thursday and if the Leafs is not sufficient they go back to Detroit the following Sunday. And so on.

• • •

We're taking off for Peterborough tomorrow afternoon via CNR to take in the Ontario Baseball Association annual scheduled for Davie Kerr's Empress Hotel on Saturday. 'Tis reported the conclave will be the biggest in the history of the association, and delegates from all over the province will be in attendance. The COBA will be well represented with President Don Thomas and members of his executive from various teams of the league being present. Not known yet whether President Malcolm Ellis of the Bellville District League will send representatives or not. The city loop would be well advised to have somebody there as it is understood many important amendments will be aired for approval at the meeting.

• • •

One familiar face will be missing at the meeting. And he will be sadly missed by many of his friends—and they were legion among baseball circles all over the province. He is the late Ken Cellini, former sports editor of the Oshawa newspaper who was one of the best informed men on baseball in Ontario. Ken was a member of the OBA executive for eight years — and a true sport out of a stick bed in order to put in an appearance.

• • •

According to reports from Toronto re-election of Bill Snyder, Brantford, as secretary-treasurer of the Ontario Baseball Association is official, as he was the only nominee for the position. There will be a two-man race for presidency with Fred. F. Bradley of Sault Ste. Marie and Vice-President H. E. Young of Chippewa nominated for the number one spot on the OBA executive. Garnet Frankland, GTA, got nabbed the No. 1 ticket of Stratford, have been nominated for first and second vice-presidential spots and Nikko of Stratford is also a candidate for the office of first vice-president.

• • •

No less than 17 well-known baseball leaders have been nominated for the OBA executive including S. H. Armstrong, Carmen Rose, Carmen Nikko and Ken Cellini of Toronto; Clark Vern of Hamilton; Bill Dane of Owen Sound; Tory Gregg of Wingham; F. C. Lanan of Port Colborne; Angus McDonell of Ottawa; Bill Hamilton of London; Ed Carroll of Brantford; Johnny Robinson of Windsor; Bob Smith of Napanee; A. E. Hobbins of Chatham; Al Walter of Oshawa and C. E. G. Whatley of Peterborough.

• • •

The OBA executive and the Niagara District are seeking amendments that will keep senior league business confined to senior leagues. Nikko has laid down the law that only certificate registrations and Inter-County officials seek to eliminate the practice of allowing group winners with the best players from defeated teams.

• • •

CNR Diesels will send a representation to the Ontario Amateur Softball Association's annual confab in Oshawa come Good Friday... Expect, tis said, to affiliate the new CNR Softball League... Hear Trenton town is not affiliating with the OASA this year... Stu Bailey's McFarland Ball Woodworking Company is entering a team in the seam-busting Commercial Softball Loop... Harold Keller, who has again dopned the King's uniform as a loory in the 8th Anti Tank Regt., will likely be playing coach on the regiment's Commercial Softball League entry... Joe Keibler says he would have gone with the Brooklyn Dodgers for a tryout, only they wouldn't give him transportation.. Adds that he and Art Wrigh are seriously considering doing their baseball up around Stratford way this semester.. Bill Dennis of the Commercial Softball Loop wishes to inform all and sundry that the deadline for entries is set at May 1st.. Don't say you weren't warned... What's this we hear about a senior baseball entry this season?...Pretty strong rumors afoot, we believe...Philip (The Voice) Lawson, wants to know when he can bring his rassiers here again...Should be within the next two or three weeks.. Soccer referees are badly needed here... Anyone with ability along this line should get in touch with Doug Eaton at the YMCA...Hear Northern Electric will field a more than passing fair crew of socceries... Bowling Leagues are nearing the end of the schedule trail...Comes the playoffs and then the Knife and Fork League will get under way...Darts loop has two more scheduled matches and then the miniature harpoonists will go into playoff tropes...And finally the annual stag, likely at Tobe's Cosy Corners... Always a nest affair...And that's it for the nonce.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By ED ROMAINE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Vancouver, April 7 (CP)— What is the definition of amateurism? Well, first let's make a few comparisons.

A curling skip in Saskatoon wins a bonspiel and a fleet of 1949 limousines worth $20,000. He is an amateur.

In Ottawa, a figure-skater cuts a figure eight into a nation's heart, and she is forthwith presented with the keys to a shiny roadster. She is a professional.

Tw Pic (Vancouver Province) Whitbread, well-established and controlled state subsidization of sport is the only solution.

Ancient Approach

"No one in these countries wants to face the hard issue which is simply that in high - pressure national competition there is no such thing as amateurism in its original sense," he says.

"When any province sends an athlete or a team across Canada to compete in national champion ships, these athletes receive ample expense money. It's subsidy all right, but conducted in a cheap, furtive sort of fashion that belies the whole basic integrity in sport, amateur or professional."

Whether you approve of this sort of subsidy or not, it is an honest system. Ours is not," he says.

"Right now, we are a nation of phoney amateurs, trying, rather pathetically, to kid ourselves that we're not."

GREATEST SHAVING COMBINATION OF ALL TIME!

Detroit Wings Gird For Battle With Maple Leafs

Detroit, April 7 — (AP)—The best-of-seven Stanley playoff series for hockey's prized Stanley Cup, opening here Friday night, raises a squad of oft-asked sports questions:

Who has the advantage — a team that is rested, but perhaps a bit rusty, or one that is battered but "hot"?

Toronto Maple Leafs fit the former classification, Detroit Red Wings the latter.

Toronto took Boston Bruins 4 games to one in the cup semi-finals. For nearly a week the Leafs have rested while Detroit was extended to the full seven games by Montreal in the other bracket. That set was finished off only Tuesday night by the Red Wings' 3-1 triumph.

Reminded that the first six games of the Montreal series were bruising affairs, Adams retorted:

"What kind of talk is the bunk. It's far more difficult to try to get going after a long lay - off than it is to keep on playing as a team you know is in shape."

Ted Lindsay Injured

But, forebodingly, he added:

"Of course, I'm not talking about teams that have been wrecked by injuries."

That comment could apply to Detroit now. Its star winger, Ted Lindsay, suffered a chest gash in the seventh Montreal game. X-rays have been taken but it has not yet been determined how much action Lindsay will see against Toronto.

On that basis, Adams Wednesday declared that Lindsay's presence or absence could mean the series.

The second contest also will be held here, Sunday, and the third and fourth games at Toronto Wednesday and Saturday of next week.

If necessary, the fifth and seventh games will be in Detroit April 17 and 20 and the sixth at Toronto April 20.

The Leafs have to shake off a season-long jinx if they hope to win their third straight Stanley Cup.

The Wings were too much for the Leafs all season. They won seven games to Toronto's three with the other two tied.

Haven't Lost a Series

But the Leafs have some jinxes on their side too. Since Clarence (Hap) Day took over as coach in the 1940-41 season they haven't lost a Stanley Cup final to the Wings. They beat the Detroiters in the final in 1942, 1943 and 1948 and in the semi-final in 1947.

If the Leafs win the series, they will become the first team to win the Stanley Cup three times in succession. Their wins in the last two seasons matched double victories by the Ottawa Senators in 1920 and 1921, Montreal Canadiens in 1930 and 1931 and the Red Wings in 1936 and 1937.

Day's coaching record in Stanley Cup play is unsurpassed. His team has never been beaten in a final, beating Detroit three times and the Canadiens once. It has been defeated in three semi-finals, by the Canadiens in 1944, the Red Wings in 1942 and Boston Bruins in 1941. Once it failed to make the playoffs.

Detroit is after its fourth Stanley Cup. It won in 1936, 1937 and 1943. In 1936 it scored its only final-round victory over the Leafs, then coached by Dick Irvin, now with Montreal.

Training Camp Notes

(By The Associated Press)

Home runs, their chief instrument of destruction in the past, are coming fewer and farther between for New York Yankees these days.

In 24 exhibition games in the southern states, the Yanks have hit only three round-trippers.

Walker Cooper, New York Giants' veteran catcher, will learn for St. Louis this week for a check-up on his injured knee. Although the knee is still tender, Cooper has been used regularly in exhibition games.

Herman Wehmeier, 23-year-old right-hander, may be top Cincinnati pitcher" Cincinnati Reds have been looking for, Manager Bucky Walters says. Wehmeier, who won 11 and lost eight for the Reds last year, has made a "terrific impression" on Walters this Spring.

Philadelphia Athletics, who quit Florida yesterday en route to their home grounds, will try for a one-two punch from their Canadian pitchers Wednesday. Dick Fowler of Toronto, hung a 6-5 defeat on New York Yankees in an exhibition game. Today Phil Marchildon of Penetanguishene, Ont., is slated to throw in a game against Birmingham, Ala.

Although the work of Chicago Cubs' pitchers has been good — they've allowed only 27 runs in 12 games — manager Charley Grimm is worried about the batting arms of his four main starters. None has gone the route so far.

Fort Frances Whips Winnipeg To Even Series

Winnipeg, April 7 — (CP) — Fort Frances Canadians Wednesday night whipped Winnipeg Nationals 7-3 to even their best-of-five Western Canada senior hockey semi-final round at two games each.

The Thunder Bay champions outscored the Winnipeg club 2-1 in both first and second periods and counted three in the third while holding Nationals scoreless.

It was Canadians' second straight win and a complete reversal of their form in the first two games, won by Winnipeg 6-2 and 6-0. The third game was won 5-3 by Canadians.

A. W. Pickard of Regina, president of the Canadian Amateur Association, announced Wednesday night at Moose Jaw that the series has been reduced from a best-of-seven to a best-of-five affair.

The fifth and deciding game to be played Friday night at Winnipeg.

Calgary Ahead In Series With Moose Jaw Team

Moose Jaw, Sask., April 6 — (CP)—Calgary Buffaloes Wednesday night evened the best-of-seven Western Canada Senior Hockey semi-final series.

It was a close game for two periods, Calgary clinging to a 2-1 lead in the first and splitting two goals in the second to make it 3-2 at the end. In the third, however, the powerful Alberta club broke loose, counting three times while holding Canucks scoreless.

It was the third straight win for Calgary after Moose Jaw had fought to a 2-2 win in the opening game at Calgary.

Buffaloes took the second match 5-1 and blanked Canucks 5-0 in the third.

Fifth game will be played here Friday.

Ottawa Senators Take Sherbrooke To Even Series

Ottawa, April 7 (CP)—Sherbrooke Red Raiders and Ottawa Senators will be on even footing when they meet tonight in Sherbrooke for their fourth game of their best-of-seven final series for the Quebec Senior Hockey League championship.

The Senators, who led the league throughout most of the season, squeezed out a narrow 4-3 win here Wednesday night to square the series with one win each and a tie. The fifth game will be played here Saturday night with the sixth at Sherbrooke the next day.

The survivor will advance into the Allan Cup Eastern Canada Senior final round against either Toronto Marlboros or Sydney Millionaires.

The Senators, setting a fast pace in the initial period, slammed home two counters, but faltered early in the middle frame and allowed the visitors to even the count. From there on it was a nip-and-tuck contest, with the Raiders threatening to knot the count again in the dying minutes of the game.

The goals were well distributed on both teams. Tony Demers, Marcel Pilon and Kelly Burnett were the Sherbrooke snipers, while George Greene, Buddy Hellyer, Eddie Emberg and Emile Dagenais registered for Ottawa.

FIGHTS LAST NIGHT

New York—Charlie Fusari, 126½, Irvington, N.J., outpointed Al Guido, 143½, New York (10).

Syracuse, N.Y.: Joe Taylor, 138, Binghampton, N.Y. stopped Irish Mickey Doyle, 181, Cleveland (7).

Barcelona, Spain: Luis Romero, Madrid, knocked out Dino Cardinale, Italy (9).

Barrie to Meet Montreal Royals In Eastern Final

(By The Canadian Press)

The Canadian Amateur Hockey Association Wednesday announced Barrie Flyers will meet Montreal Royals in the best-of-seven Eastern Canada Memorial Cup final between Barrie Flyers and Montreal Royals.

The series opens in Toronto Saturday night, April 9 and is dated, at Montreal, April 12, 14 and 16; at Toronto, April 16 (afternoon), 19 and 21.

Alf Crooker, outside wing, has definitely signed for another year with Hamilton Tigers of the Ontario Rugby Football Union, it was disclosed Wednesday. There was some talk that he had decided to switch allegiance to the Hamilton Wildcats.

Merle Hapes, former New York Giants professional star, has never seen a Canadian football and before he lines up with Hamilton Tigers next fall plans to pick up some tips from Bob Masterson, University of Toronto coach. Hapes, who played with U. S. Army ball in 1946 for failing to report to his colors signed as a halffielder with Tigers for the next Ontario Rugby Football Union season, but will report to the end to help with coaching chores.

Boston Bruins reported Wednesday their "muscles line" has signed contracts for the 1949-50 National Hockey League season. Paul Ronty, Kenny Smith and Johnny Peirson all were reported to have received raises after their good work this season when they scored 62 goals.

New York Yankees will attempt to experiment today with the reconversion of outfielder Johnny Lindell into a pitcher. The 32-year-old Lindell has been named by manager Casey Stengel to pitch in an intra-squad game here. His future as a hurler undoubtedly will depend upon his showing.

The 50 odd golfers who make up the land - picked field for the 13th Masters golf tournament played their final practice rounds at Augusta, Ga., Wednesday with a feeling that almost anyone in the field could win. The tournament starts today.

Dick Fowler, tall Philadelphia right-hander from Toronto, limited New York Yankees to four hits Wednesday as he paced the Athletics to a 5-1 triumph before 3,200 fans at Lang Field. It was the Yanks' last game at St. Petersburg, Fla., for the season and the hurler scooped a six-game winning streak.

Twenty more entries for the 53rd Boston Marathon April 19 were received today including that of Tommy Such, veteran runner from Windsor, Ont. The nomination boosted the field to 45. Gerard Cote of St. Hyacinthe, Que., the 1948 winner, also is entered.

Stanley Christopherson, 87, wealthy president of the Marylebone Cricket Club from 1939 to 1946, died Tuesday night.

Bert Jeffcote, managing director of the Hinckley, England, Soccer Club, Wednesday night indignantly denied a report that team members would be hypnotized to give them "the will to win" a match April 19 with a team from the Brigham area.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

Augusta, Ga., April 7 (AP)—One recurring complaint you hear around the golf circuit is that golfers have no "color any more" . . . Reserve a lot of truth in that. you still can find a few like gallus-snapped Jimmy Demaret and clouting Sammy Snead and a handful of amateurs who don't give a hoot for appearances but still have the elusive quality . . . Snead sometimes peeves at the hill-billy yarns they blame on him, but he still can get the galleries with what Gene Sarazen calls "dumb" golf . . . "They make the greens as fast as they can here and they sometimes put the holes in very difficult positions," says Gene, "but Sammy just says, 'I'll go for it any time,' and he's liable to get into trouble that way" . . . Sure he does, but the fans like a guy who can belt that ball a mile and they like a guy who'll take a chance, so after a few day you'll probably see more of them following Sammy than any other player.

A Gusta Wind

Byron Nelson replaced Bobby Jones this year in the honorary role of the guy who plays with the defending champion in the Masters . . . Reason given was "the high regard which we have for Byron." Fashion note: Several of the pros are using brilliantly-colored golf bags made of the same material they use for football players' satin pants . . . Only thing brighter on this course are the officials' green jackets. Someone said they use them to cover billiard tables between tournaments.

Brandon Wheat Kings Beaten By Port Arthur

Port Arthur, April 7 (CP)—The threat of elimination inspired Port Arthur Bruins Wednesday night to outscore Brandon Wheat Kings 7-4 in the fourth game of their best-of-seven Western Canada Junior Hockey semi-final series, The Manitoba club won the first three games.

Outscored 2-0 in the first period although they held an edge in territorial play, Port Arthur broke through Brandon's defence in the second to count four times while allowing Wheat Kings a single goal. In the third they scored another three to the Manitoba champion's one.

Fifth game will be played here Friday night.

Al Childs was top man for the winners with two goals. The other Port Arthur markers went to Alex Davidenko, Bill Davidson, David Whalen, Gil Carlson and Barton Bradley.

YOUNG GIRL SHOT

Mstane, Que., April 7 — (CP)— An 18-year-old girl was shot and killed in her bedroom, provincial police said here Tuesday night. The victim was identified as Irene Dube, of Mstane Sur Mer, two miles from this Gaspe Peninsula town. Police said they were holding the girl's mother, Mrs. Leonida Dube, a 40-year-old widow, as a material witness.

TO RECONSIDER DECISION

Toronto, April 7 — (CP) — A special city council committee reviewing Toronto's fire prevention measures, decided Tuesday to reconsider their previous decision to discontinue the position of city fire marshal, now held by Ross Hill. Ontario Fire Marshal W. J. Scott told the Committee Tuesday there had been no evidence that Hill had not carried out his duties efficiently.

Perth Panthers Draw With Wolves

Perth, Scotland, April 7 (CP)— Perth Panthers came from behind in the last period to hold Canada's Buckeye Wolves to a 4-4 tie Wednesday night in an exhibition hockey game.

After a scoreless first period, the Wolves tallied three times in the middle session on goals by Kovick, Joe Dibastiani and Bill Dimock while coach Bill Roger scored for the Panthers.

In the fina lperiod

In the final period Ken Doig, Lorne Goddard and Chris Fox stormed the Sudbury nets to score and give the Perth team a 4-3 lead until Dimock provided the equalizer with his second goal of the game.

With life awakening in the forests, and birds winging their way home from the south, it is fitting for us to think of our wildlife. In honour of the unselfish work of Jack Miner, a National Wild Life Week has been proclaimed, to be held this year from April 10-16. You are urged to give special consideration to Canada's natural resources of forest and stream and to promote conservational practices wherever possible.

- Protect your forests by carefully putting out cigarette ends, matches and camp-fires.
- Observe the fish and game limits and closed seasons— take only what you can use.
- Support private and government conservation movements.

Difficult contracts call for desperate measures. When your trick outlook is bad, normal practice may not help you. Then is when you must take whatever chance you can discover.

Ordinarily you expect an even number of unsecured cards to break unevenly. If finding them that way will defeat you, try for an even split. Bullheadedly attempt the only way that will win.

Times are when your contract will lose unless you drop a king in the first round of a suit. If so, go right out and make a play as if the king was a singleton in one of the opponent hands.

Look at the position south was in when he was declarer at six spades in the deal shown here:

NORTH
♠ A 4
♥ 5
♦ A Q 8 3 2
♣ 8 6 4 2

WEST
♠ J 2
♥ K Q J 8 6
♦ K J 8 7
♣ Q 5

EAST
♠ K 10
♥ 10 9 7 4 3
♦ 10 4
♣ J 10 7 9

SOUTH
♠ Q 9 8 7 6 5 3
♥ A 2
♦ 9 5
♣ A K

The opening lead from west was a heart king. When dummy's hand went down the main worry was how the trumps would turn out. Under south could hold opponents to only one trick he was sunk.

There was also a little matter of having a finesse in diamonds come out to the good. But unless the trump situation is favorable even a successful diamond finesse will not save him.

To lose no heart he must ruff his small one in south with the small north spade. Then he must hope that opponent trumps will split.

There was nothing to do but go after the chance that offered. He took the first trick with heart ace. His small heart was ruffed. Trump was cashed. A club was served his own hand.

Not a south trump was laid down for a lead. Sure enough each of the opponents followed suit. The trumps thus broke for him. All he needs now is a winning diamond finesse.

Their return of a club was won in south. The diamond finesse was taken and won. The rest is easy. His could now spread his hand with a sigh of relief. So would I.

FRANKFORD

Frankford Juniors In Badminton Semi-Finals

Frankford Badminton Club made a very notable showing in the Central Ontario Junior Badminton playoffs held in Bowmanville Saturday. The C. O. B. A. takes in clubs from Kingston to Oshawa.

Don Davis made an excellent showing in the semi-finals in singles. He defeated A. Hart of Oshawa Flying Club, by a score of 21-9; R. Beals of Peterborough, 21-13; and Langmaid of Oshawa Flying Club, 21-7. In the finals, however, Don dropped both games to McNaughton of Peterborough by a 15-1 count.

In the Men's Doubles semi-finals, Don Davis and Doug Montgomery defeated Harwood and Trewin of Port Hope by a score of 21-8; and Hart and Drummond of Oshawa Flying Club 21-10.

In the Men's Doubles finals, Don and Doug bowed out to McNaughton and Beals of Peterborough, by scores of 15-8 and 15-2.

Joan Bennett and Don Davis dropped the single game in the mixed doubles, by a score of 21-16.

Considering the fact that Frankford Club has always played under a great handicap, due to the low ceiling of the Community-Memorial Hall, this is a showing to be proud of. Congratulations to you Joan and Doug for a job well done.

Frankford Badminton Club defeated Warkworth 11-3, Thursday night, in the Frankford Community-Memorial Hall. These two clubs have operated on practically even terms for a couple of seasons, with first one winning a tournament, then the other. Many friendships have been formed, and a fine sportsmanship has been excellent.

The first meeting of the Boys' and Girls' Work Committee was held a short time ago. Neil McKinnon, manager of the Lions Juvenile Hockey Club, gave a financial statement of the team for the 1948-49 season.

The possibility of making a baseball diamond on the property owned by the Frankford Agricultural Society, next to the arena was discussed.

A suggestion was brought up that the Lions sponsor bantam and midget softball teams this summer, in preference to juveniles.

District Lawn Bowlers Meet, C. Argue Pres.

Stirling (Special) April 7 — The spring meeting of District No. 15 of the Provincial Lawn Bowling Association was held in the Council Chambers on Friday evening, Walter T. Elliott, Stirling, District chairman, presided.

Representatives were present from Colborne, Brighton, Trenton, Belleville, Kingston, Campbellford, and Stirling clubs. Russell Hubel, vice chairman of District 15, also attended, while Dr. E. A. Carleton fulfilled the duties of secretary.

Address Re Provincial Championships

Mr. Clifford Argue of Belleville vice-president of the Provincial Lawn Bowling Association, addressed the meeting relative to the provincial championships, under the zone system in vogue this year. The district champions of Districts No. 13, 14, 15, 16 will playoff in Peterborough on August 17th, the winners to compete in the provincial finals to be held in Hamilton, on August 27th.

Travelling Expenses

The travelling expenses of those competing in the finals will be paid by the provincial association. Every club in District No. 15 was urged to have a representative in the playdowns.

Mr. Argue also urged each club to sponsor a tournament during the summer, the proceeds of which would go to the provincial associations hospital fund.

Medal Presented

A feature of the meeting was the presentation of a past president's medal on behalf of the Provincial Lawn Bowling Association to Dr. E. A. Carleton by vice president Argue. Dr. Carleton was provincial president in 1938.

An application for membership in District No. 15 was received from Colborne Lawn Bowling Club and was accepted.

District Bowling League

A discussion on the District Bowling League, the winners of which are eligible for competition in the Governor-Generals competition, showed several clubs in favor of entering the league providing satisfactory zoning could be arranged eliminating lengthy drives for competitors.

Election of Officers

In the election of officers, C. Argue was reelected president, and F. G. Mallory secretary treasurer of the league. The tournament dates were decided for the coming season.

At the conclusion of the meeting all were invited to the residence of Dr. E. A. Carleton, where Mrs. Carleton and Mrs. W. T. Elliott served dainty refreshments and a social hour was enjoyed.

DEATH TOLL IS 74

Effingham, Ill., April 7 (AP)—The toll of dead and missing in Tuesday's disastrous fire at St. Anthony's Hospital rose to an estimated 74 Wednesday, with 58 known dead. The Catholic Chancery Office, which governs the hospital, reported that 62 of 69 bodies recovered from the blackened ruins of the hospital have been identified. Bodies of seven others remained unclaimed and five others listed a missing are believed buried in the wreckage.

Answer to Yesterday's Puzzle

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma goes downtown every morning to serve on the jury on account of getting a summons in the mail, and tonight after supper she was telling pop about the diffrent cases she helped to decide by voting for them or against them according to how she felt and pop said, For Pete sake, do you think I pay out my hard earned money for school taxes just so you can drown out your education in a flood of indigestible boogie woogie?

Well aw G, pop, you can turn it to any program you want, I said. It dont have to be music, all I need is the general effect, I said, and pop said, I dont want any program, thank you. I'm planning to reed my paper and I want to concentrate on what I'm reeding, and I want you to concentrate on your homework, he said.

That's just what I'm trying to do, pop, and the radio helps me to keep my branes from wandering, I said, and pop said, That doesn't make sense and you know it.

Sure it does, pop, I said. Why dont you let me decide? She's on the jury, so she makes her an expert decider, I said, and pop said, Okay, what do you say, fury?

Meaning ma, and she said, Well, it's a notity problem.

What's notity about it? pop said. How the dooce can that blarsing racket help a sane child to concentrate? he said, and ma said, That's very true, I think you have quite a fine point there. But when you've been on a jury a while you get accustomed to waying all the evidence, and which is really a comparatively Benny admits that any program at all would have the same beneficial result. So I think I'll settle the case with a compromise by turning on The Meerder Hour.

subdued program with only an occasional shout or scream, she said.

Which she did, being her favorite thing on the radio.

Young Liberals Condemn Bill On Charities

Toronto, April 7 (CP)— Members of the Ontario Young Liberal Association Wednesday unanimously passed a resolution "whole-heartedly condemning the Ontario government" for introducing the Charities Gifts Bill and demanding "its immediate withdrawal."

The resolution, one of five approved by the annual convention was drafted Wednesday as a special addition to a prepared list of 10 resolutions considered before the meeting, and was passed Wednesday afternoon without discussion.

Other resolutions approved called for:

1. The Ontario Liberal Party to work for the simplification of the Canadian tax structure and to co-operate, immediately upon coming into office, with the Dominion government in reaching a financial agreement (for retiring certain tax fields to the federal government).

2. The reduction and standardization of university fees in Ontario by the use of government grants and the siding of needing and worthy students by the use of government financed bursaries and scholarships.

3. Amendment of elementary school curriculums to contain "more thorough courses in English, French and history" and the extension of vocational training schools to cover smaller as well as the larger urban centres.

4. The immediate establishment of contributory old-age and medical care insurance schemes for all employed persons in Ontario, extension of the existing old age pension to cover age 65 without a mean test and increased assistance to unemployed blind persons.

Other resolutions covering financial policy, encouragement of industry, housing, labor relations and municipal affairs were referred to the provincial executive for consideration at its next meeting. Time limit on Wednesday's meeting ran out before they could be considered.

Vernon Singer, 29-year-old Toronto lawyer, was re-elected president of the association and Miss Joan Stark of Toronto was re-named treasurer. Douglas Annett of Kitchener was elected secretary.

Tiny Falcon Is. Jack-in-the-Box

Auckland, N.Z. — (CP) —Falcon Island, the Pacific's mysterious Jack-in-the-box which has puzzled mariners for two centuries, has been located again nine fathoms below the sea.

The island, which periodically rises above the ocean, has long been a source of worry to the Pacific Island Kingdom of Tonga, which has twice annexed it, only to lose it again when it sank beneath the ocean.

The latest investigation of the island, which is 80 miles north of the main island of the Tongan group, was made by the New Zealand sloop Hawea which recorded its contours with an echo sounder. The sloop reports that there is a strong sulphurous smell at the locality indicating submerged volcanic activity.

First observed as a reef in the 18th century, Falcon Island was found 100 years later to have grown into a barren strip of land a mile and a quarter long and 153 feet high. Then it sank into the sea, but in 1926 there was a violent eruption which produced an island of pumice stone more than 100 feet high.

In succeeding years Falcon Island disappeared and reappeared at irregular intervals. Its most spectacular return from the ocean depths was in 1927 when volcanic explosions were seen more than 30 miles away. Early in 1946 it again vanished and a New Zealand warship found the highest point was nearly 30 feet beneath the sea. The latest observation indicated that the island is still sinking.

Australians Wage War on Wild Dogs

Brisbane, Australia (CP)— A campaign to destroy dingoes (Australian wild dogs) from the air is taking place in Queensland and the Northern Territory.

Millions of poison baits have been dropped over an area of 160,000,000 acres.

Object of the campaign is to check the continual movements of the animals into the sheep ranches from the cattle country. It is estimated that at least 500,000 sheep have been killed yearly in Queensland alone by dingoes over the last five years.

Last year government-sponsored aircraft flew 43,000 miles dropping baits on remote land between the sheep and cattle ranches of Queensland.

The poison bait being used is a small dried piece of beef with a strychnine pellet inserted in the centre. It is wrapped in a grease-proof paper so that each bait falls separately.

The dingo is believed to have come from ancient Egypt and India. Aboriginal folk-lore indicates that they were in Australia when the aborigines arrived countless years ago.

They are savage sheep killers, sometimes killing more from joy than for food. They never bark or during the mating season. When bait howl dismally when hungry crossed with the domestic animal, especially the Alsatian, they become relentless killers.

Village Council, Bd. of Education Discuss Matters

Stirling—Members of village council and the Stirling Board of Education met in lengthy discussion on school matters at a meeting of the Board of Education, on Monday night. The main discussion centred around the building of a new public school in the village to accommodate the increased attendance of pupils, although the greater high school area of Sidney was discussed at some length.

Erection of New School

Inspector A. W. McGuire, of Tweed, who had interviewed the Department of Education concerning the erection of a new school here, reported that the department was favorable to such a move and outlined the necessary steps to be taken before building.

Chairman C. I. Hatton, presided, and was supported by Messrs. J. B. Belshaw, M. J. Black, C. Macklin, W. Wright, R. A. Patterson, Earl Fox, H. Donnan and Dr. E. A. Carleton.

Reports on Night Classes

Principal C. A. Wells, of the public school, and technical of shop work, gave a report on the night classes in shop work, showing the enrolment as sixteen and the average attendance at the weekly class of twelve. Fifteen members of the class had over 75 per cent. attendance at the twenty classes. He also reported on the work accomplished, and considered the classes very successful.

Principal J. L. Good of the high school reported on high school matters as well as the night classes held for the D.P.'s in English and citizenship.

Both Mr. Good and Mr. Wells were granted $10 expenses attend the O.S.S.A. Easter week.

Reporting for the property committee, Mr. J. B. Belshaw, stated the new clock in the high school had been connected with hydro.

Chairman R. A. Patterson, of the Finance committee presented several accounts for payment.

Communications were received and discussed by W. McGuire and E. D. Ketcheson.

Labor Party Worried About County Elections

London, April 7 — (Reuters)— The Labor party, shaken by the unremitting austerity of Sir Stafford Cripps' budget, awaited the result of today's vital London county council elections with trepidation.

The party, which before Wednesday's budget statement had a buoyant hope of preserving its five-sixths domination of the council, was plunged into dismay by the severe budget.

Informed Labor quarters pinned their faith to the constancy of the Labor vote and public appreciation of Sir Stafford's "realism."

But party workers realized that the outcome of today's struggle might have vital repercussions upon the local elections now proceeding throughout Britain, and upon the party's prospects of return in the general election next year.

The 129 seats in the London county council, where Labor has held a majority for 15 years, were being contested (AP)— by 729 Labor candidates and 126 Conservatives.

Before today's election Labor held 90 seats on the L.C.C. and the Conservatives 39.

In the local elections, on the basis of returns up to Wednesday night, Labor conceded a net loss of 25 county council seats in 21 of the 62 elections taking place this week.

School Operators Deny Charges

Eccleshall, Staffordshire, England, April 7 (AP)—The Staffordshire County Council alleged in court today that a progressive school matron gave a contraceptive to a girl pupil who had "somewhat rather undue attachment" for a boy.

The court was hearing a case brought by the council against Robert Copping, 29, and Edward Reynolds, 31, who operate the school, Horsley Hall. The hearing was up on a summons alleging that Copping and Reynolds were unfit to have the care of children and that the pupils were living in a "detrimental" environment.

Copping recently invited a cane manufacturer to lecture at the school and then encouraged boys to thrash him with canes of his own manufacture.

Both Copping and Reynolds denied the complaints.

The council's lawyer said boys and girls visited each others' rooms at night and there was constant talk of sex among them. The pupils are in the lower-teen-age group.

Before the case opened, D. E. Evans, counsel for Copping and Reynolds, described the proceedings as "preposterous."

Students to See History in Making

Toronto, April 7 — (CP) — A group of Toronto secondary school students today will exchange history books for a front row seat to watch history in the making at the United Nations General Assembly at Lake Success, N.Y. Sponsored by the Board of Education, the three-day expense-free trip was designed to give students a closer look at international affairs. They leave this morning by plane.

BANCROFT

Fire Destroys Frame House At L'Amable

Bancroft, Ont. (Special)—Fire breaking out in the upper part of the structure completely destroyed the two-storey frame house of Owen Conlin, at L'Amable, five miles south of this village early today.

Conlin, after lighting the kitchen fire went to the barn to do the chores. A few minutes later his wife noticed the upper part of the building on fire. She and a daughter Marion, 15, emerged from the burning home unscathed. Neighbors and the Conlins succeeded in getting clothing and furniture from the ground floor to safety. Nothing was salvaged from the second storey. The fire is believed to have started from overheated pipes.

The house is situated squarely on the edge of No. 62 Highway. D. P. P. Constable Doug Ritchie-son, Bancroft, handled traffic along the highway when the upper part of the blazing house toppled squarely into the road.

Damage is estimated at $3,000 which is partially covered by insurance.

Weary Wild Geese Take Over Farm

Renfrew, April 7 — (CP) — Thousands of weary wild geese have temporarily taken over Harry Berry's farm near this Renfrew county town near Ottawa. And members of the Fish and Game Club here are hurrying about trying to get feed for the birds, before they continue their migratory flight northwards.

PICTON

John Arnaud New President Of Rotary Club

Picton — John Arnaud was elected president of Picton Rotary Club for the coming year, it was announced at the regular meeting. He succeeds H. R. MacDonald. Mr. Arnaud is succeeded as treasurer by Gordon Campbell. F. J. MacArthur succeeds Russell Attersley as secretary, and Vernon VanDusen as sergeant-at-arms.

Jack Ward was guest speaker, telling of the work of the McFarland Construction Co., and showing films of some of their large projects.

Plans for an Easter ball were discussed. It was announced that tickets amounting to $1885. had been sold on the car to be drawn for July 1st and members were urged to reach $3,000. W. Castelon reported returns from sale of Easter sales as $554., with returns just beginning to come in.

REV. FATHER DALY DIES

New York, April 7 — (AP) — Rev. Joseph Augustin Daly, pioneer broadcaster on Roman Catholicism and former executive secretary of the National Legion of Decency, died Wednesday. He was 49. Until a few years ago he was Roman Catholic adviser to the Columbia and Mutual Broadcasting Networks.

Nationalists May Reject Red Ultimatum

Nanking, April 7 — (AP) — Nationalist China may reject the Communist demand to surrender its armies by Tuesday.

Acting President Li Tsung-Jen is reported to have rejected it in its present form. If he is unable to gain concessions the civil war will likely be on again.

Li has ordered Premier Ho Ying-Chin back from Canton to help him frame a formal reply, which must be sent by Saturday.

Gloom pervaded the capital. The ultimatum fell like a bombshell Wednesday. Many were shocked and resentful, as peace talks were supposed to be under way in Peiping.

Foreign diplomats informed their governments of the sudden demands.

Red troops will cross the Yangtze River into South China if the terms are not met, the ultimatum said.

Observers give the Nationalists little chance to stop them.

WILL HOLD CONGRESS

Kingston, April 7 — (CP) — The Fifth Canadian Penal Congress will be held in June here, Murdock Keith, temple supervisor of the John Howard Society announced. The congress will bring together representatives from across the Dominion to discuss common problems.

RHEUMATIC PAIN, BACKACHE GONE "FEELS YEARS YOUNGER"

This Sutton Resident Tells How Syntona Helped Him; Relieved Pain; Appetite Improved; Sleeps Soundly. Praises It Highly.

Many hundreds of men and women in this city and vicinity frequently tell of the remarkable results they obtained by using Syntona Herbal Compound. Former sufferers of stomach disorders, sluggish kidneys or liver, constipation, nervousness and rheumatic aches and pains say Syntona has given surprising and prompt relief from their suffering. In all instances these expressions have been made public in the hope that they will benefit others who suffer similarly.

For example, Mr. Lewis J. Willis, Dutton, Ontario, reported recently as follows:

"I suffered from rheumatic pains, which kept getting worse from year to year. I had tried all kinds, my joints and muscles which had become so stiff and sore, I could hardly get around. I had a dull aching pain across my back and I felt I was a chair for a while. I had difficulty getting straightened up again. My appetite was poor, I was troubled with constipation, and I couldn't sleep. I got no proper sleep at night.

"I spent a lot of money on medicines of all kinds, but got no noticeable relief. I began taking Syntona. In a very short time the medicine has cleared up the pain and stiffness, relieved backache and constipation and I feel years younger. I have a good appetite and no trouble at all getting to sleep at night. It's a wonderful medicine. I'm glad to tell anyone about it."

Seamen, Police In Pitched Battle On Waterfront

Riot Guns and Axe Handles Used, Eight are Injured

Halifax, April 8 — (CP) — More than 500 rival Seamen's Union men and railway police early today fought a pitched battle on the waterfront. Striking Canadian Seamen's Union (T.L.C.) policemen charged their rivals of the Seafarers International Union (A.F.L.) and a hostile escort used buckshot-spraying riot guns and axe handles to take a fleet of ships. Eight were injured.

Broken heads and wounded bodies resulted when the S.I.U. crews, headed by a picket escort of Canadian National Railways police, charged this early-morning C.S.U. picket lines to board three strike-bound Canadian National ships.

Once aboard, the new crews, under a barrage of paving stones and other missiles, helped police in playing fire hoses on the C.S.U. pickets, now aided by a mass of their sympathizers.

After three hours of this sort of battle royal, cables were cut and the ships moved into the stream. They now are at anchor and there has been no announcement as to the next move.

Canadian Pacific Ltd. counted its injured and charged the incident firmly. "Our police did not use firearms of any description," he declared. "There was no shooting from company police who were on hand merely to see that company property was protected."

This was the only statement made by the company and up to midnight no other information could be obtained from S.I.U. officials.

A Canadian Press reporter was stationed on the dock side as the anchored ships in a water taxi. Most watermen, however, refused to join the C.S.U. victory of the ships, saying that already the best jobs had been filled by a crew member. They assumed the new crewmen thought the last was trying to approach with S.S.U. members.

Eight seamen suffering wounds of the "face, stomach and bodies" were rushed to the emergency ward of one hospital. One was brought in on a stretcher. A hospital spokesman said only three of the injured would be in the hospital would remain for further treatment. Meanwhile he declared that an investigation of what had caused the wounds suffered

Experts Wrestling With Problem Of Putting New Budget Into Effect

London, April 8 (CP)—Financial experts are wrestling with the problem of putting into effect price increases in meat, cheese, butter and margarine as ordered in Sir Stafford Cripps' new budget.

It is thought that prices will move up April 28 when the whole country begins using new ration books, the previous issue of books having been used up.

Sir Stafford, Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced yesterday he would go up by four pence (about seven cents) a pound. There would be similar increases in cheese prices while margarine and the upper crust and butter by twopence.

At present each adult Briton is allowed to buy 10d. (about 17 cents) worth of meat weekly for which twopence must be in current coin.

"The increase will not be a flat rate," a spokesman for the food ministry said today. "It will be averaged over all the various price ranges."

"Mousetrap" cheese, as Britons call the rationed variety, now sells for 10d. a pound with a bonus ration of two ounces a person weekly.

Butter sells for 1s 4d. a pound and margarine for 9d. The combined ration for the two fat products is six ounces weekly.

The new prices are artificial, kept down by government subsidies introduced in wartime to lop as much as possible of the cost of living. Next year they have increased due to the rise in world prices. Some critics have accused the government of failing to increase the ration because there would be a corresponding rise in subsidies.

Sir Stafford said Wednesday the government had decided it must draw the line somewhere. The subsidies are costing £952,000,000 ($4,940,000,000) yearly and would cost £952,000,000 more if the consumer absorbed some of the cost directly.

Last night Glenvil Hall, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, told the Commons butter will still be subsidized to the extent of 1s 2d. a pound, cheese at 9d a pound and margarine at 4d. a pound. A subsidy of more than 2d. would remain on meat.

Other subsidized foodstuffs are bread, flour, milk, bacon and potatoes.

COMMONS STEPS INTO LAST LAP BEFORE RECESS

Vote Money to Pay Bills For Past Fiscal Year

Ottawa, April 8 — (CP)—Parliament today stepped into the last lap before its two-weeks Easter recess after airing various problems for three days and voting money to pay off its bills for the past fiscal year.

The quickened tempo that precedes the members' departure for their homes saw the Commons late last night voting the final batch of a $100,000,000 series of supplementary estimates for the 1942-49 year. These got royal assent shortly before midnight.

The House is scheduled to resume at 2:30 p.m. E.T. tonight if immediate business is finished by that time. A Blairfield of the day, it appeared likely, will be the tabling of the report of the Royal Commission which last year investigated the post-war rise in prices.

The House has been engaged all week in whipping the estimates through, with heaviest attention concentrated on defence appropriations. These were under scrutiny off-and-on for the three days as opposition members bombarded Defence Minister Claxton with queries on the armed forces.

A plunge into the Old-Age Pensions issue late in last night's session today ignited a major conservative and C.C.F. spokesmen debate. Hazen Argue, C.C.F. leader, called on the federal government to increase the size of the pensions payments for both the aged and the blind.

COMMONS STEPS—Page 5

No Answer Given To $64 Question

Ottawa, April 8 — (CP)—The government set tight - lipped precedent under pressure for an answer to the $64 question — is it time for private enterprise going to run its natural course or will it be dissolved early for an election?

Donald Fleming (PC — Toronto-Eglinton) put the question after Health Minister Martin, at a stage where debate on old age pensions was cut off temporarily, observed that all members were free to talk on the subject during the budget debate.

Mr. Fleming immediately asked if that was a firm undertaking that the budget debate would go on until every member had had a chance to speak, or a warning.

Neither Mr. Martin nor any of ministers — including Prime Minister St. Laurent — said a word in reply.

Principle of General Price Controls in Peace Rejected by Commission

Ottawa, April 8 — (CP)—While rejecting general price controls in peacetime, the Royal Commission on prices today called on the government to use tax and credit powers to check booms and slumps as they arise.

The commission, whose three-volume report was tabled in the Commons today, urged "positive action" by the government to attain greater economic stability by modifying fluctuations in the volume of private business.

It advocated "fiscal and monetary measures" to "apply the brakes" or "provide stimulus," depending on conditions. However, it did not indicate which course should be followed for conditions of the moment.

The commission rejected completely the principle of general price controls in peace, though it favored "selective" controls in a few cases and also suggested it might be wise not to let farm prices run unchecked during inflation.

Many Causes of High Prices

Appointed last July to find out the causes of post-war high prices, the commission found these were largely due to factors beyond Canada, heavy export demands and the Korean and United States capital boom.

The three-man body — under Prof. C. A. Curtis of Queen's University, Kingston, also ruled out "profiteering" as a major cause of the price rise, though it noted a number of cases of "very high profits" in some businesses and industries.

But it struck out at "restrictive business practices," such as that of manufacturers fixing the prices of products by agreement, which the commission said deprived the consumer of the benefits of competition.

It urged that the combines investigation commission, which deals with restraint-of-trade practices, give "careful study" to this problem of "resale price maintenance."

Wages Increased

The commission found that rising wages "are an important inflationary effect" both on the public's spending power and on costs. It noted "real" wages of labor have risen substantially in the past two years and that the wage rise of the war years and levelling off since then.

The commission saw a "danger" of pressure on the government for increases of its short - term bargo beyond the period needed to build Canada's foreign - exchange resources.

It expressed the view that income controls should not be used as a "protectionist device" (which presumably would have the effect of letting domestic production rise behind a wall of competition from abroad).

Findings of the commission followed a long public hearing which concluded last December, into prices and the state of industries and the economic factors underlying the general post-war price rise.

The commission, appointed to investigate the rising living theory began at the last session of parliament by a special committee of the House. The group included H. C. Bois of Montreal and Mrs. T. W. Sutherland of Parkerville, B.C.

Labor Party Loses Control Of London County Council Held Since Year 1935

London, April 8 (CP)— The Labor Party lost control of the London county council for the first time since 1935. The council is the most important governing body in Britain next to parliament.

The Conservatives, with striking gains in the council elections yesterday, took 64 seats to 39 for the council, which governs London, leaving the balance of power in the hands of the lone third party representative elected, a member of the Liberal party.

Labor, Conservatives tied

. . . After returns from Thursday's voting gave the Conservatives and Labor 64 seats each. This left Sir Herbert Morrison, Minister in the driver's seat for the next three years.

In the old council Labor had held 90 seats to 30 for the Conservatives, with the Liberals and Communists had two each. Five additional seats had been created since the last election.

The balloting came one day after the announcement of the new national budget by the labor government, decreeing another lean year for Britons.

One defeated Labor council man, G. F. Rowe, said 10 per cent of the voters he canvassed Thursday night had turned away from the Labor party because of the Britain budget.

The London county council administers the 28 borough of the city. It is the main central authority with powers regarding public health, housing, bridges, ferries, streets, parks and the like.

Yesterday's election results switched to the Tories in the allimportant West End area. The elections have no bearing on Parliament, but were eagerly awaited as indications of popular feeling and a certain raiser for the general election of 1950.

The Communists were wiped out in London, as they had been in the last election.

The balloting in many areas was heavier than usual for local elections, running about 35 per cent in London.

The Conservatives also won a smashing victory in Middlesex County, which has a Labor by a scant majority three years ago. Other municipalities took 56 seats, Labor 23, and Independents, four. In Berkshire the Conservatives captured seven seats from Labor, in Worcestershire three.

Two seats were captured by Sir Oswald Mosley's pro-Fascist union movement in the Kensington borough, which has a Labor government under, collecting only about 500 votes each.

Conservatives in Northampton shire increased their representation from 19 to 27 seats while Labor fell from 15 to eight.

Up to these election the Labor party had been holding the control it gained in the 1945 elections, when it swept the Conservatives from power. Labor consistently had held its own in the by-elections for parliament.

Mrs. Brennan Plans To Return to England

Galt, April 8 (CP)—Mrs. Florentina Ann Brennan, 53, whose whereabouts were unknown when a warrant for murder was sworn against a 70-year-old Englishman was dismissed Thursday, has been located here.

Mrs. Brennan, who left her home in Hove, Sussex, England last December, declined today to comment on the suit against William Henry Brand of Southwick, Sussex. It was dismissed Thursday in an English court. She plans to return to England next month.

New Salary Scale Is Approved by U.C.

Toronto, April 8 (CP)— New salary scales for ministers on aid-receiving charges were approved by the annual conference, meeting of the Board of Home Missions of the United Church of Canada. In all cases, increases up to $200 were granted.

Married and ordained ministers will now receive $2,150 with an unfurnished house, or $2,100 with a furnished house. A single, ordained minister, without house, will get $1,950; with house, $1,900.

HON. DANA PORTER IS CANDIDATE FOR LEADERSHIP

Announcement Made By Education Minister

Toronto, April 8 (CP)— Education Minister Porter announced today he will be a candidate for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative party in Ontario.

The Ontario Progressive-Conservatives convention meets here April 25-26-27 to choose a leader to succeed Premier Kennedy who has indicated he will not be a candidate. Only other candidates to declare themselves are Attorney-General Blackwell and Kelso Roberts, a Toronto lawyer and former Progressive Conservative member of the legislature.

Mr. Porter said today in a prepared statement that "several of those who have played a prominent part in the government - for the last six years will be expected to stand."

"I have been urged by many of my friends to do so. I have therefore decided to allow my name to be put before the convention."

Enters Contest with Confidence

"In view of the persistence of reports that some associates are entering this contest with confidence, there are strong reason for the election of a young man to this high office. We shall need youth and vigor and a breadth of vision, not only as to the affairs of the party organization itself, but also as to the general issues arising in a changing world."

The 43-year-old Education Minister is a graduate of the University of Toronto and was called to the Ontario bar in 1926. First elected to the legislature in 1943 to represent Toronto St. George, he acted as parliamentary assistant to former Premier George Drew in the 1944 session and served as planning minister from May 1944 to October 1945 when he was appointed Education Minister.

U.K. Papers May Add Two Pages 3 Days In Week

London, April 8 — (AP) — British publishers of Fleet Street fame were told today they may publish six-page papers every day six days a week.

Harold Wilson, president of the Board of Trade, said he hopes this beginning with July 1 it will be possible to increase by 50-per-cent the paper supplies of old-established periodicals.

Nationally - distributed full size papers were restricted by paper supplies to six pages three days a week and four pages for the other three days. Provincial papers whose page-size is smaller could print 12 pages three days a week and eight the other three.

West to End Control in W. Germany When Federal Republic is Set Up

Washington, April 8 — (AP) — The United States, Britain and France announced today they are ready to end military control over western Germany as soon as a new German federal republic" is set up.

A joint communique said "complete agreement" on "the whole range" of outstanding German issues was reached in conferences here among the foreign ministers of the three powers — State Secretary Acheson, Foreign Secretary Bevin of Britain, and Foreign Minister Schuman of France. The pronouncement appeared certain to harden further the differences between the three powers, on the one hand, and Russia, on the other, over Germany's future. Diplomatic authorities here anticipate it will touch off Soviet propaganda blasts from Russia.

With the establishment of the German republic, the communiqua said, the military governors in Germany will be replaced by high commissioners and military commanders will remain only to head of the occupation forces.

The joint communique also "will be the Supreme Allied agency of control."

The final meeting of the Big Three foreign ministers was held at Acheson's office this morning. They confirmed the agreement already worked out in conferences here Wednesday and Thursday.

The German agreement cleared the boards of the last really major split among the Western Powers.

U.S. Officially Replies Military Aid Plan on Way

Program Being Prepared For Congress Presentation

Washington, April 88 — (AP) — Eight European members of the North Atlantic Alliance urgently appealed to the United States today for help in rearming. They were told in an official reply that a military aid program is being prepared for presentation to Congress.

The requests came from the five Brussels-treaty countries acting as a group — Britain, France, Belgium, The Netherlands and Luxembourg — and from Italy, Denmark and Norway.

In each case, the European Allies said substantially the same thing — that none of the countries alone has the resources to provide an adequate armament for its own defence and for its part in the Atlantic defence system.

The State Department replied to this appeal:

The executive branch of the United States government is prepared to recommend to the United States Congress that the United States provide military assistance to the nations of the North Atlantic in order to assist it to meet the material requirements of the defence program.

"It will be requested of the Congress that such assistance be in the form of military equipment and services (including training by (that country's) defence program and the provision of such financial assistance for increased military production on (the country's) part required by its defence program. Such assistance would be in the recognition of the principle of self-help and mutual aid contained in the Atlantic Pact."

For 12-Months Period

The program is expected to call for the spend $1,250,000,000 worth of military supplies and equipment during a period of 12 months.

Each of the countries promised by the pact to receive such help or is capable of in the general interest of the defence of the North Atlantic area.

The treaty was signed last Monday by the United States and Canada and 10 other countries, but has not yet been ratified.

There were some variations in the appeals.

In the case of Denmark, for instance, emphasis was placed on an assertion that United States dollars to help meet the costs involved in increased agricultural production. Each of the pleas stressed the point that military manufacturers must not be permitted to disrupt the European recovery program.

CARR CONVICTED, CONSPIRED TO UTTER PASSPORT

Judge Adjourns Court After Verdict Without Sentencing Accused

Ottawa, April 8 (CP)—An 31-man jury today found Sam Carr guilty of conspiring to utter a forged passport for a Russian agent.

Judge A. G. McDougall adjourned the court until 2:30 p.m. without sentencing Carr. He did not allow the defence counsel, Joseph Sedgwick, to appear and make an appeal on behalf of his client. Mr. Sedgwick was not in court this morning.

The jury deliberated an hour and-a-half before returning with its verdict of guilty. Carr appeared to take the decision calmly and without any outward reaction.

Mrs. Carr who has been on hand since the trial got under way Tuesday appeared stunned by the verdict.

Some 40 spectators, lawyers and reporters were in the court room when the jury retired to deliver their decision at 12:15 p.m. EST.

The jury had retired at 10:45 a.m. to decide whether Carr was innocent or guilty.

Police Deny Firearms Used

Halifax, April 8 — (CP)—Three Canadian Press reporters covering the waterfront melee today, had to dodge rocks, fire-hose jets and were almost knocked like shotgun fire.

When a sound like a shotgun blast was heard above the din and cries of battle the reporters were operating, they speedily ducked behind molasses barrels and continued writing their assignment.

Regularly they ran for a nearby telephone to dictate a running account of the battle. They escaped with nothing more than a partial wetting from a cross fire of fire hoses which were turned especially at them.

They were approached by striking C.S.U. members leading a bleeding picket and were shown blood-covered patches which were claimed to be buckshot, size No. 2. Meanwhile, Canadian National Railways spokesmen have denied their police used firearms.

WINDOWS BROKEN BY UNKNOWN MAN

A frustrated drunk, with an aversion for fish and chips, vented his spleen on two innocent windows last night.

Denied entrance to the Fish and Chip Shop at the corner of Bridge and Coleman Sts. the man described as middle-aged dressed in brown, kicked in a window.

Apparently not satisfied he returned a few minutes later and bowled a brick through a window of the City Cleaners, housed in the same building. Police expect an arrest momentarily.

POLICE TO DEAL SEVERELY WITH BOYS THROWING STONES

"The time for warnings has stopped. From this point on these gangs of young hoodlums who are hurling stones and throwing firecrackers are going to be dealt with to the severest degree by the law. Numerous complaints have been received at the station and we are not going to fool with these boys. We have issued warnings, but from now on it will be action," Chief of Police Probert said today.

"And" he added, "we require parents to keep a watchful eye on their offspring. Sentiment has gone by the board and the youngsters are going to be published severely."

New Type of Radio Entertainment for Local Radio Listeners

A distinguished series of half-hour radio productions presenting the world's great operettas and sung in English will be brought to Quinte district radio listeners by Bill Beline over radio station CJBQ operating this Sunday evening at 6:00 p.m. "Opera for the People" is an artistic triumph that combines the "class" appeal of the world's great musical-dramas masterpieces with the "mass" appeal of other unbelievably popular forms of entertainment. For the opera lover, or for the listener who enjoys opera on a second thought, "Opera for the People" will bring fascinating and thrilling entertainment. "Opera for the People" presents Hector Crawford conducting the Australian Symphony Orchestra with an all-star cast of singers and actors.

Quinte Tennis League Hold Annual Meeting

Organized tennis in the Bay of Quinte district has gotten off to a fine start this year. The annual meeting of the Bay of Quinte Tennis League was held on Wednesday evening last at the Quinte Skating and Tennis Club headquarters. It was under the chairmanship of Coun. Hugh Ross of Point Anne who was the president of the league for 1940.

A constitution recommended by a committee formed at a previous meeting was adopted and a slate of officers elected for the coming season. The executive for 1940 will follow: president, Mrs. Digby, Quinte Tennis Club; vice president, Thorold Horwood, Point Anne; secretary treasurer, Marg. Williams, Quinte Tennis Club; executive members, Paul Jones, Trenton, and Vic Lancaster of St. Andrew's Church.

There are still vacancies for a few more teams for this year and if any team in the district wishes to enter they will certainly be welcome. It is hoped to commence the league schedule towards the end of May and the league is looking forward to as successful a season as they had last year.

A general meeting has been called for April 27th. It is to be held at the Quinte Skating and Tennis Club and representatives from all competing clubs should be present.

Only Prosperity In Sight For Canada -- Winters

Toronto, April 8 (CP)—Reconstruction Minister Winters predicted today Canada's depression is bolstered against the threat of a depression.

He told a meeting of some 500 Ontario Liberals Thursday night that old age pensions, family allowances, other social services and expenditures and proposed public works projects all contribute to economic security "in the future."

Questioned about the housing plan, Mr. Winters did not elaborate, except to say the federal cabinet would consider any new housing ideas the provinces may put forward.

Referring to a general election "within the next 18 months," he said the Liberal party would go to the polls with "one of the best records of any government in Canada."

Mr. Winters spoke at the final banquet of two days' gatherings of the Ontario Liberal Association, the Ontario Women's Liberal Association and the Ontario Young Liberals Association.

The main meeting's afternoon session Thursday passed a resolution calling on all provincial government departments to weed out Communists or subversives elements in their ranks.

Another resolution urged legislature sit meet twice a year instead of once as is the present custom.

Farquahar Oliver, provincial Liberal leader, promised repeal of the charitable gifts bill, given third reading in the "dying hours" Thursday, "at the first opportunity" if the Liberals are elected to govern Ontario.

Norman L. Matthews, a Newmarket lawyer, was elected President of the Association. His election speech called on the Ontario Liberals to "Disarm the Drew-Duplessis alliance." Mr. Matthews succeeds Norman Hiple of Preston.

The statement was declared: The five Scandinavian countries laid down this four-point statement of principles to the neutrals:

"A. The armed forces of the European participating countries should be developed on a co-ordinated basis in order that in the event of aggression they can operate in accordance with a common strategic plan.

Increased Military Effort

"B. They should be integrated so as to give the maximum efficiency with the minimum necessary expenditure of manpower, money and materials.

"C. Increased military effort, including increased arms production, should be consistent with the economic objectives and the maintenance of economic stability. Additional local currency credits should be met from non-inflationary sources.

"D. Arrangements concerning the transfer of military equipment and supplies for such production among the European participating countries should permit transfer insofar as possible, without cash, foreign exchange problems and without disrupting the international trade agreement scheme."

"In order to carry out a common program on the basis of above principles, there is urgent need for timely delivery of material and financial assistance."

Additional Sums

Unofficial estimates are that besides the programs now called for by the State Department calling for about $1,300,000,000 more to be paid to western Europe, an additional sum for help to non-European countries will be asked. Thus the total bill to be laid before Congress may approximate $2,000,000,000.

State Secretary Acheson revealed the proposals and declared that "they all emphasize certain basic principles of vital importance in assuring the United States that our country will get the maximum benefits to us as well as to the recipients."

Acheson said it was of "particular significance" that the Brussels-sort countries were already working together. Their co-operation, he said, "is a most encouraging development."

The most successful establishment of a co-operative defence program for the North Atlantic area."

President Truman told his press conference Thursday that he did not know yet when the arms program will be submitted to Congress. "At the present time," he said, "it is being worked out by the State Department. Budget Bureau and other Departments."

The program has been in the process of development since last Fall.

Preliminary indications were that the arms program will be between the United States and the other Atlantic-pact countries will be confined to set the order officially for the proposal to Congress. A somewhat similar procedure was followed in paving the way for the European recovery plan a year ago.

Belleville Golf Wins Major "A" Bowling Title

The Belleville Golf team, finishing in a blaze of glory not only won the championship of the Mid-Ontario "A" League last night, but also rolled the highest aggregate score for the season. The Golfers recorded a neat 3825 to win the second half of the schedule in addition, to the first, and the handsome John Labatt Trophy emblematic of the Major "A" League.

With the Golf team winning both halves of the schedule, no play-off was necessary, but next Wednesday the league will hold play-offs for prizes. All eight teams will participate in the post-league fixtures.

The veteran kegler Joe Legault, took the individual average honors with a score of 248. Lee Lennox was poetically breathing down Joe's neck with an average of 244. Lennox had the highest three-string score, however, with a 822 while Art Stewart and Jack Callaghan each rolled 400 to take the single honors.

High class bowling featured the final series of the league at the Bowl-O-Drome last night with four players topping the 800 mark in triples and several bettering the 700 total.

The scores:

Belleville Golf (7)	3825
Central Garage (7)	3566
Electronics (7)	3206
C.N.R. (0)	3200
Quinte Tennis (7)	3145
Lawn Bowlers (0)	3033
Northern Electric (4)	3000
Callaghan Ice (3)	3368

W. Macaulay, 277 (345-302); C. Merrick, 270 (308); E. Barlow 840 (351-305); J. Legault 777(3); Lennox 772; J. Callaghan 773; A. Miller 770; W. Fraser 735; L. Hopkins 727; H. Bidley 725.

Final standing:

Belleville Golf	75
Callaghan Ice	69
Central Clear	50
Northern Electric	48
York Trading	48
C. N. R.	31
Electronics	28
Lawn Bowlers	28

PICTON

X-Ray Equipment Will be Bought For Hospital

Picton—New X-ray equipment for use at Prince Edward County Memorial will be purchased. It was decided at a board meeting Wednesday night. Members of the medical profession also attended and endorsed the purchase. Dr. Hamilton, a special offer of equipment had been made by a firm, cost of $4,200. The present X-ray equipment has not been sufficient and many X-rays had to be taken at district hospitals.

To Resurface Streets

A contract for resurfacing streets of the town was let to the McFarland Construction Co., by council this week. Estimates submitted showed total cost of $30,-850. This does not include those streets which are part of the provincial highway and for the paving of which the highway department is expected to help.

In reporting on installation of the new sewage system, Mr. McFarland said nearly all the laterals in the pipe in place. He advised that additional cost of equipment for the disposal plant of $13,000 over the amount anticipated in his contract, along with many other extras, were the charges charged for, as he intended to carry out the work which are part of the provincial highway and for the paving of which the highway department is expected to help.

Labor Minister Mitchell said in Montreal Tuesday that the International Longshoremen's Association, C.I.O., will strike at 8 A.M. as is the S.I.U., had put pressure on the Seamen to join the S.I.U. and replace the "Communist-led" C.S.U.

Mitchell's statement, issued by S.I.U. spokesmen or police said that the Labor police violate by the S.I.U. came only from the S.I.U. Canadian. No police remained inaccessible to reporters on board the ships.

There were doubts whether R.C.M.P. had taken part in the fight to get the S.I.U. members aboard the three Canadian National Steamships Lady Rodney, Canadian Constructor and Canadian Ranger. Heavy police visible from the end of the pier were blue-uniformed Canadian National Railways police who have been guarding the docks since the strikers were removed by injunction a week ago.

Superintendent Joseph Howe of the R.C.M.P. said he was investigating charges that shotguns had been used and "one or more" men wounded.

The mounthie chief also said that warrants have been issued for two men who had been recognized as members of a group of a score or more men who boarded a freighter Wednesday and attacked Charles Caddell of Montreal and Harold Syversen of Sydney. Mr. Caddell and Syversen were treated in the hospital but later released.

80-Year Artist Has No Time For "Moderns"

A marvelous catch at Lake Timagami

London, April 8 (CP)—William Lee-Hankey, who at 80 is still one of Britain's more prolific artists, has no time for the so-called "moderns." He thinks they're part of a "stunt painting" phase that is on the way out.

And Lee-Hankey is somewhat of an authority. His oils and water-colors are known in many galleries of the world. He holds the chairmanship of the Royal Empire Art Council and the vice-presidency of the Royal Society of Painters in water colors.

"Students in Paris are already trying to get back to the more real standards," he said. "I think these moderns will come to the end of their tether."

Age is no deterrent to Lee-Hankey. He celebrated his 80th birthday March 29 working as usual in his Chelsea studio.

Mrs. Lee-Hankey, a former pupil of her husband, paints under the name of Edith M. Garner. But they have adjoining studios—"I could not work with anyone and neither could she."

DEATHS

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, April 8 — (CP) — Prices slipped slowly downwards in the mining session this week on the Toronto Stock Exchange today. Industrials weakened on widely scattered fractional losses and western oils continued in Thursday's easier vein. Golds and base metals were quietly lower.

Volume for the first three hours was 218,000 shares, about 238,000 shares less than Thursday's similar period.

Papers led the few industrials trading into lower ground. A few utilities were easier but changes were generally held to small fractions as trading slowed on the downgrade.

Consolidated Smelters moved upwards for a gain of 1-4 at 95½ in an otherwise weak base metal list.

Golds puttered along for minor fractional losses in senior producers and penny declines in juniors.

PRODUCE MARKET

Toronto, April 8 — (CP) — Produce prices on the spot market here today were quoted as follows:

Churning cream unchanged. No. 1, 58 cents f.o.b; 62 delivered. Butter prints, unchanged.

Supplies are short on the egg market and prices have advanced fractionally. County shippers quoted graded eggs, cases free: Grade A large 44, Grade A medium 43, Grade A pullet 41, Grade B 39-40, Grade C 35. Wholesale to retail: Grade A large 47-48; Grade A medium 46; Grade A pullet 43-44; Grade B 43-44; Grade C 38-39.

Butter solids are unchanged. Tenderable solids 58; some first grades reported sold at 56.

Mother Arraigned On Charge Murder Of Her Daughter

Rimouski, Que., April 8 (CP) — Mrs. Elise Plante Dubo of Matane Sur Mer, held criminally responsible by a coroner's jury for the shotgun death of her 18-year-old daughter, was arraigned here today on a charge of murder.

Mrs. Dube, who also left the coroner's inquest that the shooting of her daughter, Irene Dube, Thursday night was an accident, appeared before Judge Amedee Caron. Judge Caron fixed preliminary hearing for April 12.

The 40-year-old woman was detained as a material witness shortly after the shooting about 8 p.m. Tuesday in a summer bungalow in which she lived with two daughters.

Mrs. Dube admitted at the coroner's inquest the next day that she had fired the single shot with the 16-gauge gun.

She said she had merely wanted to throw a scare into two young nephews who were in the St. Lawrence Riverside bungalow at the time. Mrs. Dube said she thought the 18-year-old girl had moved into the line of fire by mischance.

Inspector Franks on Stand At Royal Commission Probe

The Royal Commission inquiry investigating allegations by Const. J. E. Keays will be completed on Monday.

This was the indication expressed this Friday when at the morning recess of the hearing Commission Counsel C. P. Hope stated he had no more witnesses to call. Keays recalled Sgt. Hartleib and Constable C. E. Siple to the stand.

Cons. Keays stated that on Monday he would call two or three witnesses with their examination expected to take four hours at most.

Late Thursday it was considered possible the hearing could be completed by the weekend adjournment at Friday noon but this was dispelled when cross-examination of Inspector Wilfrid Franks took up most of the morning session.

Thus far in the Royal Commission hearing which commenced on Feb. 7 approximately one and a quarter million words have been written into the transcript. A total of 40 witnesses have been called, and over 200 separate exhibits filed.

Written arguments will be submitted to Mr. Justice Mackay by Cons. J. E. Keays, Malcolm Robb, Crown Attorney Donnan and C. P. Hope, Commission Counsel.

Investigation of Death

Inspector Franks told of coming to Belleville to assist in the investigation. He said he had been the responsibility of Chief McGeschie at Frankford.

Feeling that the autopsy report by Dr. C. B. Waite was incomplete he had made arrangements for Dr. W. L. Robinson, Toronto, for a second post mortem.

He said on Dec. 11 he and Keays had gone to Toronto with exhibits which were to be examined by Miss Verda Vincent. Later he had stayed at Inspector Franks' home for the night.

"Did you make any charge to Const. Keays for the night's lodging?" asked Commission Counsel C. P. Hope.

"I did not," was the reply.

Here Keays' expense sheet for Dec. 1947 showing an item for $3 for lodging for Dec. 13, was produced.

Keays' diary was produced this indicating that Dr. Robinson following the second post mortem had ruled out suicide or accident as the cause of the girl's death.

Inspector Franks' Testimony

"That is definitely not so," said Inspector Franks. "Dr. Robinson at no time ruled out suicide or accident."

He said that Prof. L. Jocelyn Rogers had found no powder marks on the skin but had found powder in the underlying tissues.

Mr. Witness quoted Keays as having told him that Dr. Waite as a result of the first autopsy reported the hyoid bone had been broken. He said Keays suggested the girl may have been shot and then strangled.

Dr. Robinson had reported following the second post mortem that it was the thyroid cartilage not the hyoid bone which had been broken. It was thought possible Dr. Waite may have broken the organ in removing it.

Keays had previously asserted that during the Badgley investigation he had driven Inspector Franks to Toronto "to save his job."

"Do you recall how we got to Toronto on that occasion?" asked Keays.

"Yes", was the reply. "We went in my car. You were driving—at my request."

Keays suggested their car had been stopped on several occasions because of "demonstrations".

"Possibly because of the manner in which the car was being driven," said Inspector Franks. Keays' Report

Keays suggested that because Inspector Franks' "conditions" he had delayed in making his report on the Badgley case and that it was told by his superior officer that unless he got his report in by a certain date he was as well not make a report.

"That is a lie," Inspector Franks said. "Absolutely without foundation."

Keays asserted he was interested in the Badgley case only to the extent of his credibility.

He accused Mr. Hope of bringing Inspector Franks, Inspector Wonnacott and Sgt. Borland to testify only to discredit Keays.

Mr. Witness claimed all evidence relevant to the Badgley case had not been placed before the coroner's jury and said he had been prevented by Crown Attorney Donnan not to mention certain aspects.

"It is the bounden duty of a witness to tell all the truth and nothing but the truth," interrupted Commissioner Mackay, "and the crown attorney or anyone else cannot direct a witness to do otherwise."

Inspector C. F. Airey of Niagara Falls was briefly cross examined by Keays at the conclusion of evidence by Inspector Franks, while Sgt. Hartleib and Constable C. E. Siple were re-called by Keays just before the week-end adjournment.

Both officers were called to give evidence in connection with the Carefoote case with Sgt. Hartleib to complete his evidence on Monday.

A verbal battle between the Commissioner and counsel for Ontario, and one of his constables at times has charged administration of justice on the part of his superior, was ended here yesterday.

Police Commissioner W. H. Stringer, head of the Ontario Provincial Police, testified on the witness stand at the Royal Commission investigation before Mr. Justice Keiller Mackay and was questioned by Const. J. E. Keays.

Mr. Stringer had the occasional word for Keays referring to him as a "good" but "tactless" investigator. On several occasions he called the constable a liar when suggestions by Keays failed to meet with his agreement.

On one occasion when Keays had suggested that Police Commissioner Stringer had been responsible for some ten liquor charges not being proceeded with in Cornwall, this was heatedly denied.

"You lie, Keays, and you know it. I know nothing about liquor charges at Cornwall," replied Mr. Stringer.

Commission Counsel C. P. Hope interjected that he was not trying to put suppositions to bring "anybody" into court to prove Keays' charge against the police commissioner.

Wants Charge Cleaned Up

And Mr. Stringer was not willing to let the matter drop. "Keays has made a definite charge against me and I want it cleaned up," he said.

On suggestion by commissioner Mr. Justice Mackay, Keays changed his assertion to a question. "Did you have anything to do with the non-prosecution of liquor cases at Cornwall?"

"I did not," replied Mr. Stringer.

The police commissioner testified he knew nothing of an erasure on a police accident report in connection with the LeRoy Woods case. Keays claimed the erasure had been made after it arrived at police headquarters. He also said he had spotted errors in Keays's report his reference to alleged perjury on the part of Cpl. Irvine. Neither had he read Constable Keays' charge of Cpl. Irvine having falsified his diary. However, he said he had entered an investigation into the Woods matter to see if an inquiry under the Police Act was necessary.

Satisfied With Report of Inspector

The police commissioner said he had been satisfied with the report of Staff Inspector A. Moss in respect to the Woods matter — and he was still satisfied.

Keays scored one point with the respect to a complaint made in 1938 by A. MacGillivray, then a local member of the Ontario Legislature for Glengarry county.

The police commissioner said that Mr. MacGillivray's complaint about Keays had been investigated by Inspector T. W. Cousens of Perth and was found to be "groundless."

Keays charged that political interference had been responsible in 1944 for him being transferred back to Perth after only two days at Ottawa. He asked if the police commissioner had any control over political interference.

"Keays now, under the present government came in," was the reply.

Keays took exception to a statement by the witness that Keays had caused dissension in the provincial police ranks, asking if he knew of the 18 criminal investigations outside his detachment, there could be any dissension.

"There is no doubt about it, you were causing dissension," replied the witness.

Keays suggested that if there was dissension it was caused by resentment and jealousy on the part of other officers.

"That I cannot say," was the reply.

Keays asked the police commissioner whether Inspector Page had been transferred to Belleville for "crime." Mr. Stringer said there had been an inquiry into maladministration in Inspector Page's district at Kitchener with respect to a plowing match in Huron county. However, there had been no charges laid.

Keays suggested that if there of Inspector Page being transferred for cause he was not fit to command.

"I would not say that," replied the witness. "You can redeem yourself."

The police commissioner countered with the suggestion there were not many men with 12 years experience in the provincial police force with more commendations than Keays has received. He agree that Keays' word should be taken as the truth.

Says he Wouldn't Believe Keays After Inquiry

"I would not believe you, Keays under any circumstances after this inquiry," replied the witness.

On one occasion the police commissioner referred to Keays' dislike to take orders.

"You Keays, were running around Ross in this district and in other districts. You didn't want to take orders, you wanted to give them," he said.

The reference was made in connection with discussion of general orders sent out from headquarters regarding that detachment offices within district headquarters must cease. Constables here in Ross would take orders from the district inspector, the sergeant or corporal.

Keays' Claim

Keays claimed his status as a police officer had been taken away by Inspector Page following his transfer back to Belleville from Niagara Falls. He said he had not been allowed to take part in investigations or to use any department equipment.

The police commissioner pointed out, however, that Keays' orders were not to take part in investigations or to use department equipment unless instructed to do so by Inspector Page. "Those were orders," he said, "and you should have obeyed them."

Keays asked if Police Commissioner Stringer if he had ever been asked to resign from the Ontario Provincial Police. Mr. Stringer questioned the relevancy of the question.

Commissioner Mr. Justice Mackay ruled that once a person steps into the witness box he is a witness, whether he is the King, George or the humblest citizen.

Police Commissioner Stringer then stated he had been asked by Major-Gen. Williams, then police commissioner, to resign from the C.I.B. branch when the Hepburn government came into power in 1934. He said he refused to resign without a judicial inquiry.

He said he had been kept on the payroll and had been transferred to the fire marshal's department in 1935 by order in council.

Appointed in 1929

In 1929 the same government had retired the late General Williams as police commissioner and Commissioner Stringer given the position which he now holds.

Inspector C. F. Airey of Niagara Falls testified that when Keays had been transferred to his district in January 1946; in all his service with the department he had never been a man in such a pitiful condition.

"He was under terrible mental stress and I was afraid he might have a complete breakdown," he said.

He said Keays had the impression that he must bring to light some wrong.

He also told Keays this was without his jurisdiction but he offered assistance in having an investigation. "I did telephone to headquarters and Inspector Moss came to investigate," he said.

Mother Arraigned On Charge Murder Of Her Daughter

Rimouski, Que., April 8 (CP) — Mrs. Elise Plante Dubo of Matane Sur Mer, held criminally responsible by a coroner's jury for the shotgun death of her 18-year-old daughter, was arraigned here today on a charge of murder.

Mrs. Dube, who also left the coroner's inquest that the shooting of her daughter, Irene Dube, Thursday night was an accident, appeared before Judge Amedee Caron. Judge Caron fixed preliminary hearing for April 12.

The 40-year-old woman was detained as a material witness shortly after the shooting about 8 p.m. Tuesday in a summer bungalow in which she lived with two daughters.

Mrs. Dube admitted at the coroner's inquest the next day that she had fired the single shot with the 16-gauge gun.

She said she had merely wanted to throw a scare into two young nephews who were in the St. Lawrence Riverside bungalow at the time. Mrs. Dube said she thought the 18-year-old girl had moved into the line of fire by mischance.

STILL HARD LABOR

The sturdy British people who during the war had one of the great men of all time as their leader have still been bearing hardships since the coming of peace. Slowly rationing is disappearing in the Motherland of the British Commonwealth but the way is not yet made a path of roses, as the Chancellor of the Exchequer made clear in presenting his budget the other day. Austerity is still the program of the British people. There is little or no relief in taxation and he told the Commons that there would be higher prices for some articles of food such as cheese, butter, margarine and meat. This formed one of the harshest features of the budget.

Britain is going to cut down on the money paid by the treasury in subsidies to hold down the prices of the goods which are rationed.

One of the points of reduction was the cut of the tax on beer one and two-third cents a pint.

At the same time he advised the people that the nation must have continued U. S. aid during the coming year.

Over all Sir Stafford Cripps saw and declared the situation financially of the British people was "far healthier" than it had been.

The sturdiness of the British people in bearing the post-war burdens is unchanged. They are bearing them as they did the burdens of the long Second World War. They are the same people who were in the grip of the struggle in 1940 given the highest praise ever bestowed upon any nation, when Mr. Churchill spoke in graphic words of their courage and faith in right and justice.

USING THE SUN'S RAYS

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which only a week ago became the centre of the world's attention because Winston Churchill was speaking on technology and life and referred to present day world conditions, is in the limelight for another reason too — it has been experimenting in solar heating as a practical means of heating houses and other buildings. This immense source of energy, the sun, by which all life that does exist is an endurance of heat and if man can hitch his house to the sunlight and sun's heat he will have solved another problem, for the sun can not be classed as something that is being depleted, as one speaks of soil depletion. Just now man is wondering about the possibility of soil depletion and last week Mr. Churchill referred to that question, when he spoke of the "last crust." If man can heat homes by the sun's heat in a practical way the world will be able to support a much larger population.

M.I.T. has been giving thought to the possibilities of the uses of the sun's light for heating human habitations and carrying on the industries of man across the earth. Dr. Maria Telkes is using a five-room house some miles from Boston as a laboratory. This house has the living room, the kitchen, two bedrooms and bath on one floor while the roof is to accommodate the sun's rays. A solar heat collector is upstairs in this house.

This scientist is confident that the house can be made practicable for general use and looks for advance in the next ten years similar to the early advance in the use of motorcars and car construction.

A WORD FOR ENGLISH SPARROW

An appeal to recognize the English sparrow is made in the Indianapolis Star for one reason at least, that he "keeps us company through the long dark months when we were abandoned by our feathered friends." Instead, says the Star, the sparrow gets nothing but the blame that he is a nuisance. The newspaper lists his faults as including his preference for popular places, and the fact that he eats buds and fruits, carries germs and scares away birds with brighter and gayer plumage and more lyrical voices, and that he is a nuisance around buildings.

But the Indianapolis editor thinks there is compensation, the sparrow eats bugs and worms and other living things. But most of all he sees in the little fellow the quality of bravery, friendliness, good cheer and industry.

In spring he is here to welcome the birds returning from their winter quarters in the deep south. What does he think of the newcomers and what do the robins and the other returning birds think of the bird which does no hibernate?

THE FATHER BUSINESS

The father business is the trade
By which tomorrow's men are made.
If pride and peace of mind he'd earn,
There's much a father has to learn.
Because, beneath the good Lord's plan
It takes a man to shape a man.

Instruction at the first begins
With bottles, bibs and safety pins;
The various cries for certain pains,
And when the knack for these he gains,
Later will come the duties new
The Lord is trusting him to do.

There are examples to be set
The boy will see, and not forget.
A father has to learn the way
To guide his son from day to day,
To show him both by word and might
How men, in all that's best, would fight.

The father business has no chime
Or whistle sounding closing time;
No measured hours; by day and night
Fathers must labor for the right,
To teach what strangers seldom can.
It takes a man to build a man.

Mr. S. J. Fisher of Campbellford has purchased the W. P. Hudson Fire Insurance Agency here and will take up residence in the city shortly.

Mrs. John Neale and her nephew, Mr. George Watkin, returned home today from England where they spent an enjoyable time visiting relatives.

Mr. A. Drummond, who has been in the employ of the Dominion Home here for some time has left on a visit to the Old Country.

Mrs. J. Kithcon, Forin Street and Mrs. J. H. Sharp, Hillside Street, have left to attend the Provincial meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church which is meeting in Guelph.

40 YEARS AGO

- April 8th, 1909

The damage done in this section of the country by the terrific wind storm which prevailed yesterday will amount to thousands of dollars. It is impossible, as yet, to ascertain the loss or the full details of the havoc wrought. In Thurlow township seven barns were unroofed and other barns were shifted from foundations. In many places rail fences were blown down and trees and trees were badly damaged. About forty feet of the sidewalk on Holloway Street, west of the church, was carried into the road. On the eastern end of the city fences were blown down and trees damaged. A fierce storm raged on the bay and huge waves washed over the docks. The schooner Suffel drifted from her moorings near the Grand Junction docks and was secured with much difficulty. The steamer D. Preman broke away from Allen's dock and drifted out into the mouth of the bay. At present she is resting upon one of the piers formerly used for the fishing tug from Ameliasburg. Some damage was also done to the schooner Dundee and the steamer Salsberry.

Mr. Thomas Nicholson has returned to Toronto after visiting his mother in this city.

Mr. Hall, of Campbellford is preparing to leave Colborne and take up residence in this city.

THE PACKSACK

OF GREGORY CLARK

An old schoolmate of mine practised law for nearly twenty years. And all of a sudden, he dropped his law practise flat and entered the insurance business.

For a while, some of us thought he must have got himself into trouble and had been obliged to forfeit the practise of law. When he heard this, he made it a point to tell all his old friends the truth.

"For twenty years," he explained, "my life, day and night, spring, summer, autumn and winter, consisted of unfinished business. Now, at 5 p.m., every day, my business is finished and I go home free in mind and heart.

"In the law profession, nothing is ever ended. Your hands, your arms, your pockets are filled with business all in a state of flux. Pleading in court days; appeals in thirty days. You must not forget, in the midst of one thing, you suddenly recollect that you must immediately put in an appearance in regard to something else. The telephone rings incessantly. Clients in bodily want to come down town; they are ordered to come to the house to see them. Your outer office is always full of people waiting. The only people you meet are jealous, worried or on the make. They are either indignant or enraged. Doctors get sick of their patients, but at least they are pitiful. Lawyers can grow awfully tired of healthy people. A lawyer who rises to the top of his profession must be a pitiful soul to have survived it all. All great lawyers are automatically great public servants in the best sense of the words.

"But as for me," smiled the insurance man," I got unutterably sick and tired of a business that was forever unfinished. Now, my business is straight ahead. Each day is so much ground to cover. When it is covered, I'm through. I go home a happy, carefree man."

American Brass Not Dictating To Dominion

Edmonton, April 8 — (CP) — Lt.-Gen. Charles Foulkes, chief of the Canadian General Staff, said in an interview Thursday that American "high brass" is not dictating to Canada in military matters.

"We are carrying on relations with the American military leaders in the same cordial manner that prevailed between Canada and the United States during the war," he said.

The Chief of Staff was commenting on a report from Vancouver Tuesday in which Andrew D. MacLean of Toronto, president of Hugh C. MacLean publications, was quoted as saying that top U.S. military leaders are "beginning to push their neighbors around."

Lt.-Gen. Foulkes arrived in Edmonton from Saskatoon to address the Edmonton branch of the Military Institute.

Mackenzie's Column: Stafford Cripps Wins Sobriquet Iron Chancellor

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press News Analyst)

Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Stafford Cripps, who has won the sobriquet of the "Iron Chancellor" because of his insistence on national austerity, has a reasonable right to look at Gibraltar—impervious to storms.

Again this doughty guardian of John Bull's purse strings has dared to face a critical House of Commons and present a budget which means an even higher cost of living, with only minor tax relief.

The strain on the British public has been so tough that even the left wing of Sir Stafford's own Labor party has been clamoring for easement. But, Sir Stafford, austere of mien as well as of thought, has clung to the course that has been chosen as the only possible route to a balanced national budget. He hopes to achieve this by 1942 when Marshall-plan aid is due to terminate.

Gauge of Daring

A gauge of the government's daring may be had in the fact that Britain is to have a general election next year. At that time the people will pass judgment on Sir Stafford's first budget after his regime and decide whether it is to continue in power or be scrapped.

In any event, the government reports improvement in the general economic position. Production is at a high level, wages are on a level, and business is reported improving.

Taxable Profit

The taxation in Britain is tough. The average worker pays about 15 per cent if single and 10 if married. But the income tax is standard, roughly speaking, is 50 per cent of the profit. That's the sky with big incomes. Thus the tax is slanted in the direction of the small earner rather than those of working folk.

Now, instead of going far back of the Socialist regime, taxation has been so levied as to make it virtually impossible for the individual to salvage more than £5,000 ($20,000) a year. As a result, Sir Stafford stated last December that the number of persons income over that sum in the whole country was estimated at 2,250, whereas before the war there were 11,000.

Naturally the nobility has been hard hit. Approos of this it is announced that the Lord of Bath is showing his house furnishings open to tourists who will pay the admission price. It is to be sent where Queen Elizabeth and other famous royalty were entertained and 2,500 persons a day are currently Norman is going to organize Mediterranean tours for Americans, and says he doesn't mind calling anyone "Sir" if paid for it.

India has at present 100,025,000 people under a system of controlled distribution of food grains.

Norman Matthews New President Liberal Assoc.

Toronto, April 8 — (CP) — The Ontario Liberal Association Thursday called for an investigation of all provincial governmental departments to find any Communists or subversive elements employed there.

In the closing sessions of the two-day annual convention, the majority, more than 600 delegates approved without discussion a resolution calling for such investigation.

The resolution was presented by Alex Jeffery, president of the London Liberal Association.

Mr. Jeffery, candidate for the London federal riding, said in an interview after the meeting that the resolution was two-fold: directed at greater economy in the provincial public service and at "ferreting out any subversive elements."

He was not out either he or his association suspected there were any unknown subversive elements in the provincial public service.

A second undebated resolution, also presented by the London association, recommended that the provincial legislature meet twice annually "to reduce the tendency of the cabinet to carry on affairs without reference to the wishes of the people" during the full 10½ months of each year.

Norman L. Matthews, a Newmarket lawyer, was elected president of the association. He succeeds Norman Hipel of Preston.

In an address after his election, Mr. Matthews charged the Ontario Liberal party with the responsibility of "smashing the Drew-Duplessis alliance."

"I think the people of Ontario are ready to throw off the two-faced activities of what is called 'Drew-Piesis'."

Party Pledged to Repeal

At the afternoon session opening, Farquhar Oliver, provincial Liberal leader, pledged his party would repeal "the infamous Bill 80 which was given third reading by the Drew Government."

Mr. Oliver said "The Liberals will take this opportunity to repeal this iniquitous legislation."

During the convention, other major resolutions which were approved urged:

1. Provision be made to be taken regarding the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes seaway and power project.

2. The present federal gasoline tax be used for highways through the Trans-Canada Highway."

3. The Dominion government extend concessions now allowed the precious metals industries, to the base metals industries permitting them to get back a portion of their income taxes also it is taxed.

4. The federal minister of justice to review existing law "as it applies to the questioning of people under arrest."

5. Reduction of the provincial tax on gasoline.

6. Increase of old-age pensions without the means test.

UNEMPLOYMENT DOWN

Edmonton — (CP) — The number of unemployed persons in Edmonton has shown the first seasonal decline, At the last check, 4,176 persons were unemployed, a decrease of 225 persons from the previous week.

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

THAT HEAVEN OF YOURS

How much of Heaven do we want? Is it what we think we would say, as we decide to create it? Perhaps, if we create a great ideal of our own Heaven here and now, we are sure to leave a big area of it behind when our mortal life is set aside.

Matthew Arnold, the Spanish philosopher, said: "This world is merely a school in which it is of no value, but with Heaven in front of us it becomes much."

Therefore, we would be happy, healthy, successful, let us keep Heaven in front of us, and make it a fact through good deeds, kindness, and an ever-expanding outlook. Let us trample the petty things under foot. Let us abhor ingratitude, be ever generous and tolerant minded.

In that remarkable book "Reeds," long out of print because it did not sell, Edith Sumner Kelley depicted a beautiful character in the form of a little child. She was born into a sordid, poverty-stricken home. But she created a Heaven for herself out of every flower, every singing bird, and every earth inhabitant that she could attract. And that is the kind of Heaven that W. H. Hudson found when he looked upon "The Return of the Chiffchaff," and John Muir had in mind as he wrote about the "Yosemite." Then we have the beauty of the glacier. Fabre's Heaven was the insect world.

Your Heaven, mine, is in the light, the cheer, and the hope that we broadcast, no matter how humble our origin or how limited our sphere of influence may be. Heaven's horizon may be made endless. It is written that "in the beginning God created the Heaven and the Earth." One could not exist without the other. They supplement each other. Each, therefore, may be discoverable by any of us. Both are our heritage.

NEVER MIND YOUR HAT, PRETTY BOY

A steady increasing number of boys and men who will have their hair are getting into the habit of going bareheaded whenever they find it convenient or comfortable to do so.

Through most of the year and on most occasions it is comfortable to go without a lid. In extreme cold weather, in rainy weather or when one is exposed to strong sunlight it is generally more comfortable to wear suitable head covering.

To the best of my knowledge there is no particular benefit to health in the habit of baldness. On the other hand I think the pseudo-scientific warnings about possible damage to the brain, it any, by ultraviolet rays in strong sunlight if you wear no hat is ludicrous. Of course sunburn of the scalp is not a pleasant experience, so it is a good rule to wear a hat if you are in doubt about the sensitivity of your scalp to sunburn.

The nudiness promoting "literature" distributed, I suppose, by interests in the hat business, the work of the Ultra-Violet Ray expert of the U. S. Army Research and Development Group are presented to bolster the astonishing argument that children and youths who wear hats are more comfortable than those who choose to go hatless. Illustrations accompanying this assertion show two boys building a snow man—they wear jackets and mittens but no cap; and a full-grown youth skiing—he wears shirt-sleeves, mittens but no hat. "The winter sportsman who goes hatless," the battery propaganda tell us, "is being hardy—he's just being silly."

Hardy, my eye.

Silly, what's nearby, timid, without character and perhaps effeminate would be more apt words, disarranged, more fittingly applies to the person who never, never goes without a hat.

My best advice to boys and men, with or without hair, is this: The less you wear in any circumstances, the better you will be in your own comfort and the conventions.

Dille Co.)

Strength for the Day

DR. EARL L. DOUGLASS

SOME CAUSE FOR OPTIMISM

People who hold high ideals for themselves and the world are sometimes tempted to discourage themselves and their contemporaries because of the pessimistic philosophy the approach of catastrophe. They are prone to feel that we are having a postwar moral decline. Some people say and this is not the beginning of a declension which will go down to lower depths than the world has ever known before.

But such pessimistic outlook is not justified. Right at this present moment there are groups of people in this and other countries manifesting a religious zeal greater than anything that has been known in recent generations. There is a way in which the general run of men and women are thinking more about religion today than ever before. Their thinking is chaotic and sometimes fantastic, but at least they are discussing spiritual matters some thought.

Even some of the greatest scientists are beginning to say that scientific discoveries are leading in the direction of a greater knowledge of things spiritual. We appear almost to have touched the hem of God's garment in the realm of nature and energy. Shall we use it to kill ourselves or to create a better world? That is a matter of the most important question confronting humanity today.

ROOTS DON'T LIKE THIS SEWER PIPE

Have you noticed how many times the roots of trees have made a white pipe for conveying sewage to the street sewer or septic tank? This white pipe is called Transite—an asbestos-cement house sewer pipe made by Johns-Manville.

Transite was designed to minimize stopped-up sewer lines caused by tree roots forcing their way into pipe joints. It has a special factory-made "Tite-Joint" which keeps the line tight and helps avoid troublesome, costly stoppages.

J-M Transite House Connection Pipe offers many more advantages. It is tough and strong, yet light and easy to handle. And, its long ten foot lengths make it easy to lay with minimum disturbance to property. For complete facts on Transite House Connection Pipe, write Johns-Manville, 199 Bay St., Toronto.

Spirited Clash

The pension question produced a spirited clash involved Chairman Heath, Mr. Macdonald, who withdrew a $6,500,000 item on pensions administration, in order to speed the big appropriations bill yesterday with the CCF.

C.C.F. speakers were critical of the withdrawal, terming it a device to shut off debate, though Mr. Martin declared they would have plenty of chance to talk pensions during the budget debate.

But a little later, under persistent questioning from Donald Fleming (PC-Toronto Eglinton), none of the ministers would say whether or not this meant the debate would be allowed to run its full course.

Mr. Fleming's obvious point was an attempt to establish whether or not parliament would be dissolved early for a general election. It got nowhere.

If the debate ends, Progressive Conservative members criticized Defence Minister Claxton and two of them repeated an earlier suggestion of George Drew Progressive Conservative leader that Mr. Claxton resign unless conditions soon improved.

Both war veterans, Wing Cmdr. Lennox Skey (PC — Toronto Trinity) and Lt.-Col. Alan Cockeram said the minister should resign if he could not do the job of strengthening the forces and give parliament more defence information.

Admits Aircraft in Storage

Lt.-Col. Cockeram quoted from Wednesday's Toronto Telegram which told of five North Star aircraft in storage at the Downsview Airport near Toronto. The newspaper, referring to the aircraft as the "mothball" fleet, had told how the planes were gathering cobwebs and birds' nests.

He recalled how Mr. Claxton had denied Monday that any North Stars were in storage and how he had amended his statement yesterday when he admitted there were aircraft in storage.

Col. Cockeram said there was no doubt that the minister stood condemned either for his "ignorance" or for his "refusal" to treat members with candor, frankness and honesty. He also urged that Mr. Claxton resign.

Claxton non-committal

Suggestion that Canada take the lead in initiating a Pacific defence pact was dropped into the debate by Capt. Howard Green (PC—Vancouver South), but Mr. Claxton was non-committal on the government's attitude towards such a proposal.

The minister indicated there was no significance as regards a Pacific pact in the coming visit to Ottawa of Sir Frederick Shedden, Secretary of the Australian Defence Department. That was to be an exchange of views on matters of organization and administration, rather than policy.

In reply to criticism about the armed forces, Mr. Claxton said Canada had made as much progress as any other country in the coordination and unification of her armed forces.

He declared the services had been completely built; best two months of recruiting since the war. If that continued, would be enough men to build the forces up to required strength.

48,000 In Active Force

He reported there now were 48,000 men in the active force and 40,000 in the reserve. This organized with 75,000 in Britain's Territorial forces.

Wing Cmdr. Skey called on the government for a stronger force of fighter planes as a first line of defence.

At his night session, the Commons turned to a wide field of subjects as it ran through supplementary estimates for several departments.

It heard Trade Minister Howe say he is in virtual challenge to the opposition to try to defeat the government on an appropriation on which the Progressive Conservatives challenged the government's legal rights. However, the item went through without a formal vote.

It was an $850,000 item to cover an advance to the George T. Davie Shipbuilding and Repair Co., Lauzon, Que., to enable it to complete vessels ordered by China. Progressive Conservatives contended the money had been expended without legislative authority.

Mr. Howe also told the chamber that building materials produced with the aid of the government's loan guarantees had been directed into priority housing.

To Tighten Regulations

Transport Minister Chevrier said his department is considering tightening regulations concerning wireless operations on ships, to provide for greater safety at sea.

The Transport Minister said consideration is being given also to requests for a canal across the Isthmus of Chignecto at the Nova Scotia-New Brunswick border, but he did not know what would be done eventually.

Another announcement from the Minister was that the Board of Transport Commissioners would continue the government-ordered inquiry aimed at levelling regional inequalities in the freight-rate structure, despite the coming of another investigation by the new Royal Commission on Transport.

During a brief stormy scrap over the retirement of an election returning officer, John R. MacNicol (PC-Toronto Davenport) accused acting State Secretary Gibson for "gross incompetence" and called for his resignation. Mr. MacNicol's anger arose from the retirement, because of age, of the returning officer in his constituency.

Gordon Graydon (PC-Peel) got no information when he asked when the government will call elections for the seven vacant seats in the new Province of Newfoundland.

8-WEEK SESSION

Kennon Park (CCF-Toronto Dovercourt), his sponsor, declined to allow the bill to "hang fire" for a year and it was given a 90-day hoist on Mr. Kennedy's motion.

The House defeated a motion by J. G. Brown Lib.-Waterloo North) providing industrial workers with two weeks' vacation with pay after two years' employment. Present legislation provides for one week after one year.

The House also defeated a motion by C. H. Millard (CCF-York West) to give second reading to a bill providing that in areas where there are no liquor stores or licensed premises that none be permitted without a vote of the residents.

Legislature clerks said the 146 bills passed this session are more than were passed at any session since Confederation.

Still on the order paper are more than a dozen opposition bills and motions, most of which are expected to be killed by prorogation.

Seven bills — including the Canada Evidence Act — received assent today.

Mr. Brown told the legislature increased holidays would not be of any benefit to factory employees who would benefit from improved lives of employees.

Adjourned Debate

The House Wednesday adjourned debate on second reading of a bill moved by Kennon Park (CCF-Dovercourt) to increase holidays to two weeks after only one year's employment. Agency legislation provides for one week's holiday after one year.

Mr. Park said Thursday that although the Liberal bill "does not go far enough" he would support it.

Labor Minister Daley said he believed "we have gone sufficiently far."

T. R. Salsberg (Lab. Prog.-Toronto St. Andrew) said Mr. Daley was "pleading for industry."

Each of the parties in the House had a bill, asking for two weeks holidays with pay. Labor organizations had made similar demands.

"The overwhelming majority of people in the province are in favor of, or at two weeks vacation".

J. L. Dowling (CCF-Hamilton East) said: "Tremendous sums are being spent to build picnic grounds in Northern Ontario and highways and the majority of the people who were able to use them were from the United States."

TRAFFIC TIED UP

Moncton, N.B., April 7 (CP) — Derailment of the locomotive of an east-bound freight train at Foliegh Lake, N.S., Wednesday tied up traffic on the main line between Moncton and Halifax for several hours, Canadian National Railway officials said here Wednesday night. The train crew escaped injury in the run-off and the line was cleared late Wednesday afternoon.

EARLY NILE BOATS

In pre-dynastic times, boats with oars and square sails were the principal means of transport in the Nile Valley.

Helicopter Used To View Damage Of Two Freighters

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., April 8 — (CP) — The first two accidents to take place this season in this area brought a helicopter into use and blocked downbound traffic through the busy Soo Locks canal.

Around 80 vessels dropped anchor above and below the locks which take shipping past the rocky rapids. St. Mary's River. Rapids. They were waiting until rescuing crew from the freighter, Benson Ford, aground at her bow end at the lower end of Hay Lake 15 miles south of here. Her stern lay swung across the narrow downbound shipping channel, at the Neebish cut, blocking all traffic.

The helicopter came into use Wednesday in survey damage on the freighter Fort Wildoc of the Paterson Steamship Line of Fort William. She collided head — on with the freighter E. McAlpine of the Brown Steamship Company of Buffalo, some 43 miles above Neebish Island at Lake Superior.

The United States Coast Guard ice-breaker, Mackinaw, went to the scene after the collision was reported in the fog. She carried a helicopter which took off and landed on the Fort Wildoc's deck to survey the damage. It was found the vessel could be towed to port here but poor visibility delayed the task.

Crew on the Fort Wildoc's iron ore will be lightened to make a complete examination of damage. Preliminary survey showed she suffered a long gash in her prow five feet below the waterline. Her forward compartments were sealed off and she remained afloat.

The Mackinaw reported by radio that none of the Fort Wildoc's crew was injured.

The McAlpine, less badly damaged, went on to Fort William. She was travelling light.

Two tugs and a Coast Guard cutter were also on the distressed Benson Ford, owned by the Fort Motor Company. She went aground Thursday. The lighter, Newman, went to the scene to remove part of her cargo.

UNUSUAL BIRTH

Gallano Island, B. C. — (CP) — A ewe gave birth to quadruplets on the farm of Darrell Sinclair here. All are thriving. Agriculturists said the quadruplets to a ewe were "quite unusual."

Two Bombers Search Carrier And Destroyers

Greenwood, N. S., April 8 (CP) — Two Lancaster bombers droned over 2,000 square miles of Atlantic sea-coast Thursday in a hunt for the aircraft carrier Magnificent and two escorting destroyers.

The search was a small — scale exercise compared with the one which had been planned. Wednesday's operation against the carrier was cancelled because of bad weather — sleet, rain, and hurricane-force winds among other things.

Crews of this R. C. A. F. base in the heart of the Annapolis Valley were disappointed that the full-scale "attack" did not come off, but two planes went up on the search exercise. A third was diverted to the search for two missing boats of the Nova Scotia coast.

One of the destroyers — either Haida or Nootka — was spotted while the two Lancs were on their way to the search area, about 300 miles south of Halifax. Magnificent, rolling north to Halifax after her Caribbean trials, was sighted through the haze about two hours later.

Dogging at the heels of the Magnificent was the second destroyer. Fighter aircraft previously had taken off from the flat-top for their land base at Halifax and Magnificent's decks were empty.

POLICE ABSOLVED

Pembroke, April 7 (CP) — A coroner's jury has absolved Pembroke police from any responsibility in connection with the death March 27 of Thomas Taylor of Ottawa. The man had come to the police station March 26 and requested accommodation for that night. In the morning his body was found hanging in the cells.

WEDDINGS

DUBY—ASSELSTINE

A quiet wedding was recently celebrated at the Tabernacle Cemetery Church Street, Belleville, when Barbara June, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Asselstine, Belleville, was united in marriage to Arthur Edward Duby, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Duby, of 28 Hillcrest Avenue. The Rev. J. R. Shaw officiated.

The bride was charming in a hunter's blue costume, with black accessories, and wore a corsage of yellow chatelaine roses. She was attended by Mrs. Bill Hannon, Belleville, as bridesmaid, who wore a navy dress with navy accessories, and corsage of red roses.

Mr. Harry Abbott, Jr., of Toronto, was groomsman.

Later a quiet reception was held at the Club Room, Odeon.

The young couple will reside in Belleville.

Rebekahs Enjoy Visit of D.D.P. To Local Lodge

Mrs. Ethel Duffin, Laurel Rebekah Lodge, Stirling, was the guest of Quinte Rebekah Lodge on Tuesday evening when she made her official visit as District Deputy President.

After the opening ceremonies she was escorted through a Guard of Honor and introduced by Mrs. Dorothy Harwood, J.P.N.G. Mr. Geo. Kerr, P.G.P., was also escorted in and introduced by Mrs. Jennie Redner P.N.G.

The Noble Grand, Mrs. Elizabeth Nokes, welcomed these distinguished guests and they were then escorted to seats of honor at her right and left. Other guests welcomed were from Stirling, Brookville, Frankford and Victoria, B.C.

The members on the Guard of Honor were, Mrs. Verna Summers, Mrs. Verna Oliphant, Mrs. Marjorie Large, Mrs. Hale Brenton, Mrs. Margaret Govier, and Mrs. Mary Jordan.

During the meeting Mrs. Duffin was presented with a gift from the lodge by Mrs. Dorothy Harwood and Mrs. Eva Turvey, P.D.D.P. Mrs. Duffin very graciously thanked the members for their gift and also for their kindness to her throughout the year. She then gave a short instructive and interesting address.

Mr. Kerr also gave a very inspiring talk.

After lodge very delicious refreshments were served under the commemership of Mrs. Georgina Charlton and Mrs. Margaret Jackson, assisted by Mrs. Ethel Wright with Mrs Catherine Seal pouring tea.

Visit Paid Brighton Lodge By Rebekahs

On Monday evening a number of members from Quintena Rebekah Lodge visited Brighton Lodge, Brighton, and conferred the Rebekah Legree on a class of candidates.

Members from Picton, Cobourg and Trenton lodges were also present and took part in the evening's activities. Macphella lodge of Picton, illustrated the proper procedure when balloting.

The Duke of Kent lodge, Cobourg, graced the Charter and Quinte Queen lodge, Trenton, exemplified a Memorial ceremony.

The draping of the Charter and the Memorial were both very beautiful and impressive.

At the close of the meeting a very sumptuous banquet was served by the Brighton Sisters.

A BIRTHDAY PRESENT FROM THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH

When Their Royal Highness the Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh visited a new flat in Manchester, recently, they met the Egerton family, and it happened to be the eighth birthday of little Ann Egerton, who asked for the royal couple's autographs. Smilingly the Duke replied that they were not permitted to give autographs, but that they could regard the book as a 'visitors' book, and would then be glad to sign. They received a little dog mascot for the infant Prince Charles, which the Duke accepted, adding that he would certainly see that his son received it. Here Ann, before going to sleep, just had to have another look at the treasured signature in her book.—Central Press Canadian

Princess Margaret Getting Experience at First Hand

BY CARTER L. DAVIDSON

London, April 8 (AP) — The world and Princess Margaret are getting acquainted. Both seem downright impressed.

The younger daughter of the King is in this year. She has had tutoring that equals schooling through the first year of college. Here she's out to see for herself what makes things tick.

Already she has listened to debates in the House of Peries, met attending sessions of juvenile and criminal court, visited several children's homes, toured shipyards and factories and watched the publication of a London daily newspaper.

There are more such tours to come.

Wherever the pretty young Princess appears, crowds of loyal Britons gather and cheer her. She smiles back, and laughs at the traffic policeman trying to unravel the snarls her appearance inevitably causes.

Buckingham Palace says only "the Princess is getting experience at first hand of various aspects of the national life to fit her manner assisted by various secretaries.

Plainfield.—The Moults' Neighbors' Aid held a dinner and quilting at the home of Mrs. E. W. Shannon with seventeen members and three visitors present.

The meeting was called to order by the President, Mrs. Russel Glass, and roll call and minutes of former meeting were read by Mrs. Arthur Shannon, secretary-treasurer.

Business was then discussed—serving of meat at dinner by hostess was finally decided on, as not being done from now on.

Mrs. Murney Wilson agreed to act as 2nd vice president.

Entertainment for members to be held in school on April 28, to take form of progressive euchre —prizes to be purchased and refreshments served.

Membership fee of 25c to be charged for the coming year to all who would like to belong.

The next meeting is to be held at the home of Mrs. Lorne Mackenzie.

A vote of thanks was moved by Mrs. Blake Parks, and seconded by Mrs. John Boldrick, to the hostess for the use of her home after which the meeting adjourned.

Amount for dinner $6.06, Mrs. G. Hunt for quilt, $1.00, total proceeds $7.06.

WMS Presbyterial Meets In Trenton

The Twenty-fourth Annual Meeting of the Belleville Presbyterial of the Women's Missionary Society of the United Church of Canada was held in King Street United Church, Trenton, on Wednesday.

The theme of the conference was "Advance, O Church of God, Advance". Guest speakers were Mrs. Roger Self, Dominion President of the Women's Missionary Society, and Miss Margaret Wrong of West China.

On Tuesday evening, April 8, at 8.30 a supper meeting was held for the Executive of the Presbyterial (including presidents of Afternoon and Evening Auxiliaries) and the Nominating Committee. Immediately following the supper they met with Mrs. Self and Miss Brown to discuss ways and means of developing the Advance program in the Presbyterial.

Registration for Presbyterial began at 10.00 Wednesday and the opening devotional was conducted by Mrs. A. V. Empey, at 9.30.

Highlights of the morning session were an address by Miss Margaret Brown on "Literature and the Crisis in China".

"Findings on Christian Stewardship" in panel discussion conducted by Mrs. R. D. P. Dickson assisted by Mrs. P. MacMullen and Miss F. Downs.

"Story of the Year" was presented by Mrs. S. Homan, corresponding secretary, in a novel

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Akey and her assistants for their kind hospitality, which brought a most enjoyable evening to a close.

Rabbi Babb Speaks To AYPA

"What is a Jew". This question was answered by Rabbi A. M. Babb at a joint meeting of the Christ Church Junior and Senior AYPA groups.

Rabbi Babb believes racial prejudice is the result of lack of knowledge. "We do not take the trouble to get to know each other and openly discuss our differences."

"A Jew believes in God," Jewish religion is based on the Old Testament and the "Talmud, writings of ancient sages. Between prayers are much like those of the Christian religion. A Jew must pray three times daily —morning, afternoon and evening.

In the synagogue the Rabbi, wearing his hat, zuniet, and prayer shawl, leads the congregation in prayer. During the service both men and women have their heads covered. And the men and women are segregated.

Rabbi Babb then explained in detail the dietary law of the Jew and described the inside of a synagogue. It is the belief of a Jew that God is father and all men His children. The laws of the Jewish religion are in two parts —those relating to man and God and those relating to man and his neighbor. No law is valid when human life is at stake and the law of the country is the law of the Jew.

Judaism is the mother religion; Christianity the daughter religion. All religions are but divisions of the same destination.

Rabbi Babb was introduced by Rev. J. Grant Sparling, close friend and former superior of the speaker in the service. Both were

ADVICE to the LOVELORN

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

This girl needs advice on many things

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 13 and like a boy very much. He is 17. We had been going together a short time when I had an affair with another boy. My boy friend found out and stopped going with me, because he said I was not true. I like the boy very much, and would do anything to get him back.

"Jilted"

Dear "Jilted":

I think you need advice about a good many more important things than merely how to get any boy to go with you again. If no one has told you anything about how a girl of your age should behave, and why it is important for her to have some standards of wise conduct, then I think you had better find someone right away with whom you can talk these things over. I am afraid that if you do not, you may get into very much more serious trouble than losing a boy friend.

This 17-year-old boy, however, seems to have decent standards himself, and perhaps he might be a person who could help you get back. But you're evidently going to have to show him you know how to behave before you can be sure about seeing you.

About the only way I see that you might learn to be the kind of girl you should be is to have the right friends. Perhaps you are going with the wrong ones now.

Would you like to write me a longer letter and tell me about your home and your friends so that I could perhaps help you a little more?

Her idea of kindness were sadly misplaced

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been going steady with a fellow since he was discharged from service in the Fall of 1945. The first year he was home he started drinking heavy. He took sick and was bedridden for nine months. I saw him every night, bringing down his liquor to him at his house because he said he needed something to calm his nerves. Although he has been up and around he has never worked and has continued drinking heavily. All these years I have been buying him spending money so he could go out with the boys and become I didn't want anyone to think he was a bar fly or a bum.

Now I am sick myself, and have lost my job and am down to my last dollar. I can't give him any more money and he now depends on his 60-year-old mother who works nights in a building. He tells me he is going to work and stop drinking, but he always gives the excuse that he can't get the work he wants or someone is always buying him a drink. He is always telling me he loves me very much and not to worry, as each day will take care of itself. I have about given up hope. He is 27 and I am 22.

"A Loving Fool"

Dear "Loving Fool":

I am afraid you have given yourself the name that exactly describes you. For over three years you have been doing the best you possibly could do for this chap, through mistaken ideas of kindness. You encouraged him in his drinking by bringing him liquor, and you have also encouraged his laziness by providing him with money.

If this young man is ever going to brace up and make anything of himself, which I am afraid seems unlikely, you had better make him understand that you don't intend to have anything to do with him while he goes around spending on people. My advice to you, however, is to put an end to this unfortunate relationship entirely, as I feel sure he will never bring you anything but unhappiness.

PREVENTION OF CANCER

Cancer Can Strike Anyone—But YOU Can Strike Back

GIVE GENEROUSLY TO CONQUER CANCER

APRIL 1st to APRIL 30th

To the Citizens of Belleville:

The Canadian Cancer Society are appealing for funds to carry on the fight against Cancer and I would respectfully urge that you give this appeal your generous support.

$500,000 is required from the Province of Ontario to carry on research, treatment, education, facilities and service to cancer patients. Belleville should give its share.

Purposes For Which Funds Are Required

RESEARCH: The promotion of research in Canada into the cause and cure of Cancer, To provide fellowships to enable qualified workers to carry on research.

EDUCATION: The educational program of the Canadian Cancer Society is designed to make all adults familiar with the early symptoms of those forms of cancer which can be successfully treated. By making cancer information available to all, a person making a contribution and becoming a member of the Society, may be instrumental in saving the life of a loved one, a friend, or even himself. Money is needed to provide literature, films, displays, advertising, etc.

SERVICE: The service program of the Society is designed to ease the burden of the cancer patient by providing, either directly or through co-operation of existing agencies, the following services: cancer dressings, local transportation services, sick room supplies, rehabilitation, occupational therapy and comforts.

THE NEED: Many cancer victims can be saved if cancer symptoms are recognized and treated in the early stages. More than 15,000 Canadians died of cancer last year, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. As a cause of death in Canada, cancer is second only to disease of the heart and blood vessels.

No Door to Door Canvass is Planned for Belleville.

GOOD MANNERS

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

A June bridegroom seeks wedding etiquette

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. I am the bridegroom-to-be in a wedding to be held in June, in a city in southern Florida. It is to be a church wedding, at 4 o'clock on Sunday afternoon. The bride will wear a long white dress and wedding veil. Which is correct attire for me: white coat and dark trousers, or a business suit?

2. And I am also in doubt about the flowers. Is it my responsibility, or the responsibility of the bride's parents to attend to the floral decorations of the church? I am planning to send the bride's flowers, but should I also furnish the flowers for the bridesmaids, the bride's mother and for my mother?

S. H.

1. If your bride considers your day-time wedding a semi-formal wedding, you might very correctly wear an Oxford grey jacket, dark striped trousers, appropriate accessories. But if she plans to have all the frills more on the side of informality, you may wear, for your Summer wedding in the South, a jacket of navy blue with white flannel trousers, or a tan gabardine suit, or a white suit. Or, for a very informal wedding, a business suit.

2. The bride's family plan and pay for the floral decorations of the church. You send a corsage to your mother, and to the bride's mother. The bride's family usually augment the flowers for the bride's attendants.

A "paper shower" . . . . inexpensive, practical, decorative gifts

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have a special shower-problem. . . will you help me, please? I have been appointed to make arrangements for a shower for Sunday School teacher who is to be married in June. Our Sunday School class is composed of 18 girls, from 16 to 19 years of age, and our teacher who is to be married is in her middle twenties. Our budgets are very limited, but we are devoted to this teacher that we would like to give her a nice shower, but it must be an inexpensive one. What is your suggestion?

Miriam W.

I suggest a Paper Shower. The gifts for this shower can be most decorative and charming, very inexpensive, practical, and most welcome incidental equipment for the new home. Suggestions: shelf-papers and decorative edgings for shelves; paper doilies (particularly beautiful these days), in all sizes and in many designs; paper napkins, in lovely designs, wide range of colors (though white, I think, is best). convenient sizes; place-mats and tray doilies; bridge sets (invitations, tally cards, score pads); white place cards, with plain edges or silver or gilt edges; writing cards; paper and pencil equipment lamp shades; scrap books; nests of boxes for linens or dresser drawers; decorative wrapping paper for several occasions (birthday, Christmas, Easter, Valentine's Day, and/or for general gift-wrapping); pictures; decorative paper boxes; waste baskets for box of cards, with plain paper towels and holder, for kitchen use; boxes of small guest towels (unusually attractive designs in these today); group of "Remember" cards or telephone pads; boxes of small memorandum books, for purse; shopping or marketing lists, to be hung in kitchen; boxes for stamps, pins, bobby-pins, and so forth; engagement pad; box of tags in various sizes, stickers; leather container of labels printed with guest of honor's new name and address; boxes of small, decorative double-sheeted note-papers; attractive letter-file; post-cards printed with guest of honor's name and address. An excellent joint gift might be a large box of generous sized cards to be used for filing recipes (the recipe either to be written on or typed on or pasted on).

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Here are some toothcare Hints

Beautiful teeth, perfectly formed and snow white, are a dazzling contribution to good looks. Dental science has stepped along so rapidly in the last few decades that there is no reason—if the balance in the checkbook permits —why anyone should have unseen, broken or discolored teeth.

Since digestion begins in the mouth and the vitality of the body is dependent upon nutrition, it is important that the teeth should be in condition to function normally and with comfort. Daily care, of course, is essential, but it should be a hard and fast rule that there should be two pilgrimages a year to the dentist's office.

Before cleaning and polishing the teeth the dentist will make a careful examination to see if caries are present. He will remove tartar. Tartar consists of phosphate of lime that is deposited by the saliva. It banks up under the gums, causing them to recede, and causes pockets and infections. It may form despite the most careful brushing, and can be removed only by instruments.

Be sure when selecting a toothbrush. The bristles should be of medium firmness, set in groups so that the brush can be kept clean. Have two, so that one will always be free of moisture before it is used.

When brushing the teeth, groom the inner surfaces as well as the outer ones. Sweep the bristles along the sides. Do not neglect the biting surfaces, for here is where caries appear first of all, as a rule. Never force the bristles against the gum; place them gently against the membranes, sweep to the end of the teeth with a rolling motion. Remember, it isn't enough to remove particles of food the grooming should continue until the teeth are polished.

Follow along with a mouth wash to swish away particles of food that the brush has dislodged.

If the teeth are not close together and foreign substance clings between them, use dental floss, being careful not to saw into the flesh. Any open wound is liable to infection, and infection means pain and trouble.

When teeth decay despite daily care, it is possible that some food element may be lacking. Specialists do not agree on suggestion of diet having an effect on the teeth, except that all have an idea that calcium is helpful. Calcium is found in milk. Children should have a quart a day, adults a pint. Vitamin C is supposed to strengthen the teeth. This vitamin is found in milk, orange juice, lettuce and eggs.

But don't forget the semi-yearly visit to the dentist! That is most important. You'll save money and pain.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE H. CARVER, Sports Editor

No layman who wonders just what components go to make up Serve from rolling a ball five inches in diameter over a level surface sufficiently far to knock the bowling pins out of a similar white ball or another like the one they are rolling, or probably very few have bothered to analyze the game that like baseball, horse racing and wrestling one of the most primitive of games.

As a matter of fact, long before Nero twanged his Roman violin even as Rome became the hotbed of bowling, people were playing a game similar to the forerunner of present day lawn bowling. Historians claim, that it was played some 5,000 to 6,000 years ago in the neighborhood of the pyramids of Moo, when the Alley Cops, King Wurs, Prince Peekaboo-Boo, indulged in the sport when not grazing their Dodos into rock-ribbed caves by their permanents.

It started its long and honorable career when a wealthy prehistoric Joe, tiring of Dinosauric races, and spearing a ten-ton Hamish and Thery-Scrith for supper, began to fix round pebbels at a stationary object. It may have been the great forbear of street observers, and, at that, he may even be the patron saint and by the time it got to the Roman Caesars, it was called "Bocche" by which it is still known in some parts of Italy.

The present game of lawn bowling however actually originated in England and Scotland and was once called "bowls". The hardy little Scots, who had yet to be conversed to "civvies" and the rocky Highlands too hard on the shins of the Highland fling variety, began to ply their crude pebbels at a stationary object. It may have been the great forbear of street observers, and, at that, he may even be the patron saint and by the time it got to the Roman Caesars, it was called "Bocche" by which it is still known in some parts of Italy.

Bowles as a sport in England has been praised more, and condemned more than perhaps any game ever played. It was declared by those who profited by it; condemned by those who regarded it as a "vicious form of gambling." Things came to such a pass that King Henry the Eighth, between marriages, and the logging off of his royal spouses, issued an edict in 1511 in which he declared that "the game of bowles is an evil because the alleys are operated in conjunction with saloons, or dissolute places, and because the game has ceased to be a sport and rather a form of vicious gambling."

King Hank's edict against bowling was continued by succeeding rulers and actually was not lifted until 1845. However more and more people saw any great effort to crush out the game, the chief reason being that almost every English monarch was a bowler and royal celebs were equipped with grooves.

King James I in 1618 recommended the game to his son King Charles 1st. Good King Chuck, it appears was a good bowler, and often laid numerous guineas on his own ability. His vis-a-vis was Sir Edward Sheris, a merchant, who owned a green on Barking Hill, and the backs of the day state that Charles at one time dropped 1,500 shekels approximately $4,500 in our money) probably the origin of "Shutting the Works."

Bowlers of Bonny Scotland, however took the game much closer to heart than did their neighbors to the south. It was the Scots who named and to the kilties goes the credit for honoring on many of the rules and standardizing play. This was done gradually through three centuries and in 1848 60, the Grand Caledonian Bowling Club was founded by W. W. Mitchell (1802-1886) one of the greatest bowls authorities that ever lived, framed the laws which, almost in their every detail, . . .

Under Reserve Clause Ball Player is Property of Club

By TED SMITH

New York, April 3 — (AP) — What's all this fuss about baseball's reserve clause?

The curious legal expert asks the question and then says solemnly:

A thing like that must have been settled in the courts long ago. That's what courts are for.

But has it? The answer is: "Maybe yes, maybe no."

No clearcut precedent ever has been set on the reserve clause because no case based on it ever has been decided by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The clause means that a baseball player is virtually the private property of the club that first signs him. Baseball says it cannot operate without it.

Danny Gardella, a former New York Giant, was banned for five years for playing in the Mexican league in 1946 although he had not been signed by the Giants for that year. Now he wants $300,000 damages for losing out on his means of earning a living. His suit is aimed at the reserve clause.

His counsel, Frederic A. Johnson, long has been a student of baseball law. Two years ago he published an article in the United States Law Review covering the game's famous cases.

Management Won Out

Two stand out. Baseball management won both the case against the famous star, Napoleon Lajoie, who left the National League for the American League in 1901, and the damage case brought by the Baltimore Club of the Federal League.

But these victories only illustrate the legal fog that surrounds the reserve clause. Lajoie went right on playing in the American League. He just wasn't allowed to play in Philadelphia, where the injunction was obtained, until the two big leagues reached a working agreement.

And in the Federal League case which the United States Supreme Court decided in 1922, George Wharton Pepper, lawyer for organized baseball, argued that the reserve clause was not enforceable and only an honorary obligation.

Lajoie, of the National League Phillies, one of the greatest of all second basemen, was sued to prevent him signing with the upstart American League.

St. Paul Saints Two Games Ahead Over Tulsa Oilers

Tulsa, Okla., April 3 — (AP) — St. Paul took a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven series of the United States Hockey League championship playoffs Thursday with an overtime period goal, winning 3-2.

The sudden death tally, scored by Bing Juckes, St. Paul wing-man, was vociferously protested by the Oiler club owners who swarmed around Referee Harry Ornest. Tulsa claimed Juckes pushed the puck by goalie Frankie Little with his hand.

Capt. Nick Knott of Tulsa tied the game up with a goal mid-way of the third period after the Saints had counted three times in the second to overcome an early 3-0 Oiler lead.

Tulsa's lack of reserves counted against them. They opened fast but were unable to maintain the pace set later by St. Paul.

Calgary Buffaloes Touted to Win Memorial Cup

(By The Canadian Press)

The championship fever has hit Calgary again.

Two winters ago Calgarians slimed their hopes on Stampeders bringing home the Allan Cup, emblematic of Canadian senior hockey supremacy. Stamps did just that.

Last summer the football edition of the Stampeders was hailed as the team that could win the Grey Cup. Again the team bearing Calgary colors came through.

Now Calgarians have their sights on the Memorial Cup, symbolic of the junior hockey championship of Canada. Calgary Buffaloes are the team they expect will take the sought-after ring.

The Buffalo boosters are finding plenty of support in the west. One reason is that Buffaloes had things fairly well their own way in the Western Junior Hockey League all season. They entered league play in a top-place tie with Moose Jaw Canucks, then walloped Canucks without undue trouble in the loop final.

In the series for the Alberta provincial crown Buffs came through in convincing fashion against Edmonton Athletic Club. Now they appear headed for the western Canadian final, leading Moose Jaw Canucks—the same team they defeated in league play—2-1 in their current interprovincial series.

General Manager Frank Selke of Montreal Canadiens said Thursday the National Hockey League Club will undergo some "reorganization" next season but emphasized that the changes would not be as sweeping as reported. Selke said he would try to close a few deals with the other N.H.L. clubs but added: "I know they won't give up their top players, and we don't want to give up ours either."

Disqualification of the St. Catharines Legionaires from Ontario Basketball Association playoffs was announced Thursday by Dick Lecrin, association president. The intermediate 'A' title for southern Ontario thus goes to Brantford Grads who were beaten by St. Catharines in the finals 89-83.

The disqualification was made because the Legionaires used Dick Farley, former University of Western Ontario star and present rugby and football coach at Ridley College St. Catharines. Grads now play Sault Ste. Marie Northern Ontario champions, in a two game series at Brantford tonight and Saturday.

At Regina A. W. Pickard, president of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, said the C.A.H.A. would back the Toronto Maple Leafs in their contract dispute with 17-year-old Danny Lewicki of Fort William.

"They can't suspend him from amateur hockey, however," he said. "He is our player until he signs a full professional contract.

Conn Smythe, president of the Maple Leafs said earlier this week that Lewicki had signed an N.H.L. "C" contract with Leafs shortly after his 16th birthday. would line up next season with one of Leafs' pro or amateur clubs or "he won't play at all."

Training Camp Notes

(By The Associated Press)

Trade talk continues between New York Giants and Brooklyn Dodgers.

Manager Leo Durocher stayed behind, when the Dodgers went on an exhibition tour, to confer with Branch Rickey, president of the Dodgers. Durocher is understood to be still seeking one or two utility infielders and a pitcher or an extra bats plus some second-string Giant material.

New York Yankees have a new candidate for their muddled first-base situation. Bill Johnson, their veteran third-baseman.

our pitching looks good, our outfield is vastly improved and our infield is more solid," Kuhel declared. "It's just a much improved club.

Hurler Phil Marchildon of Penetanguishene who had a poor season last year because of chronic influenza, went the distance yesterday against Birmingham Barons of the Southern Association. Marchildon allowed eight hits and fanned five as the A's won, 10-3.

Jack Onslow, Chicago White Sox manager, has indicated he may switch second-baseman Don Kolloway to first if neither Steve Souchok nor Gordon Goldsberry

Jorge Pasquel's damage claims against Mickey Owen, and awarded the former Brooklyn catcher $51,428 in unpaid salary.

The former president of the Mexican League had asked $127,500 damages against Owen, who has been barred from Organized baseball in the United States for jumping to the Chili circuit in 1946.

The amount was awarded represents the unpaid portion of his salary for 1946 and his complete salary for 1947, 1948 and 1949.

Phil Marchildon of Penetanguishene, Ont., went the distance pitching Philadelphia Athletics to a 10-3 victory over Birmingham of the Southern Association in an exhibition game at Birmingham, Ala., Thursday.

Marchildon, one the Athletics' top hurlers, yielded eight hits.

SMALLEST COW IN WORLD

Everett, Wash., April 8 (AP)—A midget cow here is claimed by its owner as the "smallest full grown cow in the world." She is three feet long and two feet high. A veterinarian said the 90-pound cow is between two and three years old.

ACCIDENTALLY HANGS SELF

Norwalk, Conn., April 8 (AP)—Nine-year-old Ronald Seif, playing with a rope in a tree here yesterday, accidentally hanged himself. His mother, Mrs. Harold Seif, cut the boy from the tree and tried to carry him in her arms to their home. Unable to do so after carrying him two blocks, she screamed for help and police arrived with an inhalator. They were unable to revive the boy.

BY SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

There are two sides to a bridge question. And both sides may be right. One may be righter than the other, depending on what is used as a basis. Or which side of the fence is preferred.

You can get a lot of argument out of a pair of partnership hands like these:

SOUTH
♠Q J 10 9 8 7
♥A 6 3
♦A K 9 4
♣None

NORTH
♠A 3 2
♥K Q 4
♦Q 6 5 3
♣K 4 3

South has a rebiddable spade suit and a biddable diamond suit. He opens, of course, with a bid of one spade. If it was anything else, somebody is nuts.

Some players will ignore every sound bidding principle to keep the bidding low. Such might open with a diamond, keeping the bidding low is a good idea. But not at the sacrifice of better information.

When it comes to the immediate response by north, let me out of here. Most players would prefer a jump to two no-trump. My choice is for a one-jump assist to three spades.

An immediate one-jump response of two no-trump is not wrong. It is correct so far as sufficient values is concerned. The values are there in Horse Sense or any other system.

An opener of one in a suit promises five suit tricks of which four are high cards. (No-trump tricks). With five of his own, north can see nine no-trump tricks; enough for game that a jump promises.

On the other hand, bids follow the order of choice in T-A-N; takeout, assist, no-trump. An assist comes before no-trump in this order of preference. So no-trump denies an assist.

Thus, having adequate support, north should first assist. With five tricks of his own, he sees ten; enough for game in spades. With two sures tricks also, the jump should be at once.

Yes, either two no-trump or three spades is correct. But three spades is righter. It includes sticking to rules. The concept of the righter is just a little righter.

The Movie Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, April 8 (AP)—After living here several months, James Mason finds Hollywood filled with frustrations, "but not uninhabitable."

The free-talking Briton was booed by Hollywoodians last year for panning the town without having seen it. He was penned in magazine article lambasting the movie capital in rugged terms.

Later he came to Hollywood and has been earning a fabulous salary. So I sought him out on "The Blank Wall" set to see if his ideas about the town had changed. They hadn't.

"I wrote that article on hearsay," Mason declared. "Since coming here, I found that most of the things I had heard were true. But I think Hollywood is not uninhabitable because of them."

Mason claims the picture business is run by a group of moneymen and the creative artist has little freedom.

Concerning the latter, Mason was recently talking to a gifted writer-director. "How can you do the things you want to do and still work for the big studios?" Mason asked.

"Why," answered the film maker, "when we play golf, we like to have bunkers and sand traps for hazards. It wouldn't be any fun to drive down a smooth fairway. It's the same thing in making pictures. The studios provide the hazards."

Frustrating or not, Mason appears to be settling in Hollywood. He has bought a house and reports that some of his land can be subdivided in 1950. See—he's talking like a native already.

From a money view, there's little reason why Mason shouldn't remain. He admitted to earning $50,000 for playing half a half of acting on "Madame Bovary," plus a half-day's narration. That's about $60 a minute.

However, his average is due for a fall. He has to report for another half-day of narration.

TENDER FOR GODERICH ARENA

Goderich, Ont., April 8 — (CP) — The Goderich Arena committee Wednesday accepted the tender of the N. G. Nigel Construction Company of Preston of $158,500, for the erection of a new artificial ice arena.

INQUEST RULED UNNECESSARY

Windsor, Ont., April 8 (CP) — Following a written request by the Windsor Star for an inquest, Crown Attorney E. C. Awrey has ruled one unnecessary in the death of Alan Gilbert, fatally injured in an accident involving a truck belonging to the newspaper.

AT THE CAPITOL—Broderick Crawford, Barry Sullivan, John Kellogg and Guinn Williams watch Fortunio Bonanova prepare dynamite for a holdup in King Bros.' Allied Artists outdoor drama, "Bad Men of Tombstone," now at the Capitol Theatre today and Tuesday. On the same program, "Sofia" City of Intrigue in Chinese color, starring Gene Raymond, Sigrid Aurie, Patricia Morrison and Micha Auer. Both hits are first city run. Continuous show Saturday from 1.00 p.m.

Answer to Yesterday's Puzzle:

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop felt more like staying home than going to Mr. and Mrs. Hewr's house to play bridge, being the same way he generally feels, and he was waiting for me to tell him it was time to go.

Which he did, saying, Are you ready, William? and pop said, I'm ready finnially, but mesalf I have a sort of a presentiment that maybe it would be wiser to stay home.

Now William, you know we have an engagement, a serious engagement to play bridge, ma said, and pop said, I realize that, my dear, but I keep thinking.

Then save your thinking for your bridge, and it may brighten up your usual lack luster bidding, ma said. What is it you keep thinking of, for land sakes? she said, and pop said, I keep thinking of Maud Hewr and the bitter fingered way she handles her cards.

Well yes, they do keep slipping around in her hands as though they'd been especially soaped, ma said. But why should that effect you so strangely? You have your own cards to think of, she said, and pop said, But I may have Maud Hewr's cards at the moment. Suppose a cupple of her cards get entirely away from her and fall under the table, near my feet? he said.

Suppose they even fell rite on your feet, what then? ma said, and pop said, Then I'd be in a serious social predicksment. If I stooped down to pick them up for her, and they had fallen face upwerds, I'd be accused of sneaking a look at my opponent's cards, and if I let her do her own stooping, I'd be accused of not being a gentleman. Maybe we better write to the etiquette collum in the paper before we play with the Hewr's again, he said.

Oh, I mite of known and now I know, ma said. You're just looking for a trumped up excuse, she said.

Which he was, proving it by laffing all a ways to the front door, and making him feel at least partly better.

Sunday School Lesson of the Week

Gifts That Cannot be Given

By ROY L. SMITH

All the world, including the Jews, suffered under the extortionate rule of the Roman "Caesar." The tax burden was adjusted at the last point of possible endurance. Jesus himself was born at a time when a census of all the world was being taken for the purpose of determining to the last penny how much might be squeezed out of the subject peoples.

Among the Jews there was a vast restlessness. At least one political party among them—the Zealots—operated on just one principle. They were determined to embarrass the Empire in every way possible, and they deemed it both a religious and a patriotic crime to cooperate with the Romans in any way possible. The Sadducees, on the other hand, were the appeasers. They were determined to get along with their overlords somehow.

Jesus Stirred Men's Hopes

Every individual who appeared among the Jews with any power to attract a crowd was sure to be weighed and watched as a possible leader. Jesus of Nazareth was able to deliver the people. The hope of throwing off the Roman yoke was the strongest political principle operating among them.

The mystery is that Jesus preached to vast throngs raised the suspicions of the minds of the authorities that He might be another wild fanatic, of whom there had been more than a score, who was scheming a revolution and signed on for death. Admittedly, as such, He would have been a dangerous leader. He had a great power with the multitudes.

The expectation that such a deliverer would arise and lead the people in a divinely empowered and inspiring adventure was one of the great doctrines of Jewish religion, and when patriotism and religion join hands there is little that can stand against them.

The Disciples Hoped

From this lesson it is very evident that this expectation of a bold move to take over the government was a part of the confidence the disciples had in Jesus. In fact, they could not think of Him working in any other way.

We must remember that the little band of disciples had thrown everything they had into the movement which Jesus was heading. They would have been less than human if they had not, at least occasionally, given some thought to the question: "What will we get out of this?" And today's lesson describes what happened when two of them solicited places for some special place, commission, honor, or office in the new kingdom of which He did considerable talking.

Life Must be Earned

In answering the two disciples who solicited favors, in chumship Jesus laid down a fundamental principle of life. "There are some things" He seemed to say, "which cannot possibly be given. They must be earned."

The Sunday School lesson for April 10: "Jesus' Person Ministry," Mark 10.

Most of the really beautiful things of life come to us as the result of struggle. No man, for instance, is born noble. He has to achieve nobility. Few of us are born with courage. We have to develop courage.

Henry Ward Beecher used to tell the story of a woman who prayed very earnestly that God would make her patient. Then one day He sent her a stupid servant girl and she had to become patient.

Life is like that. It was never planned as a rest from all cares. Instead, it was designed as an experience through which men and women might pass, in the course of which they might discover great characters or they would go down under the strain.

The best of life's gifts cannot be given; they must be earned.

Patience, scholarship, sincerity, nobility, good humor, honor, worthiness, accuracy, dependability—the list lengthens, of those things which have to be achieved.

No man can give his son character, but he can guide him in his attitude toward life so that he may achieve character.

A father may leave great property to his son, but he cannot bequeath to him vision and wisdom.

Elbert Hubbard once said: "You can send your son to college, but you cannot make him think." The ability to wrestle with a great problem until it surrenders has been given to all of us. But each of us must furnish the willingness to wrestle.

Life is plentifully supplied with cups for those who have the courage to drink them to the dregs for the sake of the dividends.

TOURISTS . . . . . .

The Tourist and Publicity Committee of the Chamber of Commerce is spearheading a movement to form a tourist operators' association to strengthen our tourist industry to maintain the high standards of our tourist resorts—to advocate improvements where necessary — to publicize in the most effective way the attractions of the Highlands of Hastings—to organize the tourist operators into a strong and vital force for the betterment of all.

The first phase of this effort culminated in the making of final arrangements for an organizational meeting to be held in Bancroft on May 3rd. The Hon. L. P. Cecile, Minister of Travel and Publicity will be the guest speaker at this meeting. The Belleville Chamber of Commerce is ever conscious of the value and importance of the tourist industry to the people of Belleville and the surrounding districts.

WE'LL MEET AGAIN

By Margaret Gorman Nichols

"Begin to work tomorrow, Miss Anders, will you introduce Miss Van Avery to the other models?" He held up a cautious finger. "I warn you not to make scenes with the other girls. Don't make them your enemies."

When she and Penny went out, she heard Marchand's dry, chuckling laugh — a note of triumph in it.

Penny opened the door of a long room. It reminded Gay of a theatre dressing room with its various dressing tables, negligees here and there, and dresses to be modeled.

Four girls looked at her critically. She heard Penny say their names but she was too confused to remember them. Gay said, "I'm very glad to know you." But their eyes were hostile.

Penny touched her sleeve and said, "Let's go, Gay."

In the store the salesmowen avoided her and stared. Before today they would have bowed and brought out every gown in the shop for her!

Penny said, "It was pretty horrible."

Gay pulled her mouth into a grateful smile. "Well, you'll be here, Penny. I won't feel so utterly lost. Good-bye — and thank you."

The sunlight blinded her when she was on the street and she felt weak from pent-up anger and humiliato nl.Sheyai humiliation. She looked up when a man put himself in her way.

It was Chris who hated himself for coming and who had been unable to work all morning thinking of Gay's facing Marchand and asking for a position. Poor kid, he thought, poor frightened, bewildered kid forced to grow up too suddenly, forced to swallow her pride.

Chris grinned. "I was thinking of lunch. I'm always hungry, you know. Come and eat with me, Gay."

"I could drink. My throat feels parched."

In the restaurant he saw that her hand was shaking when she picked up a glass of water.

"You had a bad time, didn't you?"

"Chris, I'm afraid of tomorrow and the other tomorrows there-after. I left him, Marchand, the models resenting and hating me, and there's brave-and-fine-looks my heart."

"And Alan," said Chris.

She could not tell Chris of Alan, could not think of him without that fight, aching feeling in her throat. But as they sat eating and she looked at Chris' dark eyes and his unruly black hair, she felt curiously safe with him. She had to play in public, but with Chris as she had played with Alan. With Chris you could be, miraculously, yourself.

As he leaned back and lighted a cigarette, she said, "Tell me about yourself, Chris. Who are you really?"

He toyed with the ash tray, "I landed in New York with prairie mud on my shoes. I haven't any people. My father was a clergyman. I've had to fight for everything I have. I has to work my way through college by waiting on tables and acting in the Negistrar's office. I'm just another newspaper man who is going to write a play one of these days when I get the time." He frowned through the smoke. "Don't let Marchand break your spirit, Gay. Don't let him know what it is costing you to work zur mm."

"I can't help it."

"When I was in college, I wanted to play football. More than anything else on earth I wanted to play football. But I couldn't. I had to work in the afternoon. When I'd hear the fellows who played talking football in the fraternity house, I felt — well, I felt as you do now. It hurt. I can laugh at it now. But it was awfully serious to me then. I never let them know how much I wanted to play."

She looked at him. "You're a surprising person, Chris. There's so much kindness beneath the hard top layer."

She smiled faintly. "What do you want from life, Chris? I'm walking in circles. Everything is scattered and squandered. My roots have been torn up. What do you want?"

When she spoke softly, he wanted to be a fool over her. He wanted to take her hands and say in accompaniment to the music, "I want you. I'm so much in love with you. I love everything about you, Gay."

His voice came from depths when he spoke.

"I don't want to be important," he said. "I don't want possessions. But I don't want to miss anything. I want to see and feel and experience."

He walked a little way with her. It was strange with Chris beside her, very tall, with his battered old hat pulled over his eyes, that she wasn't so afraid. And she was conscious of the sun shining and people passing. It was a safe, dependent feeling. With Chris beside you, she thought, you felt that no matter what happened, you had just to look for him and, finding him, you knew that everything would be all right.

When she left him, she said, "If you'll give me your key, I'll take Sandy for a walk."

When she opened the door of the apartment, she saw Diana and Lucia. The confidence that being with Chris had given her snapped for a moment when she saw a ring, her own engagement ring, sparkling on Lucia's long, slim finger.

But she pulled up her head defiantly. Even the red curls flung a challenge.

"Congratulate me," said Gay. "I have a job! I'm going to model clothes for Marchand at twenty-five dollars a week plus commission when I show out-of-town buyers the night spots! Don't look so shocked, Mother!"

"Why don't you come and live with me?" Lucia asked.

Gay pulled off her hat and gloves. The gallant little speech about her job was to postpone Lucia's announcement of her engagement to Alan. She had been right in thinking that Alan would go back to Lucia and what had abruptly ended the night he had met her, Gay, would be taken up again.

Diana said, "I'll fix tea. Excuse me."

Lucia, in a new black suit, turned to Gay. What a horrible little hole they lived in! The apartment had a damp musty odor. Already Gay and Diana had altered. Poor Diana had a bit of court plaster on her burned hand and her nails were broken.

Gay felt estranged. Had they ever been friends?

"I want to be perfectly honest with you," Lucia said uneasily, "about Alan. He came to me for sympathy when you refused to marry him. A bond of sympathy has a way of bringing people together, you know. I was a good sport about him. I didn't let you know how deeply I was hurt when he dropped me for you. Last night he asked me to marry him. But I had to see you and tell you first. I don't want you to think I've done anything secretive or wrong, darling . . ."

What polite masks civilized people wore, Gay thought! Just as Marchand had laughed in her face, so was Lucia humiliating her with a terrible "niceness". Alan had spared himself with his usual suavity. It was not sympathy from Lucia he wanted. It was her mercy and the position in society that would be his as her husband.

"I hope you and Alan will be very happy," Gay said finally.

"I'm so glad you're taking it this way," Lucia said, relieved. "People ask for you everywhere I go. We all miss you so, darling. Of course, Alan and I won't be married for some time yet. You know Father. He insists upon a long engagement."

Diana brought in the tea. Conversation was stiff and formal with Lucia's affected little laugh breaking the awkward silences. Finally she pulled white gloves over the square enamel. Gave Diana and Gay a kiss on the forehead, and walked to the door. Her eyes were pitying toward mother and daughter. She would be glad when she was out of this room. Alan was waiting for her in the lobby of a hotel. They'll go somewhere for a cocktail and the girl Alan had loved would pass out of her mind completely.

"I'm giving a dance next Saturday," she said. "Please come, Gay. You, too, Diana. Every one will be so glad to see you."

When she left, Diana said, "You must not go, dear. They'll hurt you and snub you."

Gay turned around. "But I must go. Can't you see? I must make one more appearance among them! I must let them see I don't look wretched and frowzy."

"But you can't go alone."

"I'll get Chris to take me — if he will. You see, they think I'm willing my heart out for Alan. They don't think I have the courage to face them or to work."

Diana looked up timidly. "I did not tell you when Lucia was here, but this morning after you left I went job-hunting, too, Darling, I have a job, too! From ten to five every day I'm a hostess in a tea room for fifteen dollars a week! I couldn't be a burden to you, Gay! I had to do my bit, too. Somehow we've got to find a balance and squeeze out a little happiness and contentment with the little we have. We can't fight it. We've got to resign ourselves to being young, dear. There's romance and adventure ahead for you and you mustn't turn your back on it."

When Diana was preparing dinner, Gay went to Chris' apartment next door. Sandy yelped with gladness to see her, licking her hands.

Quick Action Urged on Germans In Forming Govt.

Unity of West May Aid In Settlement With Russia

By JAMES J. DEVLIN

Bonn, Germany, April 9—(AP) German leaders today were called upon to form a West German federal government quickly or "face catastrophe."

The appeal for quick action, following up the three-power Washington agreement on Germany, was made by Dr. Konrad Adenauer, president of the assembly drafting a constitution here.

The West-German political parties have been squabbling over small differences for months and this has held up the formation of a government.

The point at issue is whether major financial control should rest with the federal government, as favored by the Left-Wingers, or with the individual states of West Germany, as favored by the Western Allies and the Centrists.

Adenauer is a leader of the Christian Democratic Union. He attacked the Social Democrats for so far refusing to go along with the Left-Wing group.

Semi-Sovereignty Offered

In any event, the next step is up to Bonn, he said.

In effect, the Allies have handed before them the prize of a temporary semi-sovereign place in the family of western countries if they can get together on terms of a constitution and get going as a federal government.

The Germans would achieve full legislative, executive and judicial powers for themselves. Allied officials remaining in the country would not be much more than advisers. The western occupation armies would remain indefinitely, but under civilian top command.

Many leaders in the Bonn Constitutional Assembly hailed the offer as marked "a great step forward," and the anti-Communist press in the western zones took similar descriptions.

The Soviet-controlled press in the Russian zone attacked the offer in labored terms. One Soviet-zone paper headlined its story "Bonn Power Dictatorship proclaimed in Western Germany." But none of them tried to minimize the importance of the move.

Western-licensed papers generally gave the offer a friendly reception. The Socialist Telegraf said the Western Powers "have done all possible to support a democratic solution of the German problem."

It stressed that the West Germans, by accepting, would gain position to qualify for aid under the European Recovery Program and become an "equal member of the Community of European Peoples."

CONVICTED OF BURYING LOVER'S HUSBAND ALIVE

Rahway, N.J., April 9 — (AP) John Bridges, 21, was convicted Friday night of murdering his lover's husband by burying him alive. Bridges confessed he lured Joseph Kenny, 28, into the woods, struck him, over the head and buried him alive. He was sentenced to death.

HOUSE, SENATE ADJOURNED FOR EASTER RECESS

Will Convene Again On Monday, April 25

Ottawa, April 9 — (CP)—With both the Commons and the Senate adjourned for the Easter recess, parliamentary debates will be stilled for the next two weeks, until both chambers reconvene Monday, April 25.

The Commons rose Thursday night after adopting an agricultural marketing bill and giving second reading to another government measure to authorize the laying of oil and gas pipe lines from the Alberta oilfields to Winnipeg and Vancouver.

The Senate has been adjourned since Thursday evening.

In the Commons, both the agricultural and the pipe line bills received general approval in principle debate.

The farm bill, specifically, will authorize provincial producers boards to regulate the marketing for farm products in the domestic field and the export trade.

The pipe-line measure, already approved by the Upper House, lays the legislative framework for the proposed pipe lines and brings them under the Board of Transport Commissioners.

Prime Minister St. Laurent tabled the report of the Royal Commission on prices, with recommendations for government action to put living costs on an even keel and stabilize economic conditions.

He announced the establishment of the Royal Commission on national culture, foreshadowed in the speech from the throne, with Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey, Chancellor of the University of Toronto, as chairman.

Two Schoolgirls Cycling Home Killed by Car

Sturgeon Falls, April 9 (CP)—Two young Sturgeon Falls school girls, cycling home along the highway Friday night, were struck down and killed by a car which drove up behind them.

Dead are Christine Casey, 13-year-old daughter of Frank Casey, principal of Sturgeon Falls public school, and her friend, Denise Gaudfrold, 14, step-daughter of Constable Gaudfrold of Delaire.

They ran ahead of the car which hit them was Oscar Dinelle, well known Sturgeon Falls resident.

The accident occurred at 8 p.m. Friday, about two miles from the town on Highway 17. The two girls were cycling toward Sturgeon Falls and Dinella was also driving in the same direction.

It is understood the driver claims he did not see the two cyclists until he was on top of them. The elder girl's spine was killed instantly by the collision.

The younger girl was rushed to hospital in Sturgeon Falls, where she died one and a half hours later.

No charges have yet been laid.

'Canada-Approved' Flour Rejected By Canadians, Prefer White Bread

Ottawa, April 9 (CP) — "Canada approved" flour, an enriched product recommended as tops in vitamin content, is selling in the Dominion because Canadians prefer white bread.

Bakers have struggled because consumers generally prefer bread made from the white product of the modern mill, refined to a point that it loses natural vitamin content.

Bakers do not like it because it does not keep as well as ordinary flour.

Dr. H. H. Goulden, Dominion Cerealist, noted that, in the United States extra vitamins are introduced into all types of flour. Thus the consumer gets his food value no matter what kind of flour he buys.

This enriched or fortified flour is similar to that used in Newfoundland. It was credited in a recent American Nutritional Survey in that province as being partially responsible for the improved health of the Newfoundland population.

Since a section of the Food and Drugs Act regulations defining "enriched flour" is missing in the Dominion because Canadians prefer white bread.

Lodge Observes Education Night

"Education Night" was observed at the regular meeting of The Belleville Lodge A.F. & A.M. No. 123 on Thursday evening, when two members of the teaching staff of Belleville schools were initiated into the mysteries of masonry.

Members of the teaching staff were in various chairs with Wor. Bro. W. G. Anderson acting as Worshipful Master and being assisted by R. M. Bird, H. J. Clarke, E. Fairman, R. H. Mackiem, M. Hancock, C. Frederick, H. Bates, W. F. Coudale, Lee Morrison, M. Hackett, H. Darling, A. C. Wilkins, Milton Fowler, C. Heard and L. A. Kells.

Dr. C. A. Brown, Registrar for the Department of Education in Toronto, was the principal speaker, his subject being "The Objectives of Education." He stated the objectives to be: "To fit students to earn a living, to develop all-round sense and to be able to take their place in society." He spoke of the problems of teachers, parents, and commented on the changes that have taken place in education in the past 20 years.

The speaker was introduced by W. Bro. L. A. Kells and appreciation was expressed by W. Bro. Everett Fairman. The toast to the visitors was given by Br. Harold Mott and Rev. C. A. Perkins replied for the many visitors. Bro. W. T. Yeadon proposed the toast to the newly initiated candidates.

Administrator of Housing Screening Applications For Homes in Churchill Heights

Screening of some 175 applications placed by Belleville and district veterans for housing units at the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation being constructed in the Churchill Heights district, is now being undertaken by Allen Vanderwater, Trenton, housing administrator.

It is expected that approximately 100 of the houses which have recently been completed will be allocated by April 15th, with the remainder of the 102 houses to be allocated as soon as possible after street and services are ready.

Veterans who are allocated rental houses will be given ten days notice by the administrator.

With allocation of veterans' houses being strictly on a point system, the final decision is the responsibility of the administrator who is in charge of the local office of the corporation. All applications must go to Mr. Vanderwater.

In all cases houses are allocated only to veterans of World War No. 1, with each veteran's application being graded according to need, overseas service and other factors. There is no way which the Corporation can depart from the method of allocation.

It is specifically pointed out that allotting of houses is not done on a "first come, first serve" basis but on a fair assessment of all fact concerning each case.

Factors taken into consideration when assessing applicants are (a) overseas military service, length of such service, and wounds resulting in permanent disability, (b) number of children or other dependents, (c) present living accommodation or conditions, (d) financial responsibility (e) military service in Canada.

Ross Stiver of City Heads Southeastern Zone of Sea Cadet Committee For Ont.

Toronto, April 9 — (CP) —The Navy League, which fosters interest in the navy among Canadian boys and trains youth in the fundamentals of seamanship, is keeping up with the times.

Lieut.-Col. Leslie Verner, Toronto, president of the Navy League's Ontario Division, today told the division's annual meeting that the League is evolving new ideas and plans to meet changing conditions while seeking to ensure that "the maximum benefit will be derived by the maximum number of our Canadian youth."

One new activity is the awarding of scholarships to the joint Services College at Kingston.

The Ontario division also is helping to provide club and hostel facilities for men in the armed forces and is supporting services established by the Navy League for merchant navy personnel.

At least $300,000 is needed in 1949, half for operational expenses and the remainder capital, said H. A. Burgon, chairman of the management and finance committee.

E. B. McPherson of Toronto, chairman of the Ontario Sea Cadet Committee, said that in the last few months the province has been divided into zones. The zone chairmen are: Southwestern, G. Hudson Strickland, Windsor; Western Central, D. W. Cathers, Hamilton; Toronto area, J. L. Hand, Toronto; Central, O. J. Howe, Barrie, and James Preston, Stratford; Southeastern, R. G. Stiver, Belleville; Northern, W. G. Beaney, Sudbury.

Essay Contest Winners

H. N. Bawden of Toronto, chairman of the Ontario Sea Cadet camp committee, said members of the camp staff give basic naval training at the camps.

Names of Ontario winners in a national essay contest conducted by the Navy League in cooperation with the navy were announced. Subject of the competition was "Our Navy and Seaborne Trade in our Daily Life" and the contest was divided into two age groups: senior 14-18 years and junior 10-13.

Joan Cox, Falconbridge, won a senior silver medal in the senior competition and Shirley Lewis of Carson Mine a bronze medal.

Certificates of merit were awarded as follows:

Senior group — Grace F. Colton, North Bay; Maureen E. McCool, North Bay; Pamela M. Cunningham, North Bay.

Junior group — Dolores Davidson, Garson Mine; Allison Rowell, Sarnia.

Ont. Legislature Stands Adjourned 146 Bills Passed

Toronto, April 9 (CP) —Echoes of the stormiest debate in years still ringing in Ontario ears, members of the Ontario legislature Friday ended what dragged out to be a quiet, uneventful session.

The spring session of the 23rd legislature lasted eight weeks —two weeks longer than usual— and saw a 146 bills, the longest list since confederation.

Pre-session speculation was that the government would not introduce any major legislation since a new member of the Progressive Conservative party was to be chosen at the end of April.

A strengthened opposition, however, put up a stiff fight against the government's bill to limit coloring of margarine to a pale 1.6 degrees. The session reached a climax with introduction of a bill requiring charitible foundations such as the Atkinson Foundation, owners of the Toronto Daily Star and the Star Weekly, to dispose of all but 10 per cent of their interest in any business.

The bill described by opposition members as an attempt to "legislate a political opponent out of business" became law Friday when it received royal assent along with six other bill by Lieut. Governor Ray Lawson during prorogation.

Attorney General Blackwell amended the bill, increasing from three to seven years in which the bill's terms must be disposed of. The bill would allow the bill to become an election issue.

Wanted Color Raised

The margarine bill was opposed on the grounds that it made butter substitute "unpalatable" in appearance. The opposition urged that the color be raised to 2.5 degrees.

Premier Kennedy, who led the government during the last time as Premier, said in a farewell press conference that the agricultural minister of the province requesting a meeting to establish uniform rules for sale and manufacture of margarine across Canada. This meeting will most likely be held until an appeal to the Privy Council was heard on a Supreme Court of Canada decision that the Dominion government alone controls the sale and manufacture of margarine.

Pension Rate Raised

Earlier in the session the legislature passed a bill proposed by Education Minister Porter increasing teachers' superannuation rates and one by Health Minister Kelley setting up an automobile research foundation in Toronto.

As the house prorogued, still on the order paper were 16 opposition-bills and motions which will be allowed to die a natural death. Mr. Kennedy suggested a rule should be brought in allowing each opposition bill on hour's debate. If it was not passed in this time it would go to the bottom of the order paper.

Premier Mitch Lewis, clerk of the legislature, said the session had not established a record for long hours. In 1922 the session had lasted 1,000 hours one night sitting had lasted until 10 a.m. the following day—14 hours. There were 8 night sittings in the session just ended—the longest lasting until 3 a.m.

Hungary Rejects Charges, Makes Counter-Charges

Budapest, April 9. —(AP)— Hungary today rejected American and British charges that she has violated her human-rights treaty pledges, and levelled counter-charges of her own against the Allies.

The Hungarian said "there is grave discrimination among citizens of the United States and Great Britain, respectively, according to their race and color." The accusations were contained in notes handed to the American and British legations here.

The notes also said that according to the verdict of the Mixed Commission case the Minister of the United States and other officials of the United States legation co-operated with the conspirators who aimed to overthrow the republic."

The notes to both Britain and the United States concluded by accusing those countries of "endeavoring to interfere in the internal affairs of Hungary."

QUICK ACTION

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

Washington, April 9 — (AP)— Officials said today that unless there is a new three-power agreement on Germany, bringing the Western Powers into closer unity, the fear before, may improve chances for an eventful settlement with Russia.

It was announced announced Friday will result in the merger of the American, British and French zones of occupation in Western Germany, with the promise that military control — but not military occupation — will be dropped as soon as the Germans set up their own "federal republic."

The next move is up to Russia, which occupies Eastern Germany.

The agreement, announced Friday night by the Big Three Acheson and Foreign Secretaries Bevin and Schuman, climaxed a 10-day period of diplomatic activity which corresponded in length to Washington's history.

Besides breaking the long disagreement over the former enemy country, those 10 days brought the signing of the Anglo-Soviet treaty which President Truman plans to go to the Senate for ratification early next week — followed by requests from each member powers for American arms and dollars under the treaty.

The United States has been anxious to make Germany economically self-sufficient and a strong factor in European recovery, while France has been unwilling to make possible revival of German military power.

Under the agreement, establishment of a German government would be the final for planning occupation forces under the over-all control of western-power civilians.

The settlement was greeted with widespread approval in Western Germany, where the parliamentary council at Bonn had been snarled for weeks in efforts to draw up a new federal constitution.
